There is only one case directly in point on the question, but there are a long series of dicta which affirm a universal practice which has always been exercised in these cases as to the measure of damages. Such a constant practice really amounts to a rule of law. The rule is that where there is a lease with a covenant to leave premises in repair the measure of damages for the breach of such a covenant is the amount which the landlord proves to be fairly and reasonably necessary in order to put the premises into that state of repair in which he is entitled to have them. It is unnecessary now to say that that rule is absolute in all cases. I strongly incline to think that it is, and, if it were necessary to do so, I should say that it was. It is a highly convenient rule, and has been in constant practice, and it saves the vast expenses which would result if the inquiry were to be allowed to range over all sorts of matters in the manner now suggested. But at all events, unless something has taken place in the condition of the property which affects the relationship of the landlord and tenant, that is the ordinary rule for the ascertainment of damages in such cases. That is, in my opinion, absolutely clear. Now is there anything here which has so altered the condition of the premises as to affect the relationship of the plaintiff and defendant with regard to it? It is plain that there is nothing. The transactions between the plaintiff and a third party do not in any way affect that relationship. No estate passed to the third party during the continuance of the defendant's tenancy. He had only an interesse termini while that lasted, and he only got an estate in the premises after the relationship of the plaintiff and defendant as lessor and lessee had come to an end. When that relationship ceased it is admitted that the premises were out of repair. The case is, therefore, an ordinary one, and the defendant has nothing whatever to do with the transactions between the plaintiff and the third party, and they can in no way be taken into account in arriving at the damages. The plaintiff is entitled to act on the ordinary rule and to receive the £70 as the damages for the defendant's breach of covenant. Throughout all the years in which the relationship of landlord and tenant has existed no case can be found which contravenes this rule.

The case of Morgan v. Hardy, although not binding on us, is, as I have said, precisely in point, and Denman, J., there lays the rule down in plain terms after reviewing the authorities almost as elaborately as the judgment now before us. Then there is the case of Inderwick v. Leech, which, as we are told, was affirmed by this court on the authority of Rawlings v. Morgan. The principle there laid down was the same as that which appears from all the cases—namely, that unless something has taken place as regards the property itself during the tenancy, which alters the relationship of the landlord and tenant, the measure of damages for breach of a covenant to leave premises in repair is the amount which the repairs would cost. That seems to me a good, simple working rule and thoroughly intelligible, while, as to the rule laid down by the Divisional Court, with all deference to their careful and industrious judgment I must say that I cannot understand it, that it has never been heard of before, and that it seems to me to be entirely wrong. In my opinion, therefore, judgment must be entered for the plaintiff for £70.

FRY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It must be borne in mind that we are not now dealing with the case of an action brought before the end of the term, or one in which vis major, or act of God, can be set up as a defence. The inquiry is simply as to the measure of damages in the present case for not yielding the premises up in repair at the end of the term. In my judgment the ordinary rule which is laid down in Mayne on Damages, 4th ed., at p. 253, and which was adopted by my brother Denman in Morgan v. Hardy, applies here: "Where the action is brought upon the covenant to repair at the end of the term the damages are such a sum as will put the premises into the state of repair in which the tenant was bound to leave them." The same rule may be implied from the case of Davies v. Underwood, and from other cases. The rule appears to me to be both simple and convenient. The Divisional Court have said that the measure of damages in such a case is the diminution in the value of the plaintiff's estate if not exceeding the cost of the repairs. That involves at least two inquiries, and seems to me most complex and unfit for the determination of affairs as between man and man in a court of law.

Is there, then, in this case anything which renders the primâ facie application of the rule inapplicable? It is said that the agreement in 1887 between the plaintiff and Lewis has that effect. But how can that agreement affect the rights between the plaintiff and the defendant. The agreement was for a reversionary estate. It passed no estate at the time, but only an interesse termini. The lessor had the right to enter at the determination of the defendant's tenancy, and the moment he did so his right of action in respect of the defendant's breach of covenant accrued. That right of action therefore vested in the plaintiff before Lewis acquired any estate in the reversionary lease. Lewis's covenants to alter and rebuild were not performed at the time of the vesting of the plaintiff's right of action against the defendant. How, then, can those covenants affect the rights of the lessor and lessee, and how can a subsequent performance of them by Lewis deprive the lessor of damages a right to which vested in him before Lewis acquired any estate in the premises? I can find no authority for any such proposition. The damages must be ascertained at the time of the vesting of the cause of action in the plaintiff. There is nothing in the present case to rebut the ordinary rule, and the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the £70 which have been found to be necessary to put the premises into the state of repair in which the defendant was bound to leave them.

Judgment for the plaintiff for £70.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Baker & Nairne.

Solicitors for the defendant, Paul E. Vanderpump & Eve.

From Q. B. Div. April 29.

UNWIN v. HANSON. (a.)

Highway—Trees overhanging—Right of surveyor to lop, but not to top, trees—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 65.

By section 65 of the Highway Act, 1835, power is given to the surveyor, under certain conditions, "to prune and lop" trees adjoining the highway.

Held, that this gave him no right to "top" the trees by cutting off their tops, but only allowed him to cut off lateral branches.

Appeal from the decision of Pollock, B.

The action was brought by the owner of a number of trees adjoining the highway, to recover damages from the defendant, who was the assistant surveyor of parish highways, for unauthorized interference with the trees.

It appeared that by an order of the justices, under section 65 of the Highways Act, 1835, the defendant had been directed to "lop and top" the trees belonging to the plaintiff overhanging the highway. He had accordingly lopped the lateral branches of a number of trees, and had cut off the tops of two.

Pollock, B., gave judgment for the defendant.

The plaintiff appealed.

By the Highway Act, 1835, s. 65, power is given to the surveyor, under certain circumstances, to "prune and lop" trees growing in or near hedges or fences, and which appear to him to be prejudicial to the highway by excluding sun and wind from it.

Channell, Q.C., and Trevelyan, for the appellant.—The Act gives power to lop, but not to top trees. It cannot be said that lopping includes topping. The words are always used in different senses. By the Turnpike Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 126), s. 116, by which a similar power is given to the surveyor, the words used are "prune or lop the branches of trees," thus clearly excluding topping.

Kemp, Q.C., and Claude Plumptre, contrà.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—In this case the owner of some trees adjoining the highway brings an action against the surveyor for having done an unauthorized injury to his trees, in that he has cut off the tops of some of them, and not merely cut off branches overhanging the highway. The plaintiff contends that by the Act of Parliament the defendant had no right to do this. He certainly had no such right at common law. The defendant says that by statute he had a right to lop the trees for the purpose of admitting light and air to the highway, and that although he has cut off the tops of some of those trees, he was entitled to do so, since he had power to lop them. The simple question, therefore, is whether the right to lop given by the Act includes the right to top the trees. When Acts of Parliament have to deal with general matters affecting everyone, they use ordinary language in its ordinary sense, but when they have to deal with particular businesses or transactions in which certain words have a well-understood special meaning, then if they use those words they must be taken to use them in that well-understood and special sense. Here is an Act dealing with the cutting back of trees, and the terms to lop and to top are well known and well understood as having perfectly different meanings by all persons who have to do with the cutting back of trees. It would, I think, be mere pedantry in us to assume not to know this, but even if we were ignorant there was abundant evidence at the trial that lopping referred only to the branches, while topping meant taking off the head of the tree. The Act speaks of lopping, and does not authorize topping, and therefore, in my opinion, the defendant exceeded his authority when he cut off the tops of two of the trees. I am strengthened in this opinion by referring to the Turnpike Act, 1822, which in a similar section speaks of "lopping the branches." That clearly would not authorize topping, and so, if we were to hold that lopping in the Act before us included topping, we should have the absurd result that trees adjoining highways might be topped, while trees adjoining turnpikes might only be lopped. The appeal must, therefore, be allowed.

FRY, L.J.—I take the same view. It is impossible, I think, even in ordinary language to say that lopping includes topping. But if the words have a merely technical meaning there is abundant evidence to show that it does not. It is no doubt true that in some cases the highway might be damaged by the overhanging top of a tree, but those cases would be of rare occurrence, and in my opinion the Legislature, by using the word lop in the Act and abstaining from using the word top, intended to give the surveyor the authority only to lop and not to top overhanging trees. The words are so closely connected together, both in arboriculture and in the drafting of deeds, that it is impossible to use one without thinking of the other.

(a.) Reported by A. P. PERCEVAL KEEP, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

LOPES, L.J.—The Act of Parliament relates to country matters, and is to be administered by country justices. Having regard to the object to which the Act relates, we must interpret the word lop in the manner in which it is always interpreted in country life, that is, as not including "top." The words are perfectly distinct, and are used in quite different senses. I agree that this appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Godfrey Pownall.

Solicitor for the defendant, A. L. Houlder.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Chitty, J. } June 9.

In re SCHWEDER'S ESTATE.
OPPENHEIM v. SCHWEDER. (a.)

Will—Legacy to wife—Priority.

Pecuniary legacy to the testator's wife, to be paid to her within three calendar months after the testator's decease, to enable her to provide and furnish a suitable house and to defray any other expenses.

Held, that the legacy to the wife had no priority over the other legacies, but was liable to abate with them on the estate proving insufficient for payment in full.

Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. sen. 420, followed.

In re Hardy, Wells v. Borwick, 29 W. R. 834, 17 Ch. D. 798, dissented from.

Adjourned summons.

By will, dated November, 1889, Edward Schweder gave his wife certain jewellery, furniture, ornaments, and plate, and also "the sum of £600 to enable her to provide and furnish a suitable house and to defray any other expenses, such pecuniary legacy to be paid to my said wife within three calendar months after my decease, and to be for her own absolute use and benefit." The testator gave other legacies and annuities, and with regard to the latter he gave certain directions as to priority inter se, and, if need be, abatement in consequence.

The testator died in 1890. His personal estate was insufficient to pay the legacies and annuities in full.

An originating summons was taken out by the executors and trustees against the widow and beneficiaries for the determination, among other questions, whether the legacy to the widow had priority over the other legacies.

Whitehorne, Q.C., and Prior, for the executors and trustees.

Byrne, Q.C., and Ingle Joyce, for the widow.—We rely on In re Hardy, Wells v. Borwick, 29 W. R. 834, 17 Ch. D. 798.

Farwell, Q.C., and Swinfen Eady, for other beneficiaries.—We rely on the earlier decision in Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. sen. 420, followed in Cazenove v. Cazenove, 61 L. T. N. S. 115, 38 W. R. Dig. 211, in preference to In re Hardy. A direction as to the time of payment gives no priority: Miller v. Huddlestone, 3 Mac. & G. 513. All the authorities are considered in Roche v. Harding, 7 Ir. Ch. Rep. 338.

Corrie and W. F. Webster, for other beneficiaries.

CHITTY, J.—It is well settled at the present day that near relationship to the testator does not of itself give a legatee priority over other legatees. It may be said that a man is morally bound to provide for his widow and children, and, therefore, that the widow and children ought to have priority over strangers if the estate is insufficient to pay all the legacies in full, but the natural inference or moral obligation is not of itself sufficient to give preference to a widow or child. It is also a well-established rule that a mere direction to pay a legacy immediately, or within one month, or within three months after a testator's decease affords no evidence of any intention on the part of the testator to give priority to that particular legacy in case of a deficiency in the estate, because it is to be presumed that the testator intended all the legacies to be paid in full when he gave them. The testator in the case now before me has miscalculated, as often happens, the value of his estate, but at the time he made his will he certainly intended that there should be equality among his legatees, and it probably never occurred to him that his personal estate would not be sufficient to answer all his testamentary dispositions. Even on the words of the will it is clear that the widow is not entitled to any priority, because there are instances where, when the testator intended certain annuities to have a priority, he has made express provision by apt words for such priority.

The case of In re Hardy has been pressed upon me as directly in favour of the widow's claim to priority. In that case, the facts of which are very similar to the present case, Malins, V.C., dissented from Blower v. Morret, and declined to follow it. In my opinion the Vice-Chancellor was bound by that case, which was decided by Hardwicke, L.C., as long ago as 1752, and never questioned by anyone until it came before the Vice-Chancellor. The case had got into the text-books; it is referred to in Roper on Legacies, p. 423, 4th ed.; and had, up to 1881 at any rate, been generally accepted as an authority on this very point. The Vice-Chancellor says, in his judgment, that Blower v. Morret, is distinguishable, and if not, he dissents from it, and declines to follow it; but, in my opinion, it is not so distinguishable, and I think, with all due respect to the learned Vice-Chancellor, that he was bound by it. In Blower v. Morret there was a gift of a general legacy of £500 to the testator's wife, "to be paid her immediately after my decease out of the first money belonging to me that should be got in after my death," and the Lord Chancellor decided, notwithstanding the words of the will as to immediate payment, that the legacy was liable to abatement, and that the widow had no priority merely on that ground. I think, therefore, that I am constrained by Blower v. Morret, and by the continued course of the authorities since that decision to dissent from In re Hardy, as I do, and to hold in the result that the widow in the case before me has no priority over the other legatees in respect of the £600 legacy.

Solicitors, Cowlard & Chowne; J. E. Fox & Co.; A. Schweder; Russell, Cooke, & Co.

(a.) Reported by G. ROWLAND ALSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div. }
Chitty, J. } Feb. 4, 5, 10.

BOLTON v. SALMON. (a.)

Principal and surety—Giving of time—Discharge of personal liability—Release of property—Tenants in common—Covenant to pay mortgage debt—Redemption action—Parties.

Where a surety pledges his personal credit by note, covenant, or otherwise, and by the same contract pledges his goods or charges or mortgages his lands as security for the same debt, any alteration of the contract without his consent discharges the surety from all personal liability, and releases the property which the surety had included in his contract.

Action.

By an indenture dated the 18th of October, 1854, two undivided fourth shares in a freehold farm belonging to Susan Booty and the defendant Sarah Buckenham, and an equitable charge on the whole of the farm of £850 belonging to the defendant S. Buckenham, were conveyed to one Eliza Middleditch by way of mortgage to secure the repayment of £1,000 and interest. Sarah Buckenham joined in the deed as surety only.

By an indenture dated the 4th of September, 1857, J. C. Buckenham, the defendant S. Buckenham, and R. S. Buckenham jointly and severally covenanted with one Cooper for the repayment, on the 4th of March next, of an advance of £450 made by Cooper to J. C. Buckenham, with interest at £5 per cent., and by the same deed two undivided fourth shares in the above-mentioned farm belonging respectively to J. C. Buckenham and R. S. Buckenham, and the defendant S. Buckenham's said undivided fourth share and her equitable charge for £850 on the entirety, were conveyed to Cooper, subject, as to the defendant S. Buckenham's interest, to the said mortgage of the 18th of October, by way of security for the said sum of £450 and interest. This deed was executed by the defendant S. Buckenham and R. G. Buckenham as sureties for J. C. Buckenham.

J. C. Buckenham having made other mortgages of his interest in the farm and of other property to secure the repayment of advances, subsequently arranged for the consolidation of all his mortgages by a deed dated the 15th of December, 1884, under which the plaintiff G. Bolton was mortgagee. The question in the present action, so far as it is material to be reported, turned upon whether the effect of this consolidation deed, by giving time to J. C. Buckenham, the principal debtor, without consulting the surety, S. Buckenham, was not only to discharge her from all personal liability under the deed of the 4th of September, 1857, but also to release the securities which she, as surety, had included in that mortgage.

The consolidation deed recited that J. C. Buckenham was entitled to one undivided share in the farm, subject to the incumbrance created by the indenture of the 4th of September, 1857, and to other subsequent charges thereon which were specified, and that he was also entitled to other property, subject to some of the aforesaid charges and other charges therein specified, and recited that J. C. Buckenham had applied to the plaintiff to advance the total sum of £3,200, in order to pay off the before-mentioned several mortgages and charges which he, the plaintiff, had agreed to do "upon having the said several mortgages and charges transferred to him, and upon having repayment thereof with interest further secured in manner hereinafter appearing," the various mortgagees respectively, in consideration of the payment of the amount of their respective debts, conveyed to the plaintiff such debts "and the full benefit of the covenants and other powers and provisions" contained in their respective mortgage deeds for securing the payment of the respective principal sums and interest, "and all securities for the same." The one undivided fourth share in the farm belonging to J. C. Buckenham was, with other properties, then conveyed to the plaintiff subject to a proviso for redemption upon the repayment of the total amount of £3,200 advanced by him; and J. C. Buckenham covenanted to pay to the plaintiff the sum of £3,200 on the 19th of January, 1885, with interest.

By another indenture dated the 27th of July, 1889, the rights and shares of the defendant S. Buckenham and R. G. Buckenham in the farm, so far as the same were then vested in the transferees under the said indenture of mortgage of the 4th of September, 1857, were, according to the plaintiff, conveyed to him in fee simple, subject to such right as was then subsisting therein under such indenture.

Neither the defendant S. Buckenham nor R. G. Buckenham were parties to either of the two last-mentioned deeds.

In 1889 the defendant S. Buckenham paid off the £1,000 secured by the indenture of the 18th of October, 1854, and caused the same to be transferred to the defendant C. E. Salmon as a trustee for her.

The present action was commenced by S. Bolton against C. E. Salmon and S. Buckenham for a declaration that he was entitled to redeem the mortgage of October 18, 1854, redemption, and foreclosure of the equity of redemption of the defendant S. Buckenham.

Byrne, Q.C., Haldane, Q.C., and Chubb, for the plaintiff.

Jason Smith, for the defendants.

He referred to Wheatley v. Bastow, 7 De G. M. & G. 261, 4 W. R. Dig. 90; Hodgson v. Hodgson, 2 Keen, 704; Holme v. Brunskill, 3 Q. B. D. 495, 26 W. R. Dig. 194.

Byrne, Q.C., replied.

CHITTY, J.—The plaintiff claims to redeem the mortgage of 1854, and, on redemption, to foreclose the defendants by virtue of a subsequent security which he alleges is vested in him. The only parties to the action are the plaintiff and the defendants Salmon and Miss Buckenham. As a redemption suit it is plain that the action is defective for want of parties. Mr. and Mrs. Booty are not parties, nor are their interests in Mrs. Booty's one-fourth share represented in the action. The plaintiff claims only to be a subsequent incumbrancer. Where a mortgage is made by two tenants in common both of them must be parties to the action to redeem; one cannot redeem in the absence of the other. Where two different estates are mortgaged, the person entitled to redeem one estate cannot bring an action to redeem, without making the person entitled to redeem the other estate a party: see Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 J. & W. 134. For this purpose there is no difference between a mortgage of two different estates or two undivided shares of the same estate. Towards the close of the argument the plaintiff's counsel asked for liberty to amend by adding parties; had I granted this liberty it would only have been on terms of the plaintiff paying all the costs thrown away. There are other objections for want of parties, but it is not necessary to discuss them beyond saying that all the four tenants in common, or those who claim the equity of redemption under them, are parties to an action to redeem the charge on the entirety.

(a.) Reported by V. DE S. FOWKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiff claims a right to redeem as a puisne incumbrancer by virtue of a mortgage of 1857, and he alleges that all the securities created by this mortgage are now vested in and enforceable by him by virtue of a deed of transfer and consolidation dated the 15th of December, 1884, and another deed dated the 27th of July, 1889. For the purposes of this portion of my judgment I will assume, in favour of the plaintiff, that the security created by Miss Buckenham by the deed of 1857 was effectually transferred to and vested in the plaintiff by the operation of these two deeds, though Miss Buckehnam was not a party to either.

Now it has been decided in an action brought by the plaintiff against Miss Buckenham in the Queen's Bench Division that the effect of the deed of 1884 was to discharge Miss Buckenham from her liability under the covenant in the deed of 1857. The plaintiff's counsel, however, contend that although Miss Buckenham's covenant is gone by reason of time having been given to the principal debtor, the security which she gave remains. With all their learning and research the plaintiff's counsel were not able to produce any authority for this proposition. The reason may be that no one had ever previously thought of raising such a contention.

For the defendants two cases were cited. The first was Wheatley v. Bastow. This is not an express decision on the point. There a brother and sister entitled in moieties to a reversionary interest in a fund in court mortgaged it to secure the debt of the brother, the sister joining as surety only. On the facts the court decided that the surety was not discharged. But it seems to have been assumed throughout the case, both by the eminent counsel engaged and by the court, consisting of Knight-Bruce and Turner, L.JJ., that if the facts had shown a release the mortgaged property of the surety would have been discharged. The second case is Hodgson v. Hodgson. There it was held that the release of one co-surety discharged the security given by the other. This is in point. On principle I can find no ground for the proposition, that although the surety's covenant is gone by alteration of the contract with the principal debtor, yet the security which the surety has given remains bound. A surety pledges his personal credit by note, covenant, or otherwise, and by the same contract pledges also his goods, or charges or mortgages his lands as security for the same debt. The alteration of the contract without his consent or without the reservation of rights against him affects his position equally in regard to every part of his contract of suretyship. As was said by Cotton, L.J., in Holmes v. Brunskill, "The cases as to discharge of a surety by an agreement made by the creditor to give time to the principal debtor are only an exemplification of the rule stated by Lord Loughborough in Rees v. Berrington, 2 Ves. jun. 540. It is the clearest and most evident equity not to carry on any transaction without the knowledge of him (the surety) who must necessarily have a concern in every transaction with the principal debtor. You cannot keep him bound and transact his affairs (for they are as much his as your own) without consulting him." The true rule, as the Lord Justice went on to show, is that if there is any agreement between the principals with reference to the contract guaranteed, the surety ought to be consulted, and that if there is any alteration which is not obviously either unsubstantial or for the benefit of the surety he is to be the sole judge whether he will remain liable. This reasoning applies with the same force to a security given by the surety as it does to a personal obligation entered into by him. Moreover, the deed of 1884 gave time to J. C. Buckenham, the principal debtor, not only in respect of his covenant by the taking of a new covenant, which, at least, suspended the right to sue on the covenant of 1857, but also in respect of the right and the time for redemption. The right of redemption under the indenture of 1857 was discharged, and a new proviso for redemption was inserted, conferring, according to its terms, the right to redeem by J. C. Buckenham or any person claiming under him on payment of the entire consolidated debt of £3,200 on the 19th of January, 1885. So that there was in this respect a giving of time in relation to the security itself. The result is that the security Miss Buckenham gave by the deed of the 4th of September, 1857, is released, and consequently the plaintiff has no title to redeem her.

His lordship then dealt with the consolidation deed of the 15th of December, 1884, and the transfer of the 27th of July, 1889, which he held as a matter of construction did not pass the shares and interests of the defendant Sarah Buckenham and Robert G. Buckenham, and eventually dismissed the action, with costs.

Solicitors, Arthur B. Chubb; Gilbert Robins, for Salmon & Sons, Bury St. Edmunds.

Chan. Div. } Kekewich, J. } May 2, 8, 9.

In re SMITH'S SETTLED ESTATES. (a.)

Settled land—Sale by tenant for life—Property not sold—Costs of attempted sale—Capital money—Charge on settled land—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 3, 4, 21 (x.), 46 (sub-section 6), 47, 55 (sub-section 3).

The costs, charges, and expenses incurred by a tenant for life of settled land in an unsuccessful attempt to sell the property may be paid out of capital moneys arising under the Settled Land Acts.

In re Llewellin, Llewellin v. Williams, 36 W. R. 347, 37 Ch. D. 317, considered and followed.

When there are no capital moneys out of which such costs, charges, and expenses can be paid, the court has jurisdiction, upon an application by the tenant for life for directions as to the payment of such costs, charges, and expenses, to order that the same be raised by means of a charge on the settled property.

Adjourned summons.

By a settlement, dated the 14th of August, 1879, real estate was limited to uses under which J. C. T. Smith became, at the death of W. C. Smith, beneficially entitled in possession as tenant for life.

By his will, dated the 18th of April, 1879, W. C. Smith devised and bequeathed to trustees certain real estate and stock, and empowered his trustees, upon the request of any tenant for life, to apply all or any principal trust moneys which might from time to time be in their hands under or by virtue of any of the trusts or powers therein contained in or towards paying off or discharging any mortgage or other charge or incumbrance for the time being affecting any of the hereditaments subject to the subsisting uses or trusts of his will, or any similarly settled hereditaments.

The limitations of the settlement were similar to, but not identical with, the trusts declared by the will. The testator died on the 6th of June, 1883.

On the 25th of June, 1889, J. C. T. Smith, with the leave of the court, put up for sale by auction the mansion house and demesnes and other lands settled by the settlement of the 14th of August, 1879, but the reserve prices were not reached, except in the case of two small lots, which were sold for £325. The costs and expenses of and incidental to the sale amounted to £1,171. There was a sum of £520 Consols standing in the names of the trustees of the settlement, representing capital moneys under the Settled Land Act; and there were also certain sums of Bank Stock and Consols standing in the names of the trustees of the will.

(a.) Reported by JAMES H. BAKEWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This was a summons by J. C. T. Smith asking that the costs and expenses incurred by him in the attempted sale of the property subject to the settlement might be declared to be costs, charges, and expenses incidental to the exercise of the powers of sale conferred on him by the Settled Land Act; that it might be declared that the said costs and expenses, so far as they had been incurred in relation to such property, were payable by means of a charge upon that property or the unsold part thereof; and that it might be declared that the said costs and expenses and the costs of all parties of the application might be raised and paid out of the sums of stock and Consols held by the trustees of the will of W. C. Smith.

Warmington, Q.C., and Brinton, for the summons.—The costs incurred by the tenant for life are costs, charges, and expenses of and incidental to the exercise of his power of sale, within the meaning of section 21 (x.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882; and he is entitled to have them paid out of any capital moneys in the hands of the trustees of the settlement: In re Llewellin, Llewellin v. Williams, 36 W. R. 347, 37 Ch. D. 317; In re Lord Stamford's Settled Estates, 38 W. R. 317, 43 Ch. D. 84.

Butcher, for the trustees.

Cartmell, for the mortgagees of the life estate of J. C. T. Smith.

Hood, for persons entitled in remainder, referred to Sebright v. Thornton, W. N., 1885, p. 176.

May 8.—KEKEWICH, J.—The question which I have to consider in this case may be thus stated. When a tenant for life honestly and with due diligence attempts to sell the whole or part of the property comprised in the settlement under which he holds, and that attempt is wholly or partially unsuccessful, is he at liberty to charge the costs incurred in that attempted sale against "capital moneys" arising under the Settled Land Act? So far as the sale is successful, for instance, if the land has been put up in twelve lots, and two of those lots have been sold, there can be no doubt that he would be entitled, under the words of the Act, to a proportionate part of the costs incurred; either one sixth or whatever might be the proper proportion, having regard to the value of the property sold.

But is he entitled to charge the costs incurred by putting up for sale that portion of the property which was not sold; and, if the sale is wholly unsuccessful, is he entitled to charge against capital moneys the entire costs of a sale which has had no result?

This question came before Stirling, J., in In re Llewellin, Llewellin v. Williams, not precisely in the form in which it is now before me, but in substantially the same manner; the sections of the Act which have been referred to before me were there discussed, and the case was fully argued. Stirling, J., came to the clear decision that the tenant for life is, for the reasons mentioned by him, entitled to charge his costs against the estate. I am of course at liberty to reconsider the question, since that decision was made in 1887, on an Act which was then of recent date, and there is, so far as I am aware, no other reported case in point.

But I do not doubt that many tenants for life, and solicitors who have advised them, have acted on that decision, and I should not reconsider it without reluctance. Having carefully considered it, I have decided not only to follow it, but to express my entire concurrence with it. I think that it is better that I should simply adopt the language of Stirling, J., and not attempt to express the same result in my own language. I, therefore, not merely follow that case as an authority, but adopt it as my own decision.

May 9.—Warmington, Q.C., and Brinton, for J. C. T. Smith.—There is jurisdiction to charge the costs and expenses of the attempted sale upon the settled land: Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 46, sub-section 6; s. 47; s. 55, sub-section 3. These costs and expenses may, then, be paid by the trustees of the will under their power to discharge incumbrances.

Butcher, for the trustees.—If the court has no jurisdiction to make this charge, capital money may have to be raised by selling the settled land. Section 46 is wide and is only limited by section 55, sub section 3: In re Llewellin, 37 Ch. D., at p. 327.

Brinton replied.

KEKEWICH, J.—I have already decided that the costs of the abortive sale by the tenant for life are costs, charges, and expenses payable out of capital money within the meaning of section 21 of the Settled Land Act, 1882.

It now appears that there is no capital money, or not enough capital money, attributable to this particular settlement. The question therefore arises whether those costs can be directed to be paid out of the land; if they can, the result will be to make them a charge on the land, and thereupon they could be raised as any other charge, or in the particular instance they can conveniently be raised under the will, which appears to contain express powers to pay off charges affecting the lands held under the settlement.

If that power did not exist I should not be very much disposed to give weight to the argument on the inconvenience of not reaching the lands in a direct way; but, seeing that there is that power, I need not pause to consider whether it would be right to make a charge which would enable the tenant for life to raise the money by mortgage, or otherwise than by sale; it being conceded, and being part of my decision, that if he sold the proceeds of sale would be applicable for payment of these costs.

The Act does not say in so many words that the costs incurred by the tenant for life shall be a charge upon the settled land. But large powers are given to the court by section 46 of the Act, to which section 47 is supplementary, and the real question is whether the powers given by section 46 (6) reach this particular case. I am not aware of any other sections of the Act which can help me in deciding this question.

Section 46 assigns all matters coming within the jurisdiction of the court to the Chancery Division, and gives the court certain powers; and sub-section 6 gives to the court power to make such order as it thinks fit respecting the costs, charges, and expenses of all or any of the parties to any application. The section does not say costs, charges, and expenses of any application, nor could such language have been properly used, for there are not any costs, charges, and expenses of the application. What is incurred are costs, and the expression "costs, charges, and expenses" points to something beyond the liability incurred by an application to the court. The difficulty arises from the fact that the tenant for life sold outside of the court, simply in exercise of his statutory power. One has to search narrowly and suspiciously for any authority on the part of the court to allow the expenses of what did not require the sanction of the court.

The tenant for life, not having sold the land, desires to know whether the costs, charges, and expenses of the attempted sale may be paid out of capital moneys and moneys in hand. I have heard that application, and have decided it. Is not that an application on which I can deal with the costs, charges, and expenses of the parties, one of whom is the tenant for life, and, if so, do not these costs, charges, and expenses include those which I held ought to be paid to him out of capital moneys? I think that, without straining the language of the section, I may arrive at that conclusion. I think that the provision which enables me to do so is section 55, sub-section 3, because that provides a limit to the word "expenses." Probably, on section 46 (6) I should be bound to hold that costs, charges, or expenses meant those connected with the powers of the Act; but under section 55 (3) I have an express limitation which prevents the court from going beyond what is indicated as right and reasonable. I may read sub-section 6 as providing that the court may make such order as it thinks fit respecting the costs, charges, and expenses of all or any of the parties who are before it in connection with the Act or incurred under the Act. The sub-section goes on to empower the court to order that all or any of the costs, charges, or expenses be paid out of property subject to the settlement. Section 47 states what is to happen when the direction is given. The result of that applied to the particular case is to make the costs in law a charge on the land, and the trustees of the will may, if they think fit, in exercise of their powers, pay off this charge.

I think I ought to follow the words of the Act, and that I ought not to declare that the costs are payable out of and charged upon the settled land, but to order that the costs, charges, or expenses be paid out of the property subject to the settlement; then I may go on to direct them to be raised by means of a charge on the settled property. That will put the trustees of the will in as good a position as if these costs were secured by an equitable charge. The costs of the mortgagees of the life estate of the present application must be borne by the tenant for life.

Solicitors, Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Grim & Matthew, Cambridge; Prideaux & Sons; Wade & Lyall.

Q. B. Div. (Denman and Wills, JJ.) June 26, 29.

MOORE v. PEACHEY. (a.)

Practice—Discovery—Right to inspection of documents disclosed in answer to interrogatories — Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 31, rr. 15-18.

A plaintiff sued upon an agreement, and, in answer to interrogatories, stated that the agreement was in writing, and was contained in three documents referred to.

Held, that the defendant was entitled to an order for inspection under ord. 31, rr. 15-18, on the ground that these were "documents referred to in an affidavit in the cause," and that a further application for discovery, to be accompanied with a further deposit of £5, was not necessary.

Appeal from the refusal of Henn Collins, J., at chambers, affirming the refusal of the master, to order inspection of documents.

This action was for the recovery of a commission on an alleged betting transaction. The plaintiff sued upon an agreement, and in answer to interrogatories alleged that the agreement was in writing, contained on a card and in two letters. The defendant applied for inspection of these under ord. 31, r. 15. The plaintiff objected that this amounted to discovery without the deposit of the security of £5, or the affidavit, as required by rule 26. Both master and judge held that this was a "sufficient excuse" for objecting to inspection under rule 18 of order 31, and on the ground that there was an established practice of the masters in chambers to refuse such applications without a further deposit of £5.

L. J. Pike, for the defendant, the appellant.—The appellant was entitled to inspection after the documents had been disclosed in the plaintiff's answers to interrogatories. It was an application for inspection, not for discovery.

A. V. Lawrence, for the plaintiff, the respondent.—Discovery of facts is allowed by interrogatories, discovery of documents is by another process—viz., on affidavit and by the deposit of security. This is an attempt to evade the payment of the second deposit, and to get the advantage of discovery under the process of interrogatories: vide Compagnie du Pacifique v. Guano Co., W. N., 1883, p. 166, and the note to ord. 31, r. 26, in the Annual Practice, 1890.

Cur. adv. vult.

DENMAN, J.—I may say that in this case we have thought it right to speak to some of our brother judges and to one of the masters of great experience in chambers' practice, because it was said that the judge had been led to believe in this case that it was an established practice to refuse inspection of documents in applications similar to this without a deposit of £5 having been paid. But upon inquiry we find that there is no such practice established, and that the learned judge was misinstructed in being led to believe that it had been so settled. The application was made under ord. 31, rr. 15-18. Rule 15 says that "every party to a cause or matter shall be entitled, at any time, by notice in writing, to give notice to any other party, in whose pleadings or affidavits reference is made to any document, to produce such document for the inspection of the party giving such notice or his solicitor, and to permit him to take copies thereof." Any party not complying with such notice is to be debarred from putting in such document unless by leave of the court, "or unless he shall have some cause or excuse—other than those mentioned—which the court or judge shall deem sufficient for not complying with such notice." Rule 16 gives the form of notice. Rule 17 regulates the time for inspection. Then comes rule 18, enacting that "If the party served with notice . . . objects to give inspection . . . the judge may, on the application of the party desiring it, make an order for inspection in such place or manner as he may think fit, and except in the case of documents referred to in the pleadings or affidavits of the party against whom the application is made, or disclosed in his affidavit of documents, such application shall be founded upon an affidavit showing of what documents inspection is sought."

(a.) Reported by SPENCER L. HOLLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It was contended that these rules did not apply to this case. The plaintiff here sued upon an agreement. The defendant obtained leave to interrogate him, upon the usual terms of a deposit of £5, as to "whether this agreement was verbal or in writing? and, if in writing, identify the documents?" In the plaintiff's affidavit of answers he alleged the agreement to be in writing and contained in certain documents, namely, a card and two letters. The defendant thereupon applied, under ord. 31, r. 15, for an inspection of these documents, but the plaintiff contended that this amounted to an application for discovery under the guise of interrogatories by which the defendant evaded the necessity of a second deposit of £5 required on application for discovery of documents. I do not say that there might not be cases in which, if the court found that any such evasion was being attempted, it would be justified in upholding the objection, but I cannot see that it is necessary to do so here. The affidavit mentioned in ord. 31, r. 15, is large enough to include answers to particulars which are on affidavit. Under that affidavit the plaintiff had referred to the documents in question. He practically admitted that he was suing upon a written agreement. Even under the old Common Law Procedure Act the defendant would have thereupon been entitled to inspection or to force the plaintiff to set out the documents upon which he relied. I see no reason why he should not be equally entitled to take advantage of this rule 15, which gives a right to inspection of documents disclosed or referred to in pleadings or "affidavits." This order should, therefore, be made, and the appeal be allowed.

WILLS, J.—I quite agree. I see no reason for limiting the use of the word affidavit in ord. 31, r. 15, as contended to an affidavit of documents. This was not an application for discovery, for that had already been obtained in the answers to interrogatories, but for the fruits of discovery. The plaintiff is too late also in form in objecting to this application. He should have done so by objecting to answer the interrogatory, though I do not see how that objection could have been sustained.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant, R. H. King.

Solicitor for the respondent, C. R. S. Hooper.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. June 26.

In re AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS (ENGLAND) ACT, 1883.
GOUGH v. GOUGH. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Compensation for improvements—Payment by executors of deceased landlord—Right of executors to a charge on the land—"Designation of landlord"—"Parties"—Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), ss. 29, 61.

A landlord (tenant for life of an agricultural holding) died after the sum payable by him to an outgoing tenant as compensation for unexhausted improvements under the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, had been fixed. His executors paid the sum, and presented a petition asking that the holding should be charged therewith, under section 29 of the same Act.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held (reversing the decision of the Divisional Court, ante, p. 494), that the executors, being "parties" to the proceedings, came within the "designation of landlord" under section 61 of the Act, and were therefore entitled to the charge.

Appeal from the decision of the Queen's Bench Division (Cave, J., Vaughan Williams, J., dissenting), reported ante, p. 494.

John Gough, as tenant for life of a farm, let the same to a tenant from year to year. In March, 1889, the tenant gave notice to Gough of his intention to quit the farm at Lady Day, 1890, and in January, 1890, served upon him notice of a claim for £130 for unexhausted improvements under the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883. On the 5th of April the amount payable by Gough to the tenant was fixed by valuers appointed under the provisions of the Act at £35. On the 8th of April Gough died, having up to that date been in receipt of the rent of the farm as tenant for life. On the 24th of April Gough's executors paid the £35 to the tenant. They then presented a petition in the Wells County Court asking for a charge upon the farm in respect of the £35 under section 29 of the Act. The remainderman opposed the petition, and the county court judge held that the executors were not the "landlord" within the definition given in section 61 of the Act, and were therefore not entitled to the charge.

On the appeal of the executors to a divisional court the learned judges differed, Cave, J., holding that the executors were not entitled to claim the charge, Vaughan Williams, J., holding that they were so entitled. The decision of the county court judge therefore stood.

The executors appealed.

The arguments sufficiently appear from the judgments.

H. F. Lawes, for the appellants.

McCall, Q.C., and C. Garland, for the respondents.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—This Act of Parliament is certainly not framed in such a way as to convey a clear meaning to the minds of ordinary people, but we must try to interpret it.

The appellants cannot succeed unless they can bring themselves within the last clause of section 61; for I agree with Vaughan Williams, J., that the definition of "landlord" would shut them out. The words in the definition clause (section 61) are "'landlord' in relation to a holding means any person for the time being entitled to receive the rents and profits of any holding; 'tenant' means the holder of land under a landlord for a term of years or for lives or for lives and years or from year to year." And "holding" is defined as meaning "any parcel of land held by a tenant." Now the result of that definition is that you cannot give any other meaning to the word "landlord" than that which is given in that definition. As to the word "tenant," besides the definition which I have read, the section provides that the word "includes the executors, administrators, assigns, &c., of a tenant"; but as to "landlord" the only word used is "means," and the word "landlord" in this Act means what it is there stated to mean, and that only.

But there is another clause in this section which is useless if considered in relation to those two definitions only, and must be intended to deal with something not included in those definitions: "The designations of landlord and tenant shall continue to apply to the parties until the conclusion of any proceedings taken under or in pursuance of this Act in respect of compensation for improvements." There is, therefore, a time when the terms landlord and tenant are not to be strictly taken according to the definitions, but are to apply although the definitions would not apply. The question is whether in such a case as the present the word "parties" includes the executors of the landlord, who was here tenant for life of the property. It has been shown that the proceedings which are contemplated by this Act were begun in the lifetime of the tenant for life. They are to go on until their conclusion; before that happens the tenant for life dies. That event does not conclude the proceedings, but the executors thereupon become parties to the proceedings. Does the word "parties" in that clause mean parties to the original contract of tenancy only? Mr. McCall said that that was so. But this clause replaces a clause in the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, an Act which was repealed by the Act of 1883. The clause in the Act of 1875 is at the end of section 4, and provides that "the designations of landlord and tenant shall for the purposes of this Act continue to apply to the parties to a contract of tenancy until the conclusion of any proceedings," &c. But the clause in the present Act omits the words "to a contract of tenancy." That was a more limited expression than "parties" generally: the word is left at large by the later Act, and some effect must be given to that larger expression; "parties" includes a larger number of persons than "parties to a contract of tenancy." It must, however, be limited in some way, and I think that it means "parties to the proceedings"; it, therefore, includes executors whenever they have become parties to the proceedings. The executors of the landlord are not within the definition of landlord, yet if a question of compensation under this Act has arisen they are parties until the conclusion of any proceedings taken under the Act. This construction is a natural one, and carries out the intention of the Legislature, and avoids an injustice which has been described by my learned brethren on the bench during the argument as monstrous and senseless. I think, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and would leave the matter as it stands were it not for the difference of opinion in the court below. I think that the construction arrived at by the Master of the Rolls is the one to which we are naturally borne, in spite of the obscurity of the Act. The first question is whether the executors are included within the definition of landlord in section 61. It was argued that since the executors of a tenant for life are entitled (under the Apportionment Acts) to recover from his lessees rent which had accrued at the date of his death, they are, therefore, to be considered as the landlord within this definition. I myself would shrink from saying that the Apportionment Acts are sufficient to bring executors within the definition of landlord in the Agricultural Holdings Act, but I express no opinion. There is still, however, the important paragraph at the end of the section which may bring them in, as justice certainly requires. What does the word "parties" mean in that clause? Mr. McCall said that it meant the parties who before were landlord and tenant. But we must look through the Act to see whether that construction does not make the Act a monstrosity. There is provision in the Act for a tenant making a claim for unexhausted improvements, and elaborate machinery is provided for arriving at the amount which ought to be paid. Is it conceivable that all that procedure is to be made useless if the landlord dies? It is admitted on the contrary, that the tenant does not lose his right if his landlord ceases to be landlord: is he to lose it if his landlord dies? Surely if the designations of landlord and tenant are to continue, they must apply to those who have succeeded to, and represent each of them. That was the case under the Act of 1875; there the executors were for all purposes to be deemed to be landlords. The present Act limits the scope of the term "landlord," but then the clause which deals with the continuance of these designations is altered, and I have come to the conclusion that this word "parties" must have been intended to have a wider sense, and to include this very case.

KAY, L.J.—The Agricultural Holdings Acts give to the tenant rights which he did not possess before to claim compensation from his landlord for unexhausted improvements. Under the Act of 1875 it was possible for the landlord and the tenant to contract themselves out of the Act. But the Act of 1883 went a step further and forbade that, and made the provisions of the Act binding on the landlord. It is clear that in the present case the executors were bound to pay the £35, and they did pay it. Turning to section 29 I find that these executors, if they can be brought within the term landlord, are entitled to obtain a charge upon the land for this £35. It was paid by them for unexhausted improvements of which the land would get the benefit—that is, the land of the remainderman—and out of which the estate of the tenant for life would get no benefit whatever. Can it have been intended that under this Act the landlord, if he is alive, can obtain a charge on the land, but if he has died his executors cannot obtain it? that they should pay out of his estate for improvements upon the land of the remainderman and yet get no charge upon the land which has been improved? I think that the language which I have used during the argument is not too strong to describe such a result. It is incredible that the Legislature should have intended that the Act should have that effect. But is that the necessary construction?

Turning to the definition of the word landlord, I think that it is probable that the executors do not come within it, and I do not rely upon that. It is argued that in the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, s. 4, "landlord" is defined so as to include the executors, and that that is not so in the present Act, whereas in the definition of "tenant" the words including the executors are still retained. That argument is worthy of attention, but there is another difference between these sections of the two Acts. [His lordship read the clauses in section 4 of the Act of 1875 and section 61 of the Act of 1883, commencing, "The designations of landlord and tenant," and continued:—] These clauses are like and yet very unlike; is not the reason for this alteration the fact that the executors of a landlord have been omitted from the definition of "landlord"? so that, although not within the definition, they may be within the designation as long as proceedings under this Act are going on. It seems to me that it was a mistake to say that a landlord should mean his executors, for the landlord's interest often ceases entirely at his death, and such a definition might therefore give rise to difficulties. But to say that the executors shall be included in the designation of landlord until the conclusion of proceedings under this Act makes the Act intelligible; for the proceedings are not determined by the death of a landlord who is tenant for life of the property, nor until this application for a charge has been made and disposed of. The result is that, this being a proceeding under the Act, the executors, as parties to that proceeding, are within the designation of "landlord" until the conclusion of the proceedings, and are entitled to this charge. I think that we are able to come to this conclusion without doing olence to the construction of the Act, and I agree at the judgment of the Divisional Court should be versed.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors for the appellants, Pilgrim & Phillips, for . F. Poynton, Bristol.

Solicitors for the respondent, Moon & Gilks, for . W. B. Leach, Martock.

From Q. B. Div. April 25.

COMFORT v. BETTS. (a.) ssignment of debt—Assignment subject to a trust—Assignment of debts for purpose of suing—Right of assignee to sue—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 6.

By a deed made between the plaintiff and certain reditors of the defendant, which recited that the plaintiff ad agreed to take an assignment of the debts due from he defendant to the creditors upon the terms that he hould forthwith proceed to recover the same, and, upon ecovery, should pay to the creditors respectively the mount of their debts, or such part thereof as might have een recovered, the creditors assigned the debts to the laintiff absolutely. Notice of the assignment was given o the defendant.

Held, that this was an "absolute assignment not purorting to be by way of charge only" within section 25, ub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873, and that the laintiff was entitled to maintain the action.

Application to set aside the verdict and judgment for the plaintiff, and to enter judgment for the defendant.

The plaintiff sued as assignee, under a deed of assignment, of debts, amounting in all to the sum of £70, due from the defendant to various tradesmen. The deed, after reciting that the assignors had respectively agreed to assign, and the assignee had agreed to take an assignment of, the respective debts in the schedule opposite their names upon the terms that the assignee should forthwith proceed to recover the same by action at law or otherwise, and upon recovery thereof should pay to the assignors respectively out of the aggregate amount recovered such proportionate part of such aggregate sum as should represent the individual debt due to them respectively, or such part thereof as might have been so recovered by the assignee, stated that in consideration of the premises the assignors assigned the said debts to the assignee absolutely. The plaintiff and the several creditors were parties to the deed. Notice of the assignment was given to the defendant.

At the trial before Pollock, B., and a jury the learned judge held that this was an absolute assignment within section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873, and the verdict and judgment were entered for the plaintiff.

Horace Browne, for the defendant.—This is not an absolute assignment. No beneficial interest was intended to pass to the assignee. There was no intention to pass any property in the debts at all. Section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873, was not applicable, and the plaintiff was not entitled to sue.

He referred to Walker v. Bradford Old Bank, 32 W. R. 644, 12 Q. B. D. 511; National Provincial Bank v. Harle, 29 W. R. 564, 6 Q. B. D. 626; Harding v. Harding, 34 W. R. 775, 17 Q. B. D. 442; Story's Equity Jurisprudence, s. 1039.

E. Morten, for the plaintiff.—The recital in the deed shows that the intention was to pass the legal property for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to sue. The assignment was absolute, though the plaintiff might be a trustee of the moneys recovered from the defendant. The case of National Provincial Bank v. Harle was doubted in Burlinson v. Hall, 32 W. R. 492, 12 Q. B. D. 347; and this latter case was followed in Tancred v. Delagoa Bay Railway Co., 38 W. R. 15, 23 Q. B. D. 239.

Horace Browne replied.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—But for the Judicature Act, 1873, these debts, which are choses in action, could not be assigned at law. Since that Act this can be done, and in the present case each of these creditors has assigned his debt to the plaintiff. At first I thought that if such a thing could be done with the sole object of enabling the assignee to sue for all the debts in one action, it might lead to mischievous results, as the assignee might thereby be enabled to sue in the High Court, whereas if each creditor had to sue alone he would have to bring his action in the county court. That seemed to me at first as likely to lead to mischievous results, more especially in a university town. But the words of the section are clear. This deed is in form an absolute assignment of each debt to the plaintiff. It was intended by the parties to be an absolute assignment of the debts to him, subject to a trust in favour of the assignors when the debts were recovered. It was intended that the legal property in the debts should be assigned to the plaintiff. Therefore, it is in form an absolute assignment, and it was intended by the parties to be an assignment. It seems to me that the case comes within the words of the section. Upon reflection I cannot see that any injustice will be done by giving the words their ordinary meaning, and I do not see that any inconvenience or mischief will be caused thereby. The assignment, therefore, comes within the section, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover.

FRY, L.J.—Section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act of 1873 for the first time enabled the owner of a debt or chose in action to assign the legal right to that debt or chose in action. The necessary requirements were that there must be an absolute assignment not purporting to be by way of charge only; and express notice in writing of the assignment must be given to the debtor. The assignment would then take effect as from the date of the notice. The question is whether the assignment in the present case is an absolute assignment not purporting to be by way of charge only. The deed purports to be an absolute assignment. It is quite true that a trust is constituted for the assignors of the moneys recovered from the debtor. Nevertheless, the intention was that the assignment should be absolute in point of form, and that the assignee should have all the rights of an assignee under the Judicature Act. Therefore, in form it was an absolute assignment, and the intention of the parties was that there should be an absolute assignment subject to a trust. I know of no objection to the owner of a legal chose in action converting himself into an equitable owner of it. Before the Judicature Act a chose in action could not have been assigned at law. But before that Act it was a common practice for the owner, for instance, of leasehold property to assign it to an assignee in trust for himself. There were many advantages in pursuing this course rather than acting by power of attorney; for instance, it would preclude any question arising by reason of the death of the assignor. Therefore, in the corresponding cases before the Judicature Act there was no objection to this being done. It seems to me clear that that was the intention of the parties in this case, and I can see no objection to it. The deed was intended to pass the legal property in the debts and it did so. I am aware that we may be opening the door to a new course of business. Whether that will be convenient or not is not for us to say. The court must not weigh the balance of conveniences. In the present case the defendant would be in no better position if he were sued in a number of actions in the county court instead of being sued in one action in the High Court.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

LOPES, L.J.—I concur. In my opinion this is an absolute assignment within section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873. The deed is in form an absolute assignment, and it passed the legal right to the choses in action to the assignee. That being so, it comes within the section, all the requirements of the section having been complied with, and the plaintiff is entitled to sue. I was at first impressed during the argument with the possible inconvenience of so holding, especially in the case of universities. But upon reflection I cannot see the inconvenience. The defendant in this case will be better off than if he were sued in a number of actions in the county court. Moreover the same result might be achieved, though not so effectively, by means of a power of attorney.

Application refused.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Clement Cheese & Green.

Solicitor for the defendant, J. A. Hales.

From Q. B. Div. April 15.

LEVASSEUR AND ANOTHER v. MASON & BARRY (LIMITED). (a.)

Practice—Receiver—Receivership order obtained by judgment creditor—Effect of—Foreign bankruptcy.

The defendants having recovered judgment against a French company, domiciled and carrying on business in France, an order was made, on the ex parte application of the defendants, for the appointment of a receiver to receive the interest of the French company in certain copper belonging to the company in the possession of persons in England who had a lien upon it. Shortly afterwards a decree of judicial liquidation was pronounced by the French court against the company, and the plaintiffs were appointed liquidators. The copper was then sold, and the proceeds, after discharging the lien, were paid into court. In an interpleader issue to determine the right to the proceeds,

Held (affirming the judgment of Day, J.), that the effect of the receivership order was to give the defendants a title to the copper or its proceeds at the date when the order was made, subject to the lien and to any prior claims upon the copper; and that, as the title of the plaintiffs arose subsequent to that order, the defendants were entitled, as against them, to the proceeds.

Appeal from the judgment of Day, J., in favour of the defendants upon an interpleader issue.

The plaintiffs were the liquidators of the Société des Métaux, a company domiciled and carrying on business in France, and the question in the issue was whether the plaintiffs or the defendants were entitled to a sum of £9,468 paid into court.

On the 4th of April, 1889, the defendants recovered judgment in England against the Société des Métaux for £42,090, the price of copper sold and delivered to the société.

On the 8th of April, 1889, the defendants applied ex parte at chambers for and obtained an order appointing a receiver to receive the interest of the société in certain copper belonging to the société in England in the possession of the Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Co. (who claimed a lien upon it for work and labour done), the appointment to operate at once, but to be without prejudice to the rights of any prior incumbrancers, and directing the receiver to pay the balance appearing due on his accounts in or towards satisfaction of what should for the time being be due in respect of the judgment for £42,090. Notice of this order was served on the Tharsis Co. on the 9th of April.

On the 15th of April, 1889, while the copper was still in the possession of the Tharsis Co., a decree of judicial liquidation was pronounced by the French court against the Société des Métaux, and the plaintiffs were appointed judicial liquidators. The liquidators then applied to set aside the receivership order, but the application was refused, the court, however, varying the receivership order by adding thereto a direction that the receiver should not pay out anything received under the order without the direction of the court. This order was affirmed by the Court of Appeal.

On the 11th of May, 1889, the defendants sent in a proof for £42,090. without giving credit for any lien or charge, in the liquidation in France, and the proof was admitted.

The plaintiffs, as liquidators of the société, having claimed the copper subject to the lien of the Tharsis Co., an order was made that the copper should be sold, that the lien of the Tharsis Co. should be satisfied out of the proceeds, and that the balance in the hands of the receiver should be paid into court, and that the present issue should be tried as to whether the plaintiffs or the defendants were entitled to the money in court.

Day, J., held that the defendants were entitled under the receivership order and gave judgment for them.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Sir H. Davey, Q.C., and Kennedy, Q.C. (Tindal Atkinson with them), for the plaintiffs.—The effect of a receivership order is merely to hold the property in medio; no mortgage, charge, or lien was created. Before anything had been done under the order—before any copper had been received, a decree of judicial liquidation was pronounced against the Société des Métaux in France. The property in the copper which was being held in medio under the receivership order vested in the plaintiffs as judicial liquidators. The court had no jurisdiction to make an ex parte order affecting the title to the property. The liquidation in France, which the courts here will recognize, vested the property in the plaintiffs before the defendants had gained any title under the receivership order.

They referred to Ex parte Charrington, 37 W. R. 130, 22 Q. B. D. 187; In re Shephard, 38 W. R. 133, 43 Ch. D. 131; Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-section 8; ord. 50, rr. 15a, et seq.

[They also contended that, upon the evidence as to the French law, the liquidation related back for ten days and avoided the receivership order; and, secondly, that the defendants, by proving for the full amount of their claim in the French liquidation had forfeited their rights under the receivership order.]

Sir C. Russell, Q.C., Finlay, Q.C., and F. W. Hollams, for the defendants, were not called upon.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—This case seems to me to be determinable according to English law. The receivership order, when it was made, must be taken to be an ascertainment or decision by the court that the defendants were entitled to the property, the subject-matter of the order. A receivership order is a process of equitable execution, as it has been called; in other words, it shows that the party obtaining it would be entitled to execution upon the property in question but for some legal impediment standing in the way. In the present case the receivership order was obtained at a date when the French liquidation had not arisen, and, in my opinion, the order must be taken as ascertaining from that date the right of the party obtaining it to the property in question. The defendants were unable to take the property in execution because it was in the possession of persons who had a lien on it. But the right to take it in execution as soon as the legal impediment was removed was determined by the order. When the lien was discharged the right to the copper or its proceeds was complete. [His lordship then said that the difficulties which might have occurred upon the application of the French law did not arise, as he agreed with Day, J., that it was not proved that, according to French law, the French liquidation, which occurred within ten days after the receivership order, related back so as to avoid the receivership order; nor was it proved that, according to French law, the sending in of a proof in the French liquidation was an irrevocable act which forfeited the defendants' rights under the receivership order.] The two points, therefore, upon the French law cannot avail the plaintiffs, and the judgment of Day, J., must be affirmed.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—The present defendants, having recovered judgment against the Société des Métaux, would have been entitled to issue execution against the copper in question if the Tharsis Copper Co. had not had a lien upon it. Before the Judicature Act the judgment creditors would have invoked the assistance of the Court of Chancery, and the court would have appointed a receiver. The receiver would not have been able to obtain the copper until the lien was satisfied, but the moment the lien was satisfied he would obtain possession. The object of the receivership order was to do away with the difficulty of obtaining possession of the goods. Though that is sometimes called equitable execution, in one sense it is not execution at all. It is simply a process to get rid of the difficulty of issuing execution at law. Since the Judicature Act there is no necessity to go to the Court of Chancery. The same court which gives judgment can now make a receivership order, which has the same effect as the receivership order made by the Court of Chancery. The defendants accordingly obtained a receivership order, and subsequently to the order a decree of judicial liquidation was pronounced against the Société des Métaux in France. The liquidators having claimed the copper after the lien upon it had been satisfied, the present issue was directed to be tried. If the French liquidation had occurred before the receivership order was made, the English courts would have recognized the rights of the French liquidators as against the defendants, if the French law vested the property in them. The defendants, however, contend that their rights were settled by the receivership order, and that as that order was prior in date to the French liquidation their rights are superior. That raises the question as to the effect of a receivership order. The receivership order, as I have stated, is made for the purpose of having the property handed over to the judgment creditor when the legal impediment is removed. The order may direct the receiver to receive the property and hand it over to the judgment creditor. The court, however, may hold its hand, and in view of any possible claimants may refrain from making an order to hand over the property. In the present case the court ordered the receiver not to pay out anything received under the order without the direction of the court. But the moment the order is made for the receiver to pay the proceeds to the defendants that order relates back to the date when the receivership order was made. That date was prior to the French liquidation, and the receivership order takes effect from that date. Unless, therefore, the two points taken by the plaintiffs upon the French law are made out, the defendants' rights have priority. [His lordship then said that he agreed with Day, J., that upon the evidence it was not proved that the French law was as contended for by the plaintiffs; and that if the French law had been as contended for, a serious question would have arisen whether the English courts would give effect to that law.]

FRY, L.J.—The defendants would have had a right of immediate execution under their judgment against the copper in question if it had not been for the lien of the Tharsis Copper Co. The receivership order was then obtained, which, as amended, directed that the receiver should not pay anything received by him without the direction of the court. No doubt down to the present time no direction to pay has been given, but the question is whether that direction ought not to be given, because, if so, the court must deal with it as though it had been given. It is not contended that, as matters stood on the 8th of April, the defendants had not a perfect right to this receivership order and to the payment of the moneys received by the receiver under it. It seems to me to make no difference that this is a receivership order made in the action instead of what would have been the case if it had been made under the old proceedings in Chancery before the Judicature Act. Then, as now, such an order was only made in the event of the judgment creditor proving a primâ facie title to execution against the goods of the judgment debtor at the date when the receivership order was made. Although under the old practice the cause was brought to a hearing, and a direction then given as to the moneys received, the court went back to the date of the appointment of the receiver, and considered who at that time was entitled to the moneys—in other words, who was entitled to execution at that time. In such a chancery suit the only question to be determined was, who was entitled at the time of the appointment of the receiver? It is not denied that according to English law the defendants would have been entitled to execution upon this copper, had it not been for the legal impediment in the way. It follows that they were entitled in equity to the proceeds of those goods, as soon as the legal impediment was removed, as from the date of the appointment of the receiver. In my opinion it makes no difference that in this case the receivership order does not direct payment. I agree with the argument that until the order for payment is made the receiver holds the property in medio; but when the court comes to determine the ultimate rights of the parties it must have regard to the question whether or not the defendants had, at the date of the appointment of the receiver, a right to the receivership order. If they had, they are entitled to the moneys; if they had not, they are not entitled. That seems to me to be the effect of the receivership order according to English law. [His lordship then said that he was unable to differ from the findings of Day, J., upon the two points raised upon the French law. If the French law had been proved as asserted, the court would have had to consider whether it would recognize and give effect to that law on those points.]

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Murray, Hutchins, & Stirling.

Solicitors for the defendants, Hollams, Sons, Coward, & Hawksley.

From Chan. Div. April 30.

GEDYE v. COMMISSIONERS OF HER MAJESTY'S WORKS AND PUBLIC BUILDINGS. (a.)

Lands Clauses Consolidation Act—Compulsory taking of land—Payment of purchase-money into court—Payment out to person in possession—Land sold as freehold—Leasehold title adduced—Absence of claim by reversioner—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 79.

G., whose house had been compulsorily taken in 1865, by a public body in pursuance of powers conferred upon them by Acts of Parliament, had claimed to be the owner of the house in fee, but could only adduce a title to the residue of a long term of years expiring in 1878, and the purchasers paid into court a sum representing the value of the reversion in fee. G., after the expiration of twelve years from the end of the term, claimed to be entitled to have the money in court paid to him (he having already received the value of the leasehold interest) as being the person "in possession" of the house within the meaning of section 79 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, it not being known who the reversioner was.

Held, that G., never having been in possession of the reversion, was not so entitled.

Ex parte Chamberlain, 28 W. R. 565, 14 Ch. D. 323, doubted.

Decision of North, J. (35 S. J. 295), affirmed.

Appeal from North, J.

This was an appeal by an assignee of the plaintiff from a decision of North, J., refusing an application for the payment out to him of a fund in court, under the following circumstances:—

The plaintiff, Gedye, purchased a house, No. 13, Clement's-lane, in 1856, which was assigned to him on the 6th of May in that year.

At the time of the purchase it was stated by Gedye's vendor that his title was derived under a long term of years, the exact date of the commencement of which was not known, but that there was a recital in an old deed to the effect that at Michaelmas, 1771, the term had still 107 years to run. The house was assigned to Gedye for the residue of the term, and for all other the interest of the vendor (if any).

For many years previously Gedye's predecessors in title had paid no rent for the house, and after his purchase no rent was ever paid. It was not known who the reversioner was.

Under these circumstances Gedye believed that he would, by virtue of the Statute of Limitations, become the absolute owner of the house in fee simple, and he acted as if he were the absolute owner by granting a lease of the house to a tenant for a term of twenty-one years from Michaelmas, 1863, which extended six years beyond his own term.

Under the Courts of Justice Concentration (Site) Act, the defendant commissioners were empowered to acquire certain property, including Gedye's house, for the purpose of a site for the concentrated courts of justice; and with this Act the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, was incorporated.

The commissioners gave notice to Gedye that they required to take his house. He sent in a claim for compensation on the footing of his being the owner of the house in fee, and on the 23rd of April, 1866, the compensation was assessed by a jury at £1,205.

On the 13th of October, 1866, Gedye sent an abstract of his title to the commissioners' solicitors. In the course of investigating this title, and the title to some adjoining houses, which had also been taken by the commissioners, the solicitors discovered that in July, 1578, a plot of land, upon which Gedye's house and some adjoining houses were afterwards erected, was demised by one Clifton to one Crouch for the term of 300 years from the 24th of June, 1578, at the annual rent of £5 for the whole plot. A claim for compensation was sent in to the commissioners on behalf of some persons who alleged that they were the owners of the reversion in fee subject to the lease, but the claim was not prosecuted.

The commissioners declined to pay Gedye the amount which had been assessed as compensation on the footing of his being the owner of the house in fee, and in 1867 he commenced this suit in the Court of Chancery, claiming the specific performance of the contract by the commissioners for the purchase of his house.

On the 9th of March, 1869, on the further consideration of the suit, an order was made (by consent, and without prejudice to the plaintiff's claim to the reversion) that the value of the plaintiff's leasehold interest in the house should be taken to be £500, and that on payment of this sum to him he should assign his leasehold interest to the commissioners; and it was further ordered that the commissioners should, on or before the 30th of April, 1869, pay into court the sum of £705 as the value of the reversion in fee simple expectant on the determination of the plaintiff's term. The £705 was to be invested and the dividends accumulated.

On the 22nd of March, 1869, the commissioners paid the £705 into court, and executed a deed poll under section 77 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, vesting the reversion in themselves.

In 1890 a person to whom Gedye had assigned his interest applied by a summons in the suit, asking that the fund in court, which had arisen from the investment of the £705 and the accumulation of the dividends thereon, might be paid to him.

Since the expiration of the term of 300 years in June, 1878, no claim had been made to the reversion in fee of the house.

This summons was heard by North, J., on the 2nd of February, 1891.

North, J., held that the applicant had not made out any title to the reversion. The term had expired and Gedye had been paid for his interest in it. Neither Gedye nor the applicant ever had any inchoate title by possession of the reversion, and, therefore, such a case as Ex parte Chamberlain, 28 W. R. 565, 14 Ch. D. 323, did not apply. The claimant had never had any possession of the reversion, actually or constructively. He had been in possession only as termor.

From that decision the claimant now appealed.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Borthwick, for the appellant.—By virtue of section 79 of the Land Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, the appellant would have been entitled, and here the order for payment out in respect of the leasehold interest was made expressly by consent and without prejudice to his claim. He ought to be in the same position as the owner of the fee, it being reasonably clear that he would have become entitled to it.

(a.) Reported by H. M. CHARTERS MACPHERSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They cited Ex parte Winder, 25 W. R. 768, 6 Ch. D. 696, and Ex parte Chamberlain.

Vaughan Hawkins, for the respondents, was not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J.—This is an ingenious attempt by the appellant to get what does not belong to him. Mr. Gedye was entitled to the unexpired residue of a long term, which would run out in 1878. In 1864, regarding himself as owner in fee, he granted a lease of the property for twenty-one years; but in 1865, before the expiry of his term, the land was compulsorily sold under the Lands Clauses Act, when it was clearly found that he had a title to the unexpired term only, and not to the fee. The value of the fee simple was found to be £1,205, of which a sum of £500 was paid to him as representing the leasehold interest, and £705 was paid into court as the value of the reversion in fee. Some further time has elapsed, and no reversioner has appeared, and this sum in court is now claimed by this applicant, who has no more right to it than I have, under section 79 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, for he has clearly no common law right to it whatever.

This section runs thus: "If any question arise respecting the title to the lands in respect whereof such moneys shall have been so paid or deposited as aforesaid, the parties respectively in possession of such lands, as being the owners thereof, or in receipt of the rents of such lands, as being entitled thereto at the time of such lands being purchased or taken, shall be deemed to have been lawfully entitled to such lands until the contrary be shown to the satisfaction of the court; and, unless the contrary be shown as aforesaid, the parties so in possession, and all parties claiming under them, or consistently with their possession, shall be deemed entitled to the money so deposited, and to the dividends or interest of the annuities or securities purchased therewith, and the same shall be paid and applied accordingly."

Now the appellant clearly is not, and never was, in a position to bring himself within this section, for Mr. Gedye was not in possession as owner in fee, but as a termor. It has been decided by Hall, V.C., in Ex parte Winder, that a party in possession, and against whom no claim is made till after the expiration of twenty years from the time of his taking possession, was entitled to the purchase-money for the fee simple, the land having been taken compulsorily by a railway company. In Ex parte Chamberlain Bacon, V.C., went further, and I doubt whether the evidence of possession in that case was sufficient to justify the decision. But be that as it may, Mr. Gedye was never in possession as owner. The appeal must be dismissed.

BOWEN, L.J.—The claimant has no more claim to the reversion than I have, except on the ground that, if things had gone otherwise, Mr. Gedye (his assignor) might have stayed on after his lease had expired, and after twelve years of possession by wrong, that wrong might have ripened into right, there being possibly no persons who could establish their right to the reversion. But all this never happened, and one finds here merely an expectation which has never been realized. I gravely doubt the correctness of the decision in Ex parte Chamberlain.

KAY, L.J.—The appellant says that it makes a difference in this case that the sale of the interest was not a voluntary one. It is the first time that I have heard that this Act alters the rights and title of a vendor under it. Section 79 simply provides that the party in possession is to be entitled to the purchase-money if someone else does not make out a better title to the property; but it cannot give the fee simple to a leaseholder. Mr. Gedye never had that possession which could ripen into a fee simple.

Solicitors, C. M. Hotson; The Solicitor to the Treasury.

From Chan. Div. Feb. 25.

DANIEL v. FERGUSON. (a.)

Injunction—Mandatory injunction—Altering status quo after notice of motion for injunction.

The defendant in a light and air case, after receiving notice of motion for an interlocutory injunction, put on a number of men, who worked night and day, and ran up his building to a height of nearly forty feet before he received notice that an injunction had been granted against him.

Held (affirming the decision of Stirling, J.), that he ought to be ordered to restore the status quo ante by pulling down the building at once, without reference to the question, to be decided at the trial, whether the plaintiff was entitled to the access of light and air which he claimed.

Appeal from Stirling, J.

The action was to restrain the defendant from building so as to diminish the plaintiff's access of light and air.

It appeared that the plaintiff was the leaseholder on long terms of years of three adjoining houses in Hereford-road, Bayswater, and that in September, 1890, the defendant was preparing to erect on an adjoining plot of ground a large building which the plaintiff considered would diminish the access of light and air to his houses. The plaintiff accordingly issued his writ, and with it, on Saturday, November 29, by leave of the court, served on the defendant a notice of motion for an interlocutory injunction for the following Friday. Within two hours from the receipt of that notice the defendant put on a large gang of men, who, by working all Saturday afternoon and through the night, and the greater part of Sunday and Monday, ran up a wall on the plot of ground adjoining the plaintiff's houses to a height of thirty-nine feet. The plaintiff, hearing of what was being done, applied on the Monday ex parte for an interim injunction till the following Friday. That was granted, and it was not till receipt of notice of that injunction that the defendant ceased building up the wall.

When the motion for the interlocutory injunction came on before Stirling, J., it was shown that the access of light to the plaintiff's houses would be materially diminished by the defendant's building, but the defendant contended that the plaintiff had no right to the access of light and air which he claimed.

It appeared from the evidence that the plot of ground on which the defendant was now building had been demised by one Jenkins, in 1841, to James Bott for a term of eighty years, and had been sub-leased by him, in 1860, for a term of sixty years. In 1866 Bott died, and in 1884 the residue of the eighty years term, which had remained in his executors in the meantime, was assigned to the predecessors in title of Ferguson, the defendant, and they had since acquired also both the residue of the sixty years' term and the fee. It further appeared that the land on which the plaintiff's houses stood had been demised in

(a.) Reported by R. H. DEANE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

1854 to the same James Bott by the trustees of the Bishop of London's Paddington Estate, and that this term also had remained vested successively in Bott and his executors till the year 1882. At that date it became the property of the plaintiff's predecessor in title.

Upon that state of facts the defendant contended that there had been a unity of interest in the two properties existing in James Bott and his executors from 1854 to 1882 which prevented or suspended the acquisition by prescription of any right to access of light and air to the plaintiff's houses.

Stirling, J., granted an injunction to restrain the defendant until judgment or further order from building so as to darken the light of the plaintiff's houses, and from permitting the wall which had been run up in the manner described to remain on the defendant's land.

The defendant appealed from that order.

Horace Kent, for the appellant.—There was such a unity of interest in Bott as to prevent the Prescription Act applying: Clay v. Thackrah, 9 Car. & P. 47. The authorities are clear that where there is unity of possession no easement of light can be acquired. Bott could not acquire an easement over land leased to himself, though it was not in his own occupation. [KAY, L.J.—You would have had no right to build as against the Bishop of London, and, therefore, there was no unity of interest for all intents and purposes.] A tenant cannot acquire rights by prescription as against his landlord: Outram v. Maude, 29 W. R. 818, 17 Ch. D. 391. Every interest in Jenkins's land is now vested in the appellant, including the sublease to Underwood for sixty years, as well as Bott's underlease from Jenkins, and the fee. The plaintiff has only got seven years' prescription. The cases show that unity of interest without actual possession is sufficient, though no doubt if the right has been already acquired it is only suspended, and not destroyed, even by unity of possession: Simper v. Foley, 2 J. & H. 555, 10 W. R. Ch. Dig. 23. But here it had not been acquired. At all events a mandatory injunction to pull down will not be granted on an interlocutory application.

Buckley, Q.C., and Frank Watson, for the respondent, were not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I think this appeal should be dismissed without going into the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to the access of light which he claims. It is admitted that his lights are ancient, but it seems that there is some question whether there has not been a unity of possession such as to prevent his acquiring the easement he claims. The plaintiff asked for an injunction in order that the status quo might be maintained until the trial, and he made out a primâ facie case entitling him to what he asked. Thereupon the defendant, having received notice that the plaintiff was going to ask for such an injunction, puts on a gang of men and runs up a wall thirty-nine feet high between receipt of that notice on Saturday morning and receipt of notice of the granting of an interim injunction on the following Monday. Under those circumstances I think the judge was quite right to make an order to preserve the matter as it was when the defendant received the notice of motion. I should not think it right to say anything, to throw the slightest doubt on the right of the court to order a building to be pulled down in such a case.

KAY, L.J.—I quite agree. There will be questions of some nicety to be decided at the trial, but this is not the time to decide them. After the defendant had had notice that the plaintiff was going to apply for an injunction, he determined to alter the status quo before the matter came into court, and accordingly he put on a gang of men to work all through Saturday night and the greater part of Sunday and Monday so that by the time he received notice that an interim injunction had been obtained against him he had run up the wall to the height of thirty-nine feet. Now, whether he turns out at the trial to be right or wrong on the merits, he ought to be ordered to pull down that wall on the ground that in doing what he did, he was endeavouring to make it difficult for the court to preserve the status quo. He was trading on the supposed reluctance of the court to order a building once erected to be pulled down. I have always thought that such conduct ought to be dealt with severely. If we altered the order under appeal it would encourage other people to act in that way, because they would say the court was reluctant to order buildings to be pulled down. I am not at all reluctant to order this wall to be pulled down whatever the result of the case may be at the trial. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Hatt & Co.

Solicitor for the respondent, G. Cheesman.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } April 15, 21.
Chitty, J. }

COXON v. GORST. (a.)

Company—Winding up—Order for dissolution—Action by creditors against late directors—Fraud—Companies Act, 1862, s. 111.

After a company has been completely wound up, and an order for dissolution of the company obtained, a creditor, in the absence of fraud, has no cause of action against the late directors to recover assets alleged not to have been got in pending the winding up.

Motion.

The plaintiff was a creditor of a company, which had been ordered to be wound up, at the date of the winding up. The liquidator had obtained an order under section 111 of the Companies Act, 1862, dissolving the company.

The plaintiff commenced an action against the directors and the official liquidator. The statement of claim alleged that the directors had made payments of dividends out of capital and had received part thereof for themselves, and other matters; the object of the action being to recover assets of the late company not got in during the winding up, and to have such assets distributed among the plaintiff and the other creditors of the company.

The defendants in their defence denied the allegations in the statement of claim, and stated that the company had been completely wound up, and that all its available assets had been got in and accounted for.

The defendants now moved that the statement of claim might be struck out, on the ground that it disclosed no reasonable cause of action.

Byrne, Q.C., and Stack, for the motion, referred to In re Pinto Silver Mining Co., 26 W. R. 622, 8 Ch. D. 273; In re London and Caledonian Marine Insurance

(a.) Reported by V. DE S. FOWKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Co., 27 W. R. 713, 11 Ch. D. 140; Mills v. Northern Railway of Buenos Ayres Co., 19 W. R. 171, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 621; The Companies Act, 1862. s. 142; The Companies Act, 1880, s. 7, sub-section (4).

C. Macnaghten (Byrne, Q.C., with him), for directors in the same interest.

Farwell, Q.C., and Hamilton, for the plaintiff.—The dissolution of a company does not deprive the court of its jurisdiction over the company: In re Crookhaven Mining Co., 15 W. R. 28, L. R. 3 Eq. 69; Evans v. Coventry, 8 De G. M. & G. 835, 5 W. R. Ch. Dig. 40; In re National Funds Assurance Co., 27 W. R. 302, 10 Ch. D. 118; Cavendish Bentinck v. Fenn, 36 W. R. 641, 12 App. Cas. 652.

Byrne, Q.C., replied.

CHITTY, J.—This action may be disposed of on the short ground that it is barred by the order of the court in the winding up whereby the company was dissolved. The plaintiff purports to sue on behalf of himself and all other the creditors of the company. This is obviously wrong, the company has ceased to exist. If this were a matter of form only it could be remedied by amendment, but it is a matter of substance. The defendants are, persons who had been or were directors of the company previously to or at the date of the order to wind up, and the person who was the official liquidator of the company down to the order dissolving the company.

The object of the action is to recover assets of the late company alleged not to have been got in pending the winding up, and to have such assets distributed among the plaintiff, and the others on whose behalf he is suing. In other words, it is an action for a further and complete winding up of the affairs of the company.

The assets sought to be recovered are the sums alleged to have been wrongfully paid by the directors out of capital by way of dividends. In fairness to them it ought to be stated that they are not charged with fraud in making the alleged payments, the only charge against them is that they did not take proper precautions before the dividend was paid to ascertain that the capital was left intact. Such a claim might have been made in the winding up under the 165th section of the Act of 1862. So far as anything to the contrary appears in the statement of claim, the question of the liability of the directors may have been duly considered in the winding up. No relief is sought against the late liquidator except possible costs.

Such, then, is the relief sought in an action in which an attempt is made to impeach the order dissolving the company. The only allegation against the order is the immaterial statement that it was made without the knowledge or consent of an informal committee of creditors, who had no authority by statute or otherwise. Where a voluntary winding up of the company had been dissolved pursuant to section 142 of the Companies Act, 1862, it has been decided by the Court of Appeal that the court has no jurisdiction to make an order on petition for winding up by the court unless the dissolution can be impeached on the ground of fraud: In re Pinto Silver Mining Co.; In re London and Caledonian Marine Insurance Co. These decisions apply in full force to a dissolution by order of the court in a winding up by the court. Consequently, the plaintiff, who does not even allege fraud, cannot proceed by petition for a discharge of the order of dissolution, and for a continuance of the winding up by the court. But it is argued that he is at liberty to proceed by an action in which he does not impeach the order of dissolution. In my opinion, he cannot. Putting fraud aside, the creditors of a company are bound by the proceedings in a winding up, and the orders made therein. The 111th section of the Companies Act, 1862, enacts that "when the affairs of the company have been completely wound up, the court shall make an order that the company be dissolved from the date of such order, and the company shall be dissolved accordingly." The 66th rule of the General Orders of November, 1862, directs that when the official liquidator has passed his final account, and the balance (if any) due thereon has been paid, a certificate shall be made by the chief clerk that the affairs of the company have been completely wound up, and that in case the company has not been already dissolved the official liquidator shall, immediately after such certificate shall become binding, apply to the judge for an order that the company be dissolved from the date of the order. The statement of claim does not mention any certificate, but it must be presumed, in the absence of any statement to the contrary, that the order for dissolution in this case was rightly obtained.

According to the authorities above cited a creditor cannot deny that the affairs of the company have been fully wound up where the dissolution is a voluntary winding up under section 142 and no fraud is alleged. A fortiori he cannot do so where the dissolution is in a winding up by the court and no fraud is alleged. The plaintiff, therefore, being bound by the order, cannot be permitted, whatever be the form of his proceeding, whether by action or petition, to allege that the winding up is not complete. I must not be supposed to assent to the argument that a creditor can proceed by action to recover from directors capital wrongfully paid away in the shape of dividends where the company still exists; but, assuming, notwithstanding Lord Hatherley's decision in Mills v. Northern Railway of Buenos Ayres Co., that he can, and assuming that the principle of the decision in Evans v. Coventry, where the plaintiff, as one of the assured, had a contract affecting the capital of the insurance company or partnership, would apply, I am of opinion that no such action can be maintained where the company has been dissolved. The plaintiff cannot sue without making the company a party, and the existence of the company having been put an end to by the operation of the statute, he cannot sue at all; where the company still exists the capital wrongfully paid away would have to be restored to the company's coffers, if it was a going concern, or paid to the official liquidator or into court if the company was being wound up by the court.

The statement of claim contains an allegation, possibly with a view to get over this difficulty, to the effect that the right to recover the amount alleged to have been wrongfully paid away is a chose in action which, on the dissolution of the company, passed to the creditors. This supposed vesting in the creditors of the company's chose in action is a mere fiction, with nothing in the statute to support it, and is in the teeth of the provisions of the statute.

The result is that the affairs of this company have been completely wound up, and the company itself has been duly dissolved. Consequently the amended statement of claim discloses no reasonable cause of action, and the action must be dismissed as against the moving defendants, with costs.

Solicitors, Turnbull, Tilly, & Mousir; Newman, Hays, & Co.; Bedford, Monier Williams, & Robinson.

Chan. Div. } Jan. 23, 28, 29; Feb. 17.
Chitty, J. }

PERRY v. EAMES.
SALAMAN v. EAMES.
MERCERS' COMPANY v. EAMES. (a.)

Easement—Ancient lights—Crown—Crown land—Sale by trustees—Prerogative—Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), ss. 1-3.

Land was held in trust for the Crown from a period prior to the Prescription Act. The Crown is not named in section 3 of that Act.

Held, that no prescriptive right to the access of light over the land to adjoining buildings had been acquired against the Crown during its beneficial ownership, although the legal estate therein was not vested in the Crown, and that purchasers from the Crown were entitled to build thereon so as to interfere with the access of light.

Motion treated as trial of action.

In the year 1820 the site of the old Bankruptcy Court in Basinghall-street was purchased by the Government out of moneys provided by Parliament, and was conveyed to trustees for the Crown.

The conveyance was confirmed by an Act passed in the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 115. The buildings were then erected and used for the purposes mentioned in the Act.

In 1886 the site was sold to the Corporation of the City of London by the Crown, and in 1890 became vested in the defendant Eames under a building agreement from the Corporation of the City of London.

The defendant commenced to erect buildings on the site which obstructed the access of light to windows in opposite buildings belonging to the plaintiffs, and these actions were brought for an injunction to restrain such buildings.

By consent of all parties these motions were treated as the trials of the actions so far as the question of law was concerned, which was whether the plaintiffs could claim any prescriptive right to access of light over the site of the old Bankruptcy Court prior to the year 1886, the court having been Crown property from 1820 to 1886.

Whitehorne, Q.C., and W. F. Hamilton, for the defendant, referred to Mersey Docks v. Cameron, 13 W. R. 1069, 11 H. L. Cas. 443; Reg. v. McCann, 16 W. R. 397, L. R. 3 Q. B. 141; Ex parte Postmaster-General, 27 W. R. 325, 10 Ch. D. 595; Corporation of Weymouth v. Nugent, 13 W. R. 338, 6 B. & S. 22; Chitty on Prerogative, p. 383; Corporation of Yarmouth v. Simmons, 26 W. R. 802, 10 Ch. D. 518; In re Oriental Bank Corporation, 28 Ch. D. 643, 33 W. R. Dig. 47; Magdalen College case, 11 Rep. 74b; Wynstanley v. Lee, 2 Swans. 333.

Seward Brice, Q.C., Byrne, Q.C., Stokes, Beaumont, and Butcher, for the plaintiffs in the different actions, referred to Sharp v. St. Sauveur, 20 W. R. 269, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 343; Barrow v. Wadkin, 5 W. R. 695, 24 Beav. 1; Hawley v. Steele, 6 Ch. D. 521, 26 W. R. Dig. 76; In re Wood's Estate, 34 W. R. 375, 31 Ch. D. 607; Kinloch v. Secretary of State for India, 30 W. R. 845, 7 App. Cas. 619; Maxwell on Statutes, 2nd ed., p. 165; Staunforde on the King's Prerogative, pp. 42, 43; Chitty on the King's Prerogative, pp. 380, 382, 383.

Whitehorne, Q.C., replied.

CHITTY, J.—It appears that there are several Government buildings held in trust for the Crown under modern statutes. For instance, the General Post Office is vested in the Postmaster-General in trust for her Majesty. The decision in these cases has, therefore, an importance extending beyond the interests of the parties engaged in the litigation.

The plaintiffs claim a right of access of light to their dwelling-houses over the site of the old Bankruptcy Court in Basinghall-street, in the City of London, subject only to the obstruction which was caused by the former building. The site of the court was purchased in 1820, and the building was shortly after erected thereon; the money required for the purchase and the erection of the building being provided by Parliament. On the 23rd of April, 1820, the site was conveyed to five subjects nominated by the Crown as trustees, and the conveyance was made to them in fee in trust for his Majesty and his successors, and to the intent and purpose only that certain buildings might be erected on the said ground for the meetings of the Commissioners of Bankruptcy, and for transaction of business in bankruptcy. The conveyance was confirmed by the public statute 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 115. The 4th section enacted that the ground and buildings should thenceforth be vested in the five trustees named in trust for his Majesty, his heirs and successors, to the intent that the ground and buildings erected, or to be erected, thereon might for ever thereafter be used and applied for the purposes and in the manner described in the Act (that is, putting it shortly, for the purposes of the Court of Bankruptcy), subject to such rules respecting the use thereof as the Lord Chancellor might make, and for no other purposes. By the 60th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1849, the ground and building were vested in the Commissioners of the Court for the time being for the purposes of the Act. This left the Crown's title as beneficial owner unaffected. By the 68th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, the ground and building were vested in the Commissioners of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, and it was enacted that the same should be appropriated to such purposes as the Lord Chancellor should direct. This enactment also left the Crown's equitable title unaffected, unless and until the Lord Chancellor directed that the property should be appropriated to some purposes other than those to which the property had been previously dedicated. Even apart from the trust for the Crown in the conveyance and the statute of Geo. 4, it cannot be doubted that where property is held for such public purposes as those described in the above Acts the equitable title is in the Crown. The building was used for the purposes of the Court of Bankruptcy until after the passing of the Act of 1861, and also until it was sold and conveyed in 1886 to the Corporation of London pursuant to a direction of the Lord Chancellor in exercise of the power conferred on him by the 68th section of the Act, 1861. On the execution of this conveyance the Crown's title was divested. The Crown's title thus continued down to the conveyance in 1886. The defendant claims under this conveyance. The result is, that from 1820 to 1886—a period of sixty-six years—the legal estate was vested in trustees who were subjects and mere depositories of the legal estate, but the sole equitable ownership was in the Crown for the public purposes of the Acts, and during the same period the Crown had, by its minister of justice and other officers, the sole and exclusive possession of the property.

The plaintiffs claim the access of light under the 3rd section of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, the Act for shortening the time of prescription in certain cases, which came into operation on the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1832. The Crown is not named in that section, but is named in the 1st and 2nd sections.

(a.) Reported by V. DE S. FOWKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Therefore, regard being had to the general rule that the Crown is not bound by a statute unless named, a very strong case arises for holding that the Crown is not bound by the 3rd section. It was, however, argued for the plaintiff that the Crown is bound by necessary implication because the servient tenement is not mentioned in the 3rd section. I am unable to follow this argument. It is true that the servient tenement is not expressly mentioned in the section, although it is referred to by the words "any local usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding," words which apply to the servient tenement only. But it appears to me to be a wholly immaterial circumstance whether the servient tenement is mentioned or not. It is not a circumstance from which any intention on the part of the Legislature to bind the Crown can be inferred, much less is it sufficient to raise a necessary implication or to support an irresistible inference of intention to bind the Crown. I hold, then, that the Crown is not bound by the 3rd section.

It was further argued for the plaintiffs that the right to light, falls within the meaning of the terms "or other easement" in the 2nd section, in which the Crown is named, and in support of this argument the observations of Lord Selborne in Dalton v. Angus, 30 W. R., at p. 208, were cited. But although Lord Selborne was of opinion that the right of support in the case of two adjoining buildings, a right he considered to be an easement not purely negative, fell within the 2nd section, he did not say that the negative right to light was within that section, nor is there anything in his observations to justify an argument that he held any such opinion. To whatever other easements the terms of the 2nd section may extend, it is, I think, clear that they do not include light. The statute places the acquisition of the right to access of light upon a footing entirely different from that on which it rests the other incorporeal hereditaments with which it deals. The right to light is dealt with exclusively by the 3rd section, and the subsequent ancillary sections, such as the 4th, which defines the period of twenty years and what is meant by interruption. The right to light, as between subject and subject, is acquired indefeasibly by simple enjoyment for the statutory period of twenty years without the statutory interruption, unless the enjoyment be by consent or agreement expressly made or given by deed or writing.

If the 3rd section is contrasted with the 2nd section it will be found that the only reason that can be suggested for including light in the 2nd section is to bind the Crown. As between subjects, the 3rd section covers more, and more than covers all the ground of the 2nd section, and would be an unnecessary and superfluous enactment in regard to light. The language of the 2nd section ought not to be construed to include light merely for the purpose of binding the Crown. The 3rd section with its ancillary sections constitute the entire statutory code as to light, and provides a simpler mode for the acquisition of light than the other sections of the Act do for the acquisitions of other easements of rights. The statute has been in operation for considerably more than half a century, and hitherto no one, so far as I am aware, has ever contended that light falls within the 2nd section.

The plaintiffs further contended that previously to the conveyance of 1820 the right of light to their tenements had been acquired by prescription at the common law, or that a lost grant ought to be presumed, so that when the Crown acquired its title to the site of the Bankruptcy Court the site was already subject to the servitude of light which they claim. But according to the evidence put in on behalf of the plaintiff Salaman, there was standing thereon an ancient building. The evidence is to the following effect:—

In 1398 there was standing on the ground a building called "Blackwell Hall," which belonged to King Richard II. This building was then sold by the king to the Corporation of London. In 1658 the hall was rebuilt, in 1666 it was destroyed in the Great Fire, in 1672 it was again rebuilt on the same site, the building standing on the ground was used from 1398 to 1820 by the corporation as the cloth hall. This evidence is fatal to the plaintiff Salaman for a reason presently to be mentioned.

From the statute of Geo. 4 it appears that the ground comprised in the conveyance of 1820 included part of the site of the ancient cloth market of Black well Hall or the buildings belonging thereto, and that other part thereof was the site or part of the site of two messuages in Basinghall-street. The result, then, is that in 1820 the defendant's site was occupied by the ancient tenement of the cloth hall or market, and by other messuages which, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, must be presumed to be ancient. To these tenements the custom of the City of London extended, which custom was that a man might rebuild his house or other edifice upon the ancient foundation to what height he pleased, though thereby the ancient windows or light of the adjoining or opposite houses were obstructed, if there were no agreement in writing to the contrary: Wynstanley v. Lee. The plaintiffs' houses have been rebuilt in recent times, and evidence was given for the purpose of showing that parts of their windows are in the same position as the lights of the houses which previously stood upon their ground. Some evidence is given on behalf of the plaintiff Salaman with a view to show that his lights were ancient; the evidence, however, is for the most part conjectural, and of an unsatisfactory character. But assuming that it would in the ordinary course be sufficient to raise a case upon which a jury might find that the light had been enjoyed from time immemorial, or that a lost grant ought to be presumed, there is a short answer in point of law which is fatal to any such claim in all the cases before me. The presumption of any such right from twenty years' enjoyment previously to 1820 is excluded by the custom of the City of London; to allow any such presumption would be to destroy the custom: Wynstanley v. Lee. The same answer applies with equal force to the period of twenty years which elapsed down to the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1832, when the Act of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, came into operation. Curiously the custom of London as to light is not simply abolished by that statute, but it is abolished merely for the purposes of the 3rd section. The plaintiffs cannot, therefore, maintain their claim to light by prescription from time immemorial or as founded on a supposed lost grant. This claim is defeated by considerations wholly independent of the royal prerogative and the passage cited from Staunforde on the King's Prerogative if a correct statement of the law is irrelevant.

The argument for the plaintiffs, then, turned back to the 3rd section. It was contended that, although the section might not apply where the legal estate was vested in the Crown, it does apply where the legal estate is held by subjects in trust for the Crown. In support of this contention some authorities were cited for the plaintiffs, but none of them really touched the point. One of them was Sharp v. St. Sauveur. All that was decided in that case was that the Crown could enforce in the Court of Chancery a trust of land created for an alien prior to the Naturalization Act, 1870. That has no bearing on the cases before me. In ancient times it was not the practice to vest the legal estate in trustees for the Crown, and thus there is little or no direct ancient authority on the point. The second resolution in the Magdalen College case appears, however, to be large enough to cover it. It was resolved that where the king has any prerogative, estate, right, title, or interest he shall not be barred of them by the general words of an Act of Parliament. There is no reason for confining this resolution to mere legal interests, or for excluding an absolute beneficial ownership in the Crown. In Mersey Docks v. Cameron, a case involving the question of the liability of the Mersey Docks to be rated to the poor under the statute of Elizabeth, Lord Cranworth stated the law as to the exemption of the Crown in the following passage: "The Crown, not being named, is not bound by the Act. It follows, therefore, that land or houses occupied by the Crown, or by servants of the Crown for the purposes of the Crown, are not liable to be rated, and I conceive that it is from a confusion between property occupied for public purposes and property occupied by servants of the Crown that this mistake has arisen. This principle exempts from rates not only royal palaces, but also the offices of the Secretaries of State, the Horse Guards, the Post Office, and many similar buildings. On the same ground police courts, county courts, and even county buildings occupied as lodgings at the assizes for the judges have been held exempt. These decisions, however, have all gone on the ground, more or less sound, that these might be treated as buildings occupied by servants of the Crown and for the Crown, extending in some instances the shield of the Crown to what might more fitly be described as the public government of the country. In none of these cases was exemption conceded on the ground contended for in the present case, and I cannot but think that the error which has crept into the decisions has arisen from confusing cases like the present with those in which the interests of the Crown, through its servants, were directly concerned."

The judgment of Lord Blackburn in Reg. v. McCann (also a rating case) is much to the same effect: at p. 146 he expressly places a trustee for the Crown in the same position as a servant of the Crown. Now, in the cases before me the Crown's absolute beneficial ownership for the purposes of the Act is expressly manifested by a public statute, and it is obvious that the bare legal estate was vested in trustees merely for the purposes of more convenient administration by a department of the Queen's Government. I am of opinion that the prerogative of the Crown takes these cases out of the operation of the 3rd section.

Only one other point remains. It was urged for the plaintiffs that, the defendant's ground being now held by him, a subject, he is not entitled to avail himself of the Crown's rights, and that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs have enjoyed the light for twenty years before this action, their title to the right is indefeasible. But this is only repeating one of the old arguments on the statute in a new form. It would allow the plaintiffs to claim that they were in process of acquiring the right to the light during that part of the twenty years during which the property was in the possession of the Crown. The case must be tried as if the actions had been brought the day after the conveyance of 1886. To hold that the statutory period of twenty years had then run would be to ignore the Crown's rights, and the result would be that the Crown could not dispose of the property for the interest therein to which it was then entitled, or, in other words, that, although the Crown held the property free from the servitude or easement of light, it could not dispose of it except subject to such servitude or easement.

There are, as I understand, other points of facts in dispute in these actions; but it was arranged by counsel that these should not be gone into until after I had given judgment on the above questions of law, and that it would not be necessary to go into them in the event of my judgment being (as it is) adverse to the plaintiffs on the questions argued. Upon the facts as I have stated them giving rise to these questions of law there was no dispute between the parties. The result is that the actions are dismissed, with costs.

Solicitors, Munns & Longden; Emanuel Round & Nathan; Morice & Blakesley; Howard C. Morris.

Chan. Div. North, J. } March 20.

In re HARTLEY.
NUTTALL v. WHITTAKER. (a.)

Practice—Pleading—Non-appearance of defendant—Amendment of writ—Service of amended writ—Rules of Court, 1883, ord. 19, r. 10; ord. 28, r. 10.

When a defendant has made default in appearing to a writ, and the writ is subsequently amended, the amended writ need not be served upon the defendant who has made default in appearance; but filing it at the Central Office is sufficient.

Motion.

The question to be decided was whether, when a writ has been served upon a defendant who has made default in appearance, and the writ is afterwards amended, it is necessary to serve the amended writ upon the defendant in order to obtain judgment against him.

The action was brought by beneficiaries under the will and codicil of Edmund Hartley, deceased, against the trustees thereof. By the original writ, which was issued on the 9th of December, 1890, the plaintiffs claimed that new trustees of the will should be appointed in the place of James Whittaker and Betty Whittaker, two of the defendants; that a receiver should be appointed; and that James Whittaker and Betty Whittaker should be ordered to pay the costs. The writ was served on James Whittaker and Betty Whittaker personally, but they made default in appearance.

On the 19th of December, 1890, the plaintiffs obtained an order for the appointment of a receiver, and also leave to amend the writ.

The writ was accordingly amended by adding, "In the matter of the estate of Edmund Hartley, deceased, to the title of the action; by inserting the words 'and codicil,' after the word 'will,' in the original writ; and by adding a claim for administration of the testator's estate. The amended writ was filed with the proper officer, but was not served on the defendants James Whittaker and Betty Whittaker.

On the 31st of January, 1891, judgment was obtained for the appointment of new trustees of the will and codicil of the testator in the place of the defendants James Whittaker and Betty Whittaker; for the administration of the testator's estate; and that the defendants James Whittaker and Betty Whittaker should pay the costs of the action.

This was a motion by the two defendants James Whittaker and Betty Whittaker for liberty to enter an appearance and defend the action, and that the judgment already obtained might be set aside as irregular, on the ground that the amended writ ought to have been served on them.

(a.) Reported by J. TRUSTRAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

There was an affidavit by the two defendants stating that they had a good defence to the action.

The Rules of Court, 1883, ord. 19, r. 10, provide, "Every pleading or other document required to be delivered to a party, or between parties, shall be delivered in the manner now in use to the solicitor of every party who appears by a solicitor, or to the party if he does not appear by a solicitor, but, if no appearance has been entered for any party, then such pleading or document shall be delivered by being filed with the proper officer."

And ord. 28, r. 10, "Whenever any indorsement or pleading is amended, such amended document shall be delivered to the opposite party within the time allowed for amending the same."

Napier Higgins, Q.C., and Church, for the motion.—The amended writ ought to have been served on the applicants personally: The Cassiopeia, 27 W. R. 703, 4 P. D. 188. A defendant may not appear and defend when a certain claim is made against him, but it does not follow that if that claim is added to he will not appear and defend.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Maidlow, for the plaintiffs.—The decision in the case of The Cassiopeia was given upon the repealed rules of 1875, ord. 28, r. 10, which did not contain the words "indorsement or," which occur in the rule now in force. The amended writ need not have been served upon the applicants who did not appear to the original writ, under the present rules of 1883, ord. 19, r. 10, and ord. 28, r. 10.

They also referred to the Rules of Court, 1883, ord. 16, r. 13, and ord. 67, r. 4.

Napier Higgins, Q.C., replied.

NORTH, J.—I do not think that the proceedings as to the delivery of the amended writ were irregular. I think that rule 10 of order 28 and rule 10 of order 19 apply to the present case. The latter provides that every pleading or other document required to be delivered to a party or between parties shall be delivered to the solicitor of every party, or to every party who does not appear by a solicitor, where appearance has been entered; "but if no appearance has been entered for any party, then such pleading or document shall be delivered by being filed with the proper officer." It is true that that rule does not contain words relating expressly to an indorsement or pleading; but rule 10 of order 28 provides, "Whenever any indorsement or pleading is amended, such amended document shall be delivered to the opposite party within the time allowed for amending the same." I think that these rules were complied with in this case. Some irregularities have been mentioned, but not such as to make a substantial difference.

I am told that the defendants have made an affidavit stating that they have a good defence to the action, and I am willing to allow them to have the judgment set aside, and to give them leave to defend upon the terms that the plaintiffs' costs, from the filing of the amended writ down to and including the trial, and also the costs of subsequent proceedings, including this motion, should, as between the plaintiffs and these defendants, be the plaintiffs' costs in any event. I will add a direction that the account of debts and the proceedings already taken for the purpose of administration be adopted, but that no further proceedings beyond the adjudication on claims be taken without the leave of the judge.

Solicitors, Church; Wynne, Baxter, & Keeble, for Beldon & Ackroyd, Bradford.

Q. B. Div. (Denman and Wills, JJ.) June 12.

LAWRENCE v. NEWBERRY. (a.)

Libel—Publication—Letter applying to plaintiff derogatory remarks made by third person on privileged occasion.

The defendant published in a newspaper, under the heading "Parochial Matters at Eversley," a letter containing the words: "I refer all readers of the letters on this subject to the Primate's speech on the Clergy Discipline Act." The Primate's speech contained serious allegations against an unnamed clergyman. Three paragraphs of the statement of claim in an action for libel brought by the rector of Eversley against the defendant set out the defendant's letter and the portion of the Primate's speech which contained the allegations, and alleged that the defendant intended by his letter that the plaintiff was the object of the Primate's allegations.

Held, upon an application to strike out the three paragraphs, that the matters therein alleged amounted to a publication of a libel by the defendant upon the plaintiff, and disclosed a cause of action.

Appeal from chambers.

This was an appeal from the decision of Henn Collins, J., in chambers, varying the order of a master, and allowing certain paragraphs of the plaintiff's statement of claim to stand.

The action was brought by the rector of the parish of Eversley for libel, and the paragraphs in question were as follows:—

"Paragraph 4.—On or about the 14th day of March, 1891, the defendant falsely and maliciously wrote and published, under the heading 'Parochial Matters at Eversley,' "in a certain newspaper" of and concerning the plaintiff, and in relation to his said profession and office of clergyman of the Church of England and rector of the said parish, the words following, that is to say, 'I refer all readers of the letters on this subject' (meaning parochial matters at Eversley, and the connection of the plaintiff therewith) 'to the Primate's speech on the Clergy Discipline Act.'"

Paragraph 5 set out an extract from the speech of the Primate, and alleged that it was the portion to which the defendant referred in the above letter. The extract contained allegations as to the conduct of a clergyman (without mentioning his name or parish), which would undoubtedly be libellous if written and published concerning a named person without privilege.

"Paragraph 6.—The defendant thereby meant and intended that it should be believed the said portion of the said speech had reference to, and was directed against, the plaintiff, and that he was the person, the object of the Primate's said allegations, and that the said speech was intended to, and did in fact, describe the actions and character of the plaintiff in and about the exercise and performance by him of his said office and profession."

E. U. Bullen, for the defendant.—These paragraphs disclose no cause of action. The letter itself is not libellous, and the reference in it to the Primate's speech is not a publication of that speech. The statement of claim in a libel action must allege facts which, if proved, would amount to a publication.

Bigham, Q.C., and Oswell, for the plaintiff, were not called upon to argue.

DENMAN, J.—I think that Henn Collins, J., took the true view in holding that it is impossible to strike out paragraphs 4, 5, and 6, on the ground that they do not call attention to matters which would make out a charge of libel. The objection made is that the words, "I refer all readers of the letters on this subject to the Primate's speech on the Clergy Discipline Act," are not libellous. What "this subject" is, is explained by the innuendo—"meaning parochial matters at Eversley, and the connection of the plaintiff therewith," and we must assume for the purposes of this decision that there had been previous letters on this subject. The letter not being in itself libellous, but necessarily leading to the perusal of statements which are libellous, can the plaintiff go to the jury on those statements? They were, it is true, made upon a privileged occasion, but it is very old law that the mere fact that libellous words were privileged in the mouth of him who spoke them is not sufficient to justify their re-publication by another. The words used here are clearly libellous: the innuendo says that the defendant has applied them to the plaintiff, and it will be for the jury to say whether that is so. I know of no decision which is exactly in point. Suppose that a man says that A. B. has behaved in such a way that it is sufficient to refer for a description of him to the description of a very wicked person at a certain page of some book. I think that that would be a libel, and if that be admitted I do not think that the fact that the description referred to was given by a person who was privileged in giving it, would exempt the person who referred to it from liability in an action for libel. That disposes of this appeal in favour of the plaintiff, and I think that it ought to be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

WILLS, J.—I am of the same opinion. The innuendo says that the words in the defendant's letter mean that the plaintiff is the person of whom these words were spoken by the Primate. Of course the jury may say that that is a mistake; that will be a question of evidence. If A. B. makes a speech, and someone says of X. Y., "I refer you to what A. B. has said," the only difficulty is in persuading the jury that the meaning is that A. B.'s words apply to X. Y. If the contrary were law it would be easy for any person to libel another by referring to some statement which everyone knew, and liability for libel would be entirely evaded.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the defendant, Stocken & Jupp, for Webb & Lear, Basingstoke.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Withall, Holland, & Withall.

Q. B. Div. [Divsnl. Ct.] (Day and Lawrance, JJ.) May 11.

HIGHWAY BOARD OF THE STOCKPORT AND HYDE DIVISIONS OF THE HUNDRED OF MACCLESFIELD v. COUNTY COUNCIL OF THE COUNTY OF CHESTER. (a.)

Local government — County council — Highway—Road authority—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 3—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 11.

A county council continues to be the road authority under the Tramways Act, 1870, over main roads, notwithstanding a contract made by the county council with a highway board for the repair of such roads by the board.

(a.) Reported by SPENCER L. HOLLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Point of law raised upon the pleadings and set down for hearing before trial under ord. 25, r. 2.

On the 6th of September, 1889, the County Council of Cheshire contracted with the Highway Board for the Stockport and Hyde Divisions of the Hundred of Macclesfield for the repair by the board of certain main roads within the district of the highway board for one year for a fixed sum.

For this sum the board brought an action against the county council, who counter-claimed for £345, the value of certain road-making materials extracted from a main road for the purpose of laying a tramway. These materials had been received by the defendants' surveyor, and had been used by the defendants for the repair of roads within their district other than main roads. It was provided by the provisional order authorizing the tramway that these materials were the property of the road authority, which both the defendants and the plaintiffs claimed to be.

Section 3 of the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), defines a "road authority" as "any local authority, board, town council, body corporate, commissioners, trustees, vestry or other body, or persons in whom a road, as defined by this Act, is vested, or who have the power to maintain or repair such road."

Sub-section 4 of section 11 of the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), provides that "the county council and any district council" (which term includes a highway board) "may from time to time contract for the undertaking by the district council of the maintenance, repair, improvement, and enlargement of, and other dealing with any main road . . . and for the purposes of such undertaking the district council shall have the same powers and be subject to the same duties and liabilities as if the road were an ordinary road vested in them."

Sub-section 6 of the same section enacts that "a main road and the materials thereof . . . shall . . . vest in the county council."

Sub-section 8 of the same section empowers the county council, if a district council has not duly repaired a main road under a statutory contract, to do so in their stead.

Macmorran, for the defendants.—The county council are the road authority; because, under sub-section 6 of section 11 of the Local Government Act, all main roads and their materials are vested in them. The true construction of section 3 of the Tramways Act is, that the road authority is that body in whom a road is vested; and only failing such a body, those who have the power to maintain and repair it. The highway board are mere contractors; if not, the absurd result would follow that the road authority would be a shifting body from year to year, according as the contract was renewed or not.

Slade Butler, for the plaintiffs.—During this contract the highway board are the road authority by virtue of their contract and of sub-section 4 of section 11 of the Local Government Act, which gives them the same powers, duties, and liabilities as if the road were vested in them.

DAY, J.—I am of opinion that the defendants are right in their contention. Main roads are vested by the Local Government Act in the county council, who are therefore the road authority. The highway board are only entitled and bound to repair during their contract. In substance, the county council are the road authority in spite of sub-section 4, which only gives all necessary and incidental powers to the highway board. That sub-section confers "powers, duties, and liabilities," not rights. Moreover, in this case they agreed for a price fixed, and cannot claim windfalls.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, R. L. Butler, for Vaughan, Stockport.

Solicitors for the defendants, Philpot & Sons, for Reginald Potts, Chester.

Q. B. Div. (Lord Coleridge, C.J., and Mathew, J.) May 6.

HOTCHIN v. HINDMARSH. (a.)

Sale of food—Adulteration of milk—Sale by servant on behalf of master—Information against servant—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 6, 25.

An information for selling food not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded, under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, may properly be laid against a person who merely sells as a servant on behalf of his master; and such servant, not having himself purchased the article, cannot rely for his defence on section 25.

Appeal from a conviction under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, by way of case stated by justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

The appellant, who was a milkman in the employ of the Farmers' and Cleveland Dairy Co., was in charge of a cart, on which was painted the name of the company, selling milk on behalf of his employers. The respondent, who was sanitary inspector to the urban sanitary authority of South Shields, acting under sections 13 and 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, asked the appellant for three gills of milk, for which he paid threepence, at the same time notifying to the appellant his intention to have the milk analyzed by the public analyst. The milk was found to contain twelve per cent. of added water. An information was accordingly laid against the appellant that he had sold to the respondent three gills of milk "not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded," contrary to the provisions of section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act.

At the hearing it was objected on the part of the appellant that he was not the seller of the milk, but this objection was overruled by the justices. The appellant next relied on section 25, which says:—"If the defendant in any prosecution under this Act prove to the satisfaction of the justices or court that he had purchased the article in question as the same in nature, substance, and quality as that demanded of him by the prosecutor, and with a written warranty to that effect; that he had no reason to believe at the time when he sold it that the article was otherwise; and that he sold it in the same state as when he purchased it, he shall be discharged from the prosecution."

It appeared that one Thompson, of Dumfries, had contracted in writing with the company to supply them for a period of six months with the whole of his dairy of good new milk, warranting each and every supply of milk delivered under the contract to be pure, genuine new milk, unadulterated, with all its cream on. Evidence was given that on the morning of the day in question two cans of milk consigned by Thompson to the company arrived by railway, having come a distance of ninety miles. The contents of the two cans were given to the appellant and another man to sell. The appellant was called as a witness, and said that he had sold the milk exactly as he received it; he had a lactometer, but he did not use it on that day.

The justices thought that it was not sufficiently shown that the milk sold was the same as the milk sent under the contract, inasmuch as there was no evidence that it had not been tampered with during the journey from Dumfries, and that the appellant had failed to show that he had no reason to believe that the milk was other than pure milk, and they accordingly convicted him.

Mansfield, for the appellant.—An information does not properly lie against the appellant as seller under section 6. He was merely acting as a servant for his employers, the company, who alone were sellers within the meaning of section 6, and are alone responsible: Core v. James, 20 W. R. 201, L. R. 7 Q. B. 135. If, however, the court should hold that he was the seller, section 25 affords a good defence; the appellant brings himself within the terms of that section by showing that the milk was purchased as the same in nature, substance, and quality as that demanded by the purchaser, and with a written warranty to that effect, that he had no reason to believe at the time when he sold it that it was otherwise, and that he sold it in the same state as when he received it: see Farmers' and Cleveland Dairy Co. v. Stevenson, 60 L. J. M. C. 70. The respondent cannot be allowed to answer that the appellant did not purchase the milk so as to come within section 25; for if the court puts a construction on section 6 sufficiently wide to include a servant selling for his master, by parity of reasoning section 25 ought to be construed to apply equally to such a servant. Reading sections 6 and 25 together, either seller in section 6 ought to be limited to mean only a person who has previously bought with the intention of selling again, or section 25 ought to be extended so as to include persons not strictly within its words. The decision in Pain v. Boughtwood, 38 W. R. 428, 24 Q. B. D. 353, seems to show that the protection afforded by section 25 was intended to be commensurate with the liability imposed by the previous sections.

T. W. Chitty, for the respondent.—The appellant was the seller of this milk, though he was acting as the agent of others. It is clear that the operation of the Act was not intended to be confined to sellers in the sense of principal vendors. Section 25 does not afford the appellant any defence. In the first place he failed to satisfy the magistrates of the facts which must be established in order to bring a case within the section, whereas in Farmers' and Cleveland Dairy Co. v. Stevenson those facts were proved to the satisfaction of the magistrates. In the second place, he never purchased the milk, and therefore is not in a position to rely on the section. There is no reason for giving a forced construction to the words of the section.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—I have come clearly to the conclusion that this conviction ought to be upheld. The Act points at the adulteration of food. Sections 3, 4, and 6 all point at certain physical acts done or permitted by persons, for which they are made responsible. Where a particular intent is made part of the offence, the magistrates are to judge as to whether the intent existed. But the act itself is in each case a physical act, which the person pointed at by the statute must know he is doing. If the magistrates find that any person has done any such act, and that the case is not within the proviso for protection, that person must be treated as the person pointed at by the statute, even although he did the act under the instructions of his master. The act pointed at by section 6 is the selling to the prejudice of the purchaser any article of food or any drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by such purchaser; and it seems to me that the person who performs the physical act of selling such article under such circumstances is the person pointed at by the section. I think that the word "sell" in section 6 is applicable to one who sells as a servant.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

But section 25 enacts that if the defendant in any prosecution under this Act shows that he purchased the article in question under certain circumstances, and sold it as he purchased it, then he is protected. It is said that the appellant can rely on this section, although he does not strictly come within its words, in that, being merely a servant, he never purchased the milk at all. The argument is that if "seller" means one who sells without having purchased we must extend section 25 so as to include persons who do not strictly come within its words. But if that were the meaning of the statute it might just as well have never been passed. A fraudulent dealer might so act that neither he nor his agent could be convicted.

I am therefore of opinion that section 25 does not apply to this case. But even if it did apply, the magistrates have not found that the terms of that section have been satisfied. In the case of Farmers' and Cleveland Dairy Co. v. Stevenson the statement of the facts found by the magistrates exonerated the defendants. This case stands quite apart from that case.

MATHEW, J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, J. E. & H. Scott, for William Bell & Son, Sunderland.

Solicitors for the respondent, Clarke, Rawlins, & Co., for J. M. Moore, South Shields.

Q. B. Div. (Day and Lawrance, JJ.) April 22.

REG. v. GOOLE LOCAL BOARD. (a.)

Local government—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 157, sub-section 1—"Street"—Passage at back of houses.

A passage planned to run along the backs of a row of new houses upon land laid out for building, and intended for access to privies and ashpits belonging to the several houses, is a new "street" within the definition clause, section 4, of the Public Health Act, 1875, and is subject to regulation by the local sanitary authority of the district under the power given by section 157, sub-section 1, of the said Act, "with respect to the level, width, and construction of new streets."

Rule nisi for a mandamus.

Certain land, within the local board district of Goole, being about to be laid out in building, plans were deposited by the appellant, a builder, with the local board of Goole for approval. The plans showed a narrow passage, six feet wide, running along the backs of each row of houses open at each end, and the object of which was to allow access to the ash-pits and privies of each house and for the removal therefrom of dust and refuse. The board had drawn up bye-laws, sanctioned by the Local Government Board, under the powers given by the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 157, for regulating the width of any new streets laid out on building lands. The particular bye-law in question required any new roadway to be level, and if for carriages to be thirty-six feet wide with a footway, if not for carriages to be twenty feet wide, but it also empowered the board to make a reduction in any particular case. The board had in the present case considered these passages to be "streets," within the definition clause of the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 4, and refused to pass the plans unless that width was increased to ten feet. The appellant obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus to compel the board to pass the plans, on the ground that they had no jurisdiction over these passages as "streets."

Montague Lush, for the appellant, showed cause.—These passages are private; "streets" must mean public roadways. The board have no jurisdiction to use their bye-laws regulating streets in regard to such passages as these: Waite v. Garston Local Board, 16 W. R. 78, L. R. 3 Q. B. 5; Le Neve v. Vestry of Mile End, 6 W. R. 338.

Tindal Atkinson and Holder (Dickins with them).—"Street" includes any "road, footway, or passage" by section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875. It is a question of fact in each case for the local authority: Taylor v. Oldham Corporation, 25 W. R. 178, 4 Ch. D. 395.

Lush replied.

DAY, J.—The respondents, the local board of Goole, have made certain bye-laws which have been approved by the Local Government Board, and which must be taken as valid and as in force within the district of the board. The particular bye-law here in question provides that new streets shall be of a particular width according to circumstances stated, and also enables the board to vary or reduce the width on occasion.

This bye-law was made in pursuance of the powers given in the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 157, sub-section 1. The word "street" is defined in section 4 as inclusive of any "highway, . . . and any road, lane, footway, square, court, alley, or passage, whether a thoroughfare or not." Substantially the same provisions and interpretation were given in previous Public Health Acts. Local boards are equivalent under these and similar statutes to guardians on behalf of public interests so far as the public are affected by sanitary matters. These Acts are beneficial regulations for the health of the several districts, and are absolutely necessary in view of the teeming population in many parts of the country. The discretion of the local boards is to be diligently exercised, wherever it is desirable, for public interests, and to those interests owners of building land and builders must defer. The fact that their private interests are injuriously affected by any action of the local board is no argument where public interests in the matter of health would be injuriously affected by private action. That is a fair, just, and true legal construction of the Public Health Acts. Here certain persons were entitled to build on this land. Plans were necessary of the streets. These were duly submitted to the board. On these plans the appellant showed what were termed "streets" and also "passages." The streets were passed by the board, but they objected to the narrowness of the passages. The appellant contended that these passages were not within the definition of "streets" at all, nor under the jurisdiction of the board. The local board maintain that these passages are "streets" under their control, and that they are not of the width required by their bye-laws. These passages are primarily for the use of the owners in regard to ash-p its and privies. The board requires access, however to be open for the removal by their servants of filth and dust. No doubt the width of such passages has varied in many places. Originally they were exceedingly narrow. The local board of Goole formerly required these passages to be six feet wide, but now insist on a width of ten feet. Such a provision may be very beneficial. The discretion lies in the local board, and by their bye-law they may, as they have done, reduce the width of whatever comes under the head of "streets."

(a.) Reported by SPENCER L. HOLLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

But it is said that they have no jurisdiction over the width of these passages at all. I am clearly of opinion that such passages are within the definition of "street" in the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 4, and, therefore, within the control of the local board, who have discretion to regulate their width. The judgments in Waite v. Garston Local Board were given by judges whom I should always feel bound, if I could, to follow, but there the question to be decided was whether an ashpit came under sub-section 4 of section 157. Here we have not to deal with a bye-law as to ashpits, but with one as to new "streets" under sub-section 1 of section 157. The point decided in that case is not raised here at all. It is argued that even if these passages be called "streets" they are not public streets, and, therefore, not under the control of the respondents. The thing proposed to be made is to be used as a passage. It would not be a private passage. It would not belong to any one person in particular. No gate is indicated on the plan nor alleged to be in view at all. The public will undoubtedly pass along this passage after a time. Unless it be kept clear for access the passage might become a great public inconvenience, owing to the difficulty of clearing these places, to which it primarily leads. I hold that this passage will be a public street within the definition of the Act, and I fully concur with the judgment of Jessel, M.R., in Taylor v. Corporation of Oldham, that a street is any way over which the public may travel, which the public use, and over which they may acquire rights.

LAWRANCE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The respondents were bound in the exercise of their jurisdiction to regulate the laying out of passages such as these. It is not necessary in my opinion to decide whether they will be public or not, because the Public Health Act, 1875, applies to streets generally, and not merely to thoroughfares. The local board may come in to private streets for paving and lighting purposes, and to see whether such private streets are properly paved or lighted. I think these passages are clearly "streets" within the Act.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Williamson, Hill, & Co.

Solicitor for the respondents, Woodhouse.

Court of Appeal

From Q. B. Div. June 28.

ALLDRED v. WEST METROPOLITAN TRAMWAYS CO. (a.)

Tramway—Repair of road—Contract with road authority to repair—Liability of tramway company—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), ss. 28, 29, 55.

Where a tramway company has entered into an agreement with the road authority under section 29 of the Tramways Act, 1870, whereby the road authority undertakes to maintain and keep in repair the roadway between and adjoining the tramway lines, the tramway company is not liable for injuries to a person caused by the road where the tramway is laid not being maintained in proper repair.

Howitt v. Nottingham Tramways Co., 32 W. R. 248, 12 Q. B. D. 16, followed.

Application on behalf of the plaintiff for a new trial.

The action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff, who was thrown out of his carriage by reason of the road between and adjoining the tram lines being worn and sunken and not being maintained in proper repair. The defence, so far as material, was that the defendants had entered into an agreement, under section 29 of the Tramways Act, 1870, with the vestry of Hammersmith, who were the road authority, whereby the vestry undertook to maintain and keep in repair that part of the road where the tramway was laid, and that the defendants, therefore, were not liable. At the trial, before Hawkins, J., and a jury, the learned judge nonsuited the plaintiff, on the authority of Howitt v. Nottingham Tramways Co., 32 W. R. 248, 12 Q. B. D. 16.

McCall, Q.C. (Guiry with him), for the plaintiff.—By section 28 of the Tramways Act, 1870, the tramway company are bound to repair the roadway between the tram lines and for eighteen inches on each side. By section 29 they may enter into a contract with the road authority that the latter should do the repairs. But that does not get rid of the absolute liability imposed upon them by section 28. Section 55 shows that the liability still remains on them. The case of Howitt v. Nottingham Tramways Co. was wrongly decided, and ought to be overruled.

He also referred to Steward v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co., 34 W. R. 316, 16 Q. B. D. 556.

Kemp, Q.C., and Atherley Jones, for the defendants, were not called upon.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—The facts of the present case are the same as those in Howitt v. Nottingham Tramways Co., and we must therefore consider whether that case is rightly decided. In Steward v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co. the point was mentioned, but it was not argued or decided. The question turns upon the true construction of the Tramways Act, 1870. The court decided in Howitt v. Nottingham Tramways Co. that by section 28 the duty of the tramway company to keep that part of the road between and adjoining the tramway lines in good condition and repair to the satisfaction of the road authority imposed upon the company a primâ facie liability to any person injured by the road not being so kept in repair. I do not think that the decision went further than that upon section 28. That case also decided that sections 28 and 29 must be read together, and if under section 29 the tramway company have transferred the duty of keeping the road in good condition and repair to the road authority, the company will escape liability on account of the road authority not having done what they had undertaken to do. The court held that section 29 is to be read as a proviso on section 28, and that the liability is taken away if the duty to do the repairs is transferred to the road authority under section 29. If that were not the true construction of the sections, the tramway company would be placed in this singular position: they would be liable for the acts and defaults of the road authority after the contract had been entered into, though they could exercise no control over the road authority. The road authority are to do the work to their own satisfaction. The construction adopted in Howitt v. Nottingham Tramways Co. seems to me, therefore, a necessary implication from section 29. I do not think that section 55, which has been relied upon, affects the above construction placed on sections 28 and 29. Section 55 can apply without being inconsistent with the construction placed upon those sections. In my opinion, therefore, the decision in Howitt v. Nottingham Tramways Co. is right, and this application must be refused.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

BOWEN and KAY, L.JJ., concurred.

Motion dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Hewitt & Chapman.

Solicitor for the defendants, H. C. Godfray.

From Chan. Div. June 15.

In re PORTUGUESE CONSOLIDATED COPPER MINES (LIMITED).

Ex parte LORD INCHIQUIN. (a.)

Company — Winding up — Contributory — Director — Qualification shares—Allotment notice—Agreement to take shares—Acquisition within reasonable time.

I. became a director, on the 25th of October, 1888, of a company, the articles of association of which provided that a director's qualification should be forty shares. On the same day forty shares were, without his knowledge, allotted to him, and his name placed on the register. He first acted as a director on the 24th of November, 1888, and acted again on the 16th of January and the 18th of January, 1889. On the 19th of January, 1889, he himself acquired forty fully paid-up shares, which were duly registered in his name. I. retired from the directorship on the 28th of January, 1889, and the company was, in the same year, ordered to be wound up, whereupon I. first discovered that the original forty shares had been allotted to him. He took out a summons to have his name removed from the list of contributories, upon which he had been placed in respect of the original forty shares. North, J., refused to order his name to be removed from the list of contributories.

Held, on appeal, without deciding that the mere circumstance that the original forty shares were standing in I.'s name was notice to him of the fact that the shares had been allotted to him, that I. must be taken to have known that it was his duty to qualify by acquiring forty shares, as required by the articles of association, and that he was bound to qualify within a reasonable time; and that, if a reasonable time had not actually elapsed by the 24th of November, 1888, it certainly had before January, 1889; and, consequently, that I. was not entitled to have his name struck off the list.

(a.) Reported by W. A. G. WOODS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal from North, J.

This was an appeal from an order made by North, J., on the 24th of April last, dismissing a summons taken out by Lord Inchiquin to have his name removed from the list of contributories of the above-named company in respect of forty £5 shares upon which nothing had been paid. The company was registered on the 20th of October, 1888. The articles of association provided that each of the directors should hold at least forty shares in the company. On the 25th of October, 1888, Lord Inchiquin was appointed one of the original directors. By the minutes of a directors' meeting held on the same day, at which Lord Inchiquin was not present, it appeared that the forty shares in question were allotted to Lord Inchiquin, and his name was placed on the register of shareholders in respect of those shares before he acted as a director. He, had not, however, then applied for any shares, and he stated in his affidavit that he did not know until the company had been ordered to be wound up that these shares had been allotted to him, or that his name had been placed on the register of shareholders in respect of them. He first acted as a director on the 24th of November, 1888, when he attended a meeting of the board and was elected chairman. He attended subsequent meetings on the 16th and 18th of January, 1889, the latter being the general meeting. He acquired another forty shares—which, however, were fully paid-up—in the company on the 19th of January, 1889, which were duly transferred to him and registered in his name. On the 28th of January, 1889, he retired from the board of directors. A petition was presented in January, 1890, and the company was ordered to be wound up. Lord Inchiquin was then placed upon the list of contributories in respect of the forty shares originally allotted to him.

North, J., held that the reasonable time for acquiring the qualification shares had expired as soon as Lord Inchiquin had acted as director; and that Lord Inchiquin, having no shares other than the unpaid shares at the time when he first acted as director, and his name being on the register as the holder of those shares, must be taken to have had notice that his name was on the register so as to bind him to take the shares. Accordingly his lordship refused to order Lord Inchiquin's name to be removed from the list of contributories.

Lord Inchiquin appealed.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Reginald Saunders, for the appellant.—The resolution of the 25th of October, 1888, allotting shares to Lord Inchiquin was insufficient, and was decided in Steele's case, 42 Ch. D. 160, 37 W. R. Dig. 36, 38 Ibid. 38, to be invalid. Lord Inchiquin did not attend any meetings of the directors until the 24th of November, 1888. He was present again on the 16th and 18th of January, 1889, and retired on the 28th of January, 1889. The mere fact of his thus acting as a director did not amount to a contract to take the forty unpaid shares directly from the company: Brown's case, 22 W. R. 171, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 102. [BOWEN L. J.,—The point that differentiates this case is, that here Lord Inchiquin was acting as a director at the time he was on the register for forty shares.] No calls were ever made. Lord Inchiquin was not bound to examine the entries in the company's books, nor had he constructive notice of their contents: In re Denham & Co., 32 W. R. 487, 25 Ch. D. 752. The Court of Appeal decided, in Badman's case and Bosanquet's case, ante, p. 25, 45 Ch. D. 16, that, although the original allotments of shares were invalid, they might be ratified by the company, provided such ratification were made within a reasonable time. Lord Inchiquin by subsequently acquiring the forty fully paid-up shares, fulfilled the qualification of a director, and did so within a reasonable time. The obligation of a director has never been put so high as that he should take shares at once: In re Wheal Buller Consols, 36 W. R. 723, 38 Ch. D. 42. [LINDLEY, L.J. — In Leeke's case, 19 W. R. 664, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 469, the director did not know he was registered. You are estopped from denying your qualification after a reasonable time.] That is so according to Leeke's case. [LINDLEY, L.J.—That would hit you if you had not paid up shares. FRY, L.J.—The duty to take shares must be supposed to be performed.] In Miller's case, 3 Ch. D. 661, 25 W. R. Dig. 54, Jessel, M.R., said that he took it to be settled by Brown's case that a director had a reasonable time for acquiring the qualification, either from the company or from anybody else. Lord Inchiquin never applied to the company for shares. He never agreed to take these shares, and no agreement can be inferred from the fact of his being on the register without his knowledge. Then the question as to what is a reasonable time for a director to acquire his qualification must depend on the circumstances of each case: Hewitt's case and Brett's case, 32 W. R. 234, 25 Ch. D. 283. Here Lord Inchiquin acquired the shares in the company within a reasonable time, and fulfilled the obligations imposed upon him.

Beddall, for the respondent, the liquidator, was not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J., after stating the facts, said:—The 80th clause of the articles of association says that the first directors shall be appointed by a majority of the subscribers to the memorandum of association. I suppose Lord Inchiquin was appointed a director in pursuance of that 80th article. He has made an affidavit as to the fact that he did not know that any of these forty shares, which were, in fact, originally in his name on the 25th of October, 1888, were allotted to him. He does not say in terms, or in expressed clear language, that he did not know that those shares were on the register, but I think, on the fair construction of his affidavit, and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, he meant to go that length. I certainly am not prepared to say offhand, without looking into the cases more carefully than I have done during the course of this discussion, whether the mere fact of the shares being registered in his name was notice to him of that fact. I shall proceed on the assumption that, as no notice was shown to him, he did not know. I do not know how the law is on that, and I shall assume it in his favour. The fact is that he became a director with his own sanction. He knew that he was a director; he knew it was his duty to qualify and get forty shares. Within what time was he bound to qualify? I think Mr. Cozens-Hardy is right upon that. He had a reasonable time to do it. Here, however, a month passed before he acted. Why is not that a reasonable time within which to qualify? Even if November is too soon, I cannot for the life of me see why January was too soon, when he again acted without any qualification at all. It appears to me, therefore, that a reasonable time to qualify had elapsed, if not by the 24th of November, certainly by the 1st of January, which is six weeks afterwards. Mr. Cozens-Hardy is quite right in saying upon the authorities that it was not incumbent on the appellant to acquire shares direct from the company, and that he had a reasonable time in which to acquire his qualification shares, and the whole stress of his argument turned on the fact that ultimately Lord Inchiquin did get forty shares paid up, which would have been sufficient to qualify him. Certainly if he acquired those in such a time as was reasonable for him to obtain his qualification I think that Mr. Cozens-Hardy's contention is correct, and that there would be nothing to stop him from denying that he held shares before that reasonable time had elapsed. But when this case is looked at it, strikes me that the only proper inference to draw from the facts is this, that he was estopped, before he acquired his fully paid-up shares, from denying that he had the forty shares in respect of which he was actually registered.

The cases on this subject are extremely numerous, and they subdivide themselves broadly into cases where a director in respect of his qualification shares is on the register, and cases where he is not. If he is on the register it is for him to show on what grounds he can get off after the winding up has commenced. It is a much more easy matter for a director who is not on, to show grounds for getting off liability in respect of his qualification shares. Having regard to the facts of this case it is impossible for the appellant to get his name struck off in respect of the shares which he ought to have had as qualification shares, and in respect of which he must be presumed to have acted.

I think, therefore, a reasonable time having elapsed for him to obtain his qualification, that this decision is right.

There is no difficulty on the authorities except Hewitt's case and Brett's case, where there were some three months, and where this court came to the conclusion that a reasonable time had not elapsed. The facts of that case were not like this. The articles were not like these, and the mere fact that the persons were qualified is unimportant; at all events, I do not discuss it, because a reasonable time in one case may not be a reasonable time in another. I think that a reasonable time for acquiring this qualification had elapsed long before the 19th of January.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The question we have to decide is whether Lord Inchiquin was a member of the company in respect of these qualification shares at or before the 19th of January, 1889. That seems to me to turn on the 23rd section of the Act, which says "every other person who has agreed to become a member of a company under this Act, and whose name is entered on the register of members, shall be deemed to be a member of the company." Lord Inchiquin became a director, and knew by the articles of association that he was bound to qualify. The article says that the qualification of a director shall be the holding of at least forty shares, and he agreed to take the necessary number of shares. Then if there is a particular article on the subject, the question must be decided by the true construction of that article; but if there is no special article then by the true construction of the whole of the articles. If there is no agreement that the qualifying shares shall be taken at a particular moment, then we must apply the rule of law that they must be taken in a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time seems to me to depend in each case on the particular circumstances of the case. There may be something in the articles to throw light upon it, although it may not fix the exact time. On the other hand, there may be circumstances in the position of the company and the proceedings at the board of directors which throw light on the question as to the extent of time which is given for the completion of the contract to take shares. I do not like to lay down, and I do not think I can lay down, a rule as to what can be taken to be a reasonable time for the completion of the contract in a case where you cannot find in the articles of association anything in the text exactly to decide the case which arises. I think here, on every view of the facts, that the time for the completion of Lord Inchiquin's contract to take shares had elapsed long before the 19th of January. He agrees to become a director on a certain day, and he attended a meeting or two, and was in the chair two or three times before the general meeting. I think that a reasonable time had elapsed for completing his contract with the company, by virtue of which he became a director and was bound to qualify. If so, he had agreed at that date to become a director, and therefore in every respect the requirements of the Act of Parliament have been fulfilled, and he must be taken to be a member of the company.

For myself, I should like to defer any consideration of the exact position of a person as a director who, having undertaken to perform the part of director by taking qualifying shares, is on the register, although he does not himself know that he is on the register; how far he is bound in such a case is a matter which I should like to leave open as a difficult question of law, and which would depend in most cases on the particular language of the articles.

It seems to me that, assuming that Lord Inchiquin did not know that he was on the register, and assuming in his favour that that is the true explanation of the oath which he has taken—which I am quite sure was taken properly—nevertheless the facts here show that at the critical moment he had agreed to become a member; he was therefore a member, and he was, at that moment, a member within the definition of these words.

FRY, L.J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Burn & Berridge.

Solicitor for the liquidator, A. Myers.

From Q. B. Div. Feb. 2; May 5.

STUART v. BELL. (a.)

Slander—Privilege—Evidence of malice.

The defendant, who was Mayor of Newcastle-on-Tyne, was entertaining at the Mansion House the African explorer Stanley, who was accompanied by the plaintiff, his valet. The defendant received from the Chief Constable of Newcastle a letter, which had been sent to the latter by the Chief Constable of Edinburgh, stating that suspicion had fallen on the plaintiff of having stolen a watch in an Edinburgh hotel. The defendant told Stanley privately of this just before he was leaving Newcastle, and Stanley discharged the plaintiff a few days later.

In an action for slander,

Held, by the Court of Appeal (Lindley, Lopes, and Kay, L.JJ., Lopes, L.J., dissenting), that the occasion was privileged, and, there being no evidence of malice in fact, to be left to the jury, that judgment ought to be entered for the defendant.

Decision of Wills, J., reversed.

Application for a new trial, or that judgment should be entered for the defendant.

The action was for slander, and was brought under the circumstances very fully stated in the considered judgments of the court.

At the trial, before Wills, J., and a jury, the judge directed the jury that the occasion was not privileged, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, with damages £250.

(a.) Reported by H. M. CHARTERS MACPHERSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendant now moved for a new trial or that judgment might be entered for him, on the ground (amongst others) that the communication was privileged, and that there was no evidence of malice on the part of the defendant to go to the jury.

Tindal Atkinson, Q.C., and T. Willes Chitty, for the defendant.—The judge was wrong in holding that this was not a privileged occasion. There was a common interest—or, at any rate, a social or moral duty—in making the communication. Then there was no evidence of malice to be left to the jury, or, if there was, there should be a new trial on that issue.

Lockwood, Q.C., and Robson, for the plaintiff.—The judge's ruling was right. Such a relation as existed here between the defendant and Mr. Stanley has never been held to constitute privilege. There was no common interest, as the visit was over, and there was no duty. We are, at any rate, entitled to go to the jury as to malice.

The following cases were referred to:—Harrison v. Bush, 3 W. R. 474, 5 E. & B. 344; Coxhead v. Richards, 2 C. B. 569; Amann v. Damm, 8 W. R. 470, 8 C. B. N. S. 597; Whiteley v. Adams, 12 W. R. 153, 15 C. B. N. S., p. 418; Allbutt v. General Council of Medical Education and Registration, 37 W. R. 771, 23 Q. B. D. 400; Davies v. Snead, L. R. 5 Q. B. 608, 19 W. R. C. L. Dig. 64; Waller v. Loch, 30 W. R. 18, 7 Q. B. D. 619; Pattison v. Jones, 8 B. & Cr. 578.

May 5.—LINDLEY, L.J.—This is an action for slander. At the time when the slander was uttered the plaintiff was a valet in the employ of Mr. Stanley. Mr. Stanley was the guest of the defendant, who was the Mayor of Newcastle. The plaintiff was staying with his master at the Mansion House at Newcastle. They had come from Edinburgh and were going on further visits. Whilst Stanley and the plaintiff were still at the Mansion House, at Newcastle, the chief constable of that town received from the Chief Constable of Edinburgh a letter to the effect that a lady who had been staying at the same hotel as the plaintiff had lost a gold watch, and that suspicion had fallen on the plaintiff as the person who stole it. The Chief Constable of Newcastle sent this letter to the defendant, who read it and returned it, and then told Stanley privately what I have above stated. This communication, which is the slander complained of, was made to Stanley just before he and the plaintiff left Newcastle; they were, in fact, just about to leave. Two or three days afterwards Stanley told the plaintiff what had been communicated to him, and discharged the plaintiff on the ground that he could not keep in his employ a person on whom any suspicion of dishonesty had fallen. This discharge, and the inability of the plaintiff to obtain a fresh situation, have occasioned loss to the plaintiff, and this loss is the special damage which he has sustained by reason of the slander complained of. The learned judge who tried the case told the jury that the communication made by the defendant to Stanley was not privileged, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages £250. The application to us is for a new trial, or that judgment may be given for the defendant, on the ground that the communication was privileged, and that there was no evidence to go to the jury of malice on the part of the defendant. To determine this matter it is necessary to consider—First, whether the judge was right in telling the jury that the communication was not privileged; and, secondly, if the judge was wrong in this respect, whether there was or was not evidence of malice proper to be left to the jury, which would justify their verdict.

In order to answer the first question it is necessary to consider what is meant by a privileged communication. A privileged communication is one made on a privileged occasion and fairly warranted by it, and not proved to have been made maliciously. A privileged occasion is one which is held in point of law to rebut the legal implication of malice which would otherwise be made from the utterance of untrue, defamatory language. This is the effect, in a few words, of the leading cases on the subject—namely, Toogood v. Spyring, 1 Cr. M. & R. 181; Wright v. Woodgate, 2 Cr. M. & R. 573; Coxhead v. Richards; Whiteley v. Adams; and Clark v. Molyneux, 26 W. R. 104, 3 Q. B. D. 237. It is the duty of the judge to determine whether an occasion is privileged or not, and if it is, and if there is no evidence of malice to go to the jury, it is his duty to enter judgment for the defendant (see Whiteley v. Adams and Clark v. Molyneux). On the other hand, if the occasion is not privileged, or if there is any evidence of malice (the meaning of which I will examine presently), then the case must be left to the jury. The law on this point has long been well settled, and was carefully explained in Clark v. Molyneux. What, then, are privileged occasions—what are the circumstances which must exist in order to rebut the implication of malice which arises from the utterance of untrue, defamatory language? Without referring to such matters as reports of what occurs in Parliament, courts of justice, or public meetings, which have no bearing on the present case, I can find no better answer to this question than that given by Parke, B., in Toogood v. Spyring, and by Erle, C.J., in Whiteley v. Adams. In Toogood v. Spyring Parke, B., in speaking of the publication of statements false in fact and injurious to the character of another, said:—"The law considers such publication as malicious unless it is fairly made by a person in the discharge of some public or private duty, whether legal or moral, or in the conduct of his own affairs in matters where his interest is concerned. In such cases the occasion prevents the inference of malice which the law draws from unauthorized communications, and affords a qualified defence depending on the absence of actual malice. If fairly warranted by any reasonable occasion of exigency and honestly made, such communications are protected, for the common convenience and welfare of society; and the law has not restricted the right to make them within any narrow limits." This passage has been frequently quoted, and always with approval.

The reason for holding any occasion privileged is common convenience and welfare of society, and it is obvious that no definite line can be so drawn as to mark off with precision those occasions which are privileged, and separate them from those which are not. Coxhead v. Richards, in which four very eminent judges were equally divided upon the question whether an occasion was privileged or not, is a striking illustration of the truth of this remark. In that case the mate of a ship wrote to the defendant, a friend of his, a letter reflecting on the character of the captain. The defendant, who was a stranger to the owner of the ship, showed the letter to the owner; the owner dismissed the captain, who sued the defendant for libel. Tindal, C.J., and Erle, J., held the occasion privileged. Coltman and Cresswell, JJ., held that it was not. In Amann v. Damm the late Willes, J., said he was fully prepared to go the whole length of the doctrine laid down by Tindal, C.J., and Erle, J., in Coxhead v. Richards. Lord Blackburn also approved of it in Davies v. Snead. Having carefully considered all the four judgments in that celebrated case (Coxhead v. Richards), I have no hesitation in saying that the judgment of Tindal, C.J., is the one which carries conviction to my own mind, and is the one which I consider the most accurate and safe to take as a guide; nor am I aware of any subsequent case in which that judgment has been disapproved. In Whiteley v. Adams, which was an action for libel on two letters, Erle, C.J., alludes to the difficulty of deciding questions of moral duty, to which I am now addressing myself. He said: "Each of these letters contains matter which is clearly defamatory to the plaintiff, and forms the foundation of an action, unless the circumstances under which it is written bring it within the protection of the law. I take it to be clear that the foundation for an action for defamation is malice, but defamation pure and simple affords presumptive evidence of malice. That presumption may be rebutted by showing that the circumstances under which the libel was written or the words uttered were such as to render it justifiable. The rule has been laid down in the Court of Exchequer, and again, lately, in the Court of Queen's Bench, that if the circumstances bring the judge to the opinion that the communication was made in the discharge of some social or moral duty, or on the ground of an interest in the party making or receiving it, then, if the words pass in the honest belief on the part of the persons writing or uttering them, he is bound to hold that the action fails. In the present case the jury found that the letters were written by the defendant bonâ fide and in the honest belief that what he wrote was true, and that it was his duty to make the communications he did. Do the circumstances show that the letters were written in the discharge of some social or moral duty, or that the writer or the person to whom they were addressed had an interest in making or receiving the communications?" Then he says that in that particular case he felt bound to answer that question in the affirmative. There is another passage which appears to me important. He says:—"Judges who have had from time to time to deal with questions as to whether the occasion justified the speaking or the writing of defamatory matter have all felt great difficulty in defining what kind of social or moral duty or what amount of interest will afford a justification; but all are clear that it is a question for the judge to decide, and I am clear that the letters in question, seeing the circumstances under which they were written, do not show what in law amounts to malice." Then he goes on to say that "the rule has become gradually more extended on the principle that it is to the general interest of society that correct information should be obtained as to the character of the persons in whom others have an interest. If every word which is uttered to the discredit of another is to be made a ground of action, cautious persons will take care that all their words are words of praise only, and will cease to obey the dictates of truth."

Now, adopting the language of Erle, C.J., I ask, Do the circumstances show that the statement complained of was made in the discharge of some social or moral duty, or that the speaker or the person addressed had an interest in making or receiving the communication? That Stanley had an interest in the character of his servant and in receiving the communication made to him can hardly be denied. His interest in the matter is too obvious to require comment. If I understand rightly the judgment I have just read, Stanley's interest in receiving the communication made to him, is alone sufficient to render the occasion of making the communication a privileged occasion.

But this would be going further than is warranted by the language of Parke, B., in Toogood v. Spyring; it would not, therefore, be satisfactory to pass over the other matters indicated as important for consideration—I mean the defendant's interest in making the communication and his duty to make it. Considering that Stanley and the plaintiff were just about to leave Newcastle when the defendant spoke to Stanley, I am not prepared to base my judgment on the ground that the defendant made the communication complained of in the conduct of his own affairs or in a matter in which his interest was concerned. I am not clear that the defendant had an interest as distinguished from a moral or social duty to act as he did. But the question still remains whether the defendant was not under a moral or social duty to make such communication. Both the defendant and Stanley say that the defendant acted under a sense of duty, but this, though important on the question of malice, is not, I think, relevant to the question whether the occasion was or was not privileged. That question does not depend on the defendant's belief, but on whether he was right or mistaken in that belief. As Tindal, C.J., said in Coxhead v. Richards, if the defendant took a course not justifiable in a court of law he, and not the plaintiff, must suffer for the error. In Waller v. Loch the Master of the Rolls (Sir George Jessel) is reported to have said that if the defendant bonâ fide thought that he was discharging a moral or social duty he would be protected, but in so saying the learned judge was not distinguishing a privileged occasion from malice, and his observation, if intended to apply to privileged occasions, is not in conformity with other authorities. Some passages in the judgments in Pattison v. Jones which were relied upon in support of the view of the Master of the Rolls (Sir George Jessel) obviously had reference to malice, and not to privileged occasion. Upon the point I am now considering, the headnote in Whiteley v. Adams, goes too far, and further than the judgments themselves warrant. The duty was affirmed by the court, and did not rest on the defendant's belief, although his belief showed that there was no malice.

The question of privileged occasion turning, then, on the question of moral or social duty, and being a question of law for the judge, and not a question for the jury, it is necessary to consider the grounds on which such duty can be maintained. The grounds in this case are the relation in which the defendant stood to Stanley, and the relation in which the defendant stood to the public. His relation to Stanley was that of host to guest, and, to some extent, of friend to friend. His relation to the public was that of mayor and magistrate in Newcastle, where Stanley was when the communication was made. The defendant knew that Stanley was about to be entertained by other people at other places, and that the plaintiff would accompany him. Under these circumstances I am clearly of opinion that it was the defendant's moral or social, though not legal, duty to communicate to Stanley the information which the defendant had received. That information was no vague rumour or idle gossip, but came officially from the Chief Constable of Edinburgh to the Chief Constable of Newcastle, and was sent by him to the defendant, who was, as I have said, Mayor of Newcastle and the host of Stanley. Suppose the suspicion which had fallen on the plaintiff had been well-founded, and not ill-founded, and that the defendant had withheld the information from Stanley, could the defendant have morally justified reticence? I answer, No; he would not have been acting up to his duty either to the public or to Stanley. Suppose the plaintiff had proved dishonest at the next place he visited, would the defendant then have been free from moral blame if he had not communicated to Stanley what he had learned from the police? In my opinion the defendant would then have been greatly to blame if he had held his tongue. The question of moral or social duty being for the judge, each judge must decide it as best he can for himself. I take moral or social duty to mean the duty recognized by English people of ordinary intelligence and moral principle; but, at the same time, not a duty enforceable by legal proceedings, whether civil or criminal. My own conviction is that all—or, at all events, the great mass of—right-minded men in the position of the defendant, would have considered it their duty, under the circumstances, to inform Stanley of the suspicion which had fallen on the plaintiff. My own opinion is clear and strong that it was his moral or social, although not his legal, duty to do so; in other words, the occasion was privileged, and the judge should have directed the jury to this effect. It follows that there ought to be a new trial unless there was no evidence of malice on which a jury could properly find a verdict for the defendant.

I pass, therefore, to the consideration of the question of malice. If the occasion is privileged the plaintiff must prove malice in fact; the burden of proving this is on him, as was settled in Clark v. Molyneux. Malice in fact is not confined to personal spite and ill-will, but includes every unjustifiable intention to inflict injury on the person defamed, or, in the words of Brett, L.J., in Clark v. Molyneux, every wrong feeling in a man's mind. There is no question here of the belief by the defendant in the truth of what he said. He did not say or intimate that the plaintiff had stolen a watch—he merely stated that the Edinburgh police suspected the plaintiff of having done so, which was true enough. This case illustrates the truth of the remark made by Lord Bramwell in Clark v. Molyneux. He said, "A person may honestly make on a particular occasion a defamatory statement without believing it to be true, because the statement may be of such a character as on that occasion it may be proper to communicate it to a particular person who ought to be informed of it. Can it be said that the person making the statement is liable to an action for slander?" What, therefore, has to be ascertained is whether the defendant acted bonâ fide in the discharge of that moral duty which he owed to Stanley or whether he acted from some other and unjustifiable motive—from some motive other than a sense of duty. As Lord Bramwell said, in Clark v. Molyneux, "If the defendant was actuated by some motive other than that which would alone excuse him, the jury may find for the plaintiff." The evidence on this head is contained in the examination and cross-examination of the only two persons present when the defamatory matter was uttered—viz., the defendant and Stanley. I have read their evidence with care, and I can find nothing to support a charge of malice against the defendant. On the contrary, the evidence disproves malice, and shows affirmatively that the defendant acted bonâ fide in the discharge of what he believed to be his duty, and of what was his duty, and did not exceed (either in what he said or in any other way) what a reasonably careful man would have said or done under similar circumstances.

It was contended that the defendant did not show Stanley the letter written by the Edinburgh police, and did not urge on Stanley the necessity for caution so carefully as the Edinburgh police urged caution in their letter to the Newcastle police. But even if the defendant was less cautious than he himself says he was, this would be too slight a matter to warrant a finding of malice against the defendant; and there is positively nothing else on which to found such a charge. The defendant knew nothing of the plaintiff and could have had no motive whatever for injuring him. The inspector who brought the letter to the defendant suggested to him the propriety of speaking to Stanley on the subject. The defendant took Stanley aside and communicated to him in private the fact that the Edinburgh police had written a letter to the Newcastle police to the effect that the plaintiff was suspected of having stolen a watch when at the Waterloo Hotel in Edinburgh. This was really all that the defendant did.

The conclusions, then, at which I have arrived are that the occasion was privileged and that there was no evidence of malice. The judge, therefore, ought to have withdrawn the case from the jury and ought to have given judgment for the defendant. There is no question proper to be left to a jury; there are no grounds for a new trial, the verdict and judgment which have been entered for the plaintiff ought, in my opinion, to be set aside, and judgment ought to be entered for the defendant, with costs here and below. The result may seem hard on the plaintiff, who has unquestionably been injured. It was his misfortune to fall under suspicion, and to be dismissed by his master without inquiry. But this is no reason for holding the defendant responsible for this misfortune, and he cannot be so held without limiting privileged occasions to such an extent as to render the law applicable to them opposed to the general interests of society instead of being in harmony with them, nor without violating the important doctrine which has frequently been asserted by judges of the highest eminence—I mean the doctrine that the law has not restricted the right to make such communications within any narrow limits.

LOPES, L.J.—This is an exceptionally important case, in my opinion. As I take a different view from the other members of the court, I shall shortly state the facts as I understand them. The plaintiff, who had been in the service of persons of position and had borne a good character, was engaged by Mr. Stanley, the African explorer, as a valet. Mr. Stanley had been at Edinburgh, himself staying with a friend, the plaintiff, his valet, putting up at the Royal Waterloo Hotel. On Thursday, the 19th of June, 1890, Stanley left Edinburgh and proceeded to Newcastle, where he was entertained by the corporation, living with the plaintiff, his valet, at the Mansion House. Stanley left Newcastle the next day. It appears that while the plaintiff was at the Royal Waterloo Hotel a lady lost a gold watch out of her bedroom. While Stanley and the plaintiff were staying at the Mansion House at Newcastle a letter was received by the chief constable of that town from the Chief Constable of Edinburgh, which, in my opinion, is so important that I think it essential to state its terms in extenso—terms which appear to be entirely overlooked in the judgments of the other Lords Justices, both of which I have read:—

"Criminal Investigation Department, Police-chambers, Edinburgh, June 19, 1890.

"Urgent.

"Sir,—I am directed by the chief constable to acquaint you that between 5 and 11 p.m. yesterday a gold watch, &c, of which I annex description, was stolen from an unlocked drawer in a dressing table of a bedroom in the Waterloo Hotel here. At this hotel a man 'Stuart' (Christian name supposed Roderick), who is at present valet to Mr. H. M. Stanley, the African explorer, was putting up, and from the fact of his having been observed in a bedroom two doors from the one from which the property was stolen, occupied by a gentleman, and afterwards loitering in the passage near to the bedroom from which the property was abstracted, suspicion has been attached to him. The bedroom Stuart occupied was on the same floor, entering off the same passage. Nothing can be learned here regarding the character of Stuart, but it is understood he has only recently been employed by Mr. Stanley, who may know little or nothing of his antecedents. As you will readily observe, the groundwork of suspicion is very slender, and unless trace of the property to Stuart's possession is obtained, no action can be taken against him. The chief constable will be glad if you can see your way to have very careful and cautious inquiry made with the view of discovering whether Stuart is or has been in possession of the property. If it be traced to or found with him, arrest him and wire, when an officer will be sent for him. In the view that Stuart may be quite innocent, I am to urge that the inquiry should be so conducted as not to injure Stuart unless evidence of guilt be obtained. Requesting immediate action, I beg to thank you in anticipation.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"W. M'EWEN, Dept. Insp."

"To the Chief Constable, Newcastle-upon-Tyne."

This letter was shown to the defendant by the Chief Constable of Newcastle. As Stanley was leaving the Mansion House the defendant, who had driven there for the purpose of escorting Stanley to the station, called him into a private room near the entrance door and told him that a lady's gold watch and chain had been stolen at the Waterloo Hotel, and that suspicion had fallen upon the plaintiff. The letter itself was not shown to Stanley, but had been shown by the chief constable to the defendant. Stanley some few days afterwards communicated what the defendant had told him, to the plaintiff, and dismissed him from his service, alleging as his reason his inability to keep in his service a person who had been suspected of dishonesty. In these circumstances the plaintiff has brought an action of slander against the defendant. The action came to be tried before Wills, J., at Leeds, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for £250, the learned judge holding that the occasion was not a privileged occasion, and leaving only the question of damages to the jury. We are now asked to grant a new trial, or to enter judgment for the defendant, on the ground that the occasion was privileged, and on the ground that there was no evidence of express malice. I do not think, if the occasion was privileged, that there was any evidence proper to leave to the jury of express malice; nor do I think it could be successfully contended that the defendant did not act honestly and with good faith, if the occasion was such as to justify his making the communication to Stanley. The question, then, is whether the occasion was privileged. I do not know that I can express my view of the law in better language than by repeating what I said in Pullman v. Walter Hill & Co., ante, p. 263, [1891] 1 Q. B. 524, at p. 529: "Assuming, then, that there was publication, the question next arises whether the occasion was privileged. A confusion is often made between a privileged communication and a privileged occasion. It is for the jury to say whether a communication was privileged, but the question whether an occasion was privileged is for the judge, and that question only arises when there has been publication to a third party. If the judge holds that the occasion was privileged, there is an end of the plaintiff's case, unless express malice is proved. The rule, I think, is this—that when the circumstances are such as to cast on the defendant the duty of making the communication to a third party, the occasion is privileged. So, again, when he has an interest in making the communication to the third person, and the third person has a corresponding interest in receiving it." The duty may be legal, social, or moral. I believe this to be the true principle deducible from all the authorities, and I do not think it necessary to refer to the cases which have already been exhaustively dealt with by Lindley, L.J.

I cannot understand how it can be said the defendant had any interest in making the statement to Stanley. Stanley and the plaintiff were on the point of leaving the Mansion House. What interest had the defendant in communicating to Stanley a suggestion of dishonesty with regard to the plaintiff which occurred at another place and before Stanley and the plaintiff came to the Mansion House? Again, there was no legal duty making it incumbent on the defendant to make the communication to the plaintiff. If any duty at all, it must be a moral or social duty. Having regard to the position the defendant occupied towards Stanley —namely, that of host—I can well imagine cases where, socially and morally, it would have been the duty of the defendant to make a communication to Stanley with regard to his servant. But surely it is all-important to observe the nature of the information furnished by the Chief Constable of Edinburgh to the Chief Constable of Newcastle, which was all that was communicated to defendant, and which was all he had before him when he communicated with Stanley. In order to determine what his duty was towards Stanley the defendant ought also to have regarded his duty and what was just towards the person sought to be inculpated. Was it the duty of the defendant, in his desire to serve Stanley, to overlook the grievous wrong to which by his want of caution he might subject the plaintiff? Was he justified, having regard to the exceptionally cautious and careful character of the information which he had received, in acting as he did?

Let us carefully scan the letter of the Chief Constable of Edinburgh—a more careful and judicious document it would be difficult to describe. He states the ground of suspicion, and then says: "As you will readily observe, the groundwork of suspicion is very slender, and unless trace of the property to Stuart's possession was obtained no action can be taken against him. The chief constable will be glad if you can see your way to have very careful and cautious inquiry made with the view of discovering whether Stuart is or has been in possession of the property. In the view that Stuart may be quite innocent, I am to urge that the inquiry should be so conducted as not to injure Stuart unless evidence of his guilt be obtained." The defendant says: "I had obtained no evidence of Stuart's guilt before I went to Stanley," "I did not speak to Stanley for any detective purpose or to help the police." "I did not think of Stuart at all." Having regard to the terms of that letter, so far from its being the duty of the defendant to communicate what he did to Stanley, I think it is the last thing he ought to have done. He is told the groundwork of suspicion is very slender. He is urged that, inasmuch as Stuart may be quite innocent, any inquiry is to be so conducted as not to injure Stuart unless evidence of his guilt is obtained. What does he do? Without obtaining any evidence, without any inquiry, in hot haste he makes a communication to the master impugning the honesty of his servant. I cannot think the defendant in so acting was discharging any duty, social or moral. I think it was an officious and uncalled-for act on his part, and that therefore the occasion was not privileged. Waller v. Loch was relied on by the learned counsel for the defendant, and certain expressions of the Master of the Rolls (Sir George Jessel) were cited. I feel confident that that learned judge was referring, not to a privileged occasion, but to a privileged communication, and the question of malice which then arises. He could not have said that if a defendant bonâ fide thought that he was discharging a moral or social duty that would be sufficient to constitute a privileged occasion although no such duty existed. Such a principle is opposed to all the authorities, is against common sense, and would be lamentably far-reaching and unjust in the consequences it would produce. In my opinion the learned judge was right and the verdict and judgment ought to stand.

KAY, L.J.—I cannot help regretting, as Lopes, L.J., differs from Lindley, L.J., that the casting vote does not fall to one to whom the law is more familiar than myself; but I am bound to give my own opinion, which I have formed after careful consideration. The question must be considered upon the basis that the suspicion suggested against the plaintiff's honesty is altogether unjust. He was valet to Mr. Stanley. The circumstances which raised the suspicion were communicated with all proper caution and reserve by the police at Edinburgh to the superintendent of police at Newcastle, obviously because it was known that Mr. Stanley and the plaintiff, his servant, were then at Newcastle, and with the object that very cautious inquiries should be made by the Newcastle police, principally as to whether the plaintiff was in possession or had in any way disposed of the stolen property. Mr. Stanley and the plaintiff were then staying at the Mansion House at Newcastle, and were the guests there of the mayor, but the mayor did not himself reside at the Mansion House. However, there was property in the Mansion House which I suppose it would be the mayor's duty to protect. It seems to me quite natural that the superintendent of police should have communicated as he did the letter which he had received from the police at Edinburgh to the Mayor of Newcastle, and I do not understand that the plaintiff makes any complaint on that ground. The mayor communicated the suspicion suggested by this letter to Mr. Stanley verbally. He did not at that time show him the letter. He only told him that the Edinburgh police suspected the plaintiff, which was perfectly true; he did not say that the plaintiff was dishonest. This verbal statement was made at the Mansion House just before Mr. Stanley left, in fact, when the mayor had gone thither to escort his guest to the railway station. The evidence makes it clear that the communication was not made for the purpose of founding any inquiry or eliciting information from Mr. Stanley for or against the suspicion. The learned judge has ruled that the position of the mayor and Mr. Stanley was not such as to privilege the mayor to make this communication to Mr. Stanley by way of warning.

The law on the subject cannot be better stated than in the words of Erle, C.J., in Whiteley v. Adams:—"The foundation of an action for defamation is malice, but defamation pure and simple affords presumptive evidence of malice. That presumption may be rebutted by showing that the circumstances under which the libel was written or the words uttered were such as to render it justifiable. The rule has been laid down in the Court of Exchequer, and again, lately, in the Court of Queen's Bench, that if the circumstances bring the judge to the opinion that the communication was made in the discharge of some social or moral duty, or on the ground of an interest in the party making or receiving it, then, if the words passed in the honest belief on the part of the person writing or uttering them, he is bound to hold that the action fails." It has been argued in this case that whether the mayor had such a duty or not, yet, if he made the communication in the honest belief that it was his duty to make it, the occasion would be privileged. No decision going so far as that has been cited, and such a doctrine would not be within the words which I have quoted of Erle, C.J. I do not think that argument can be maintained. The real question is whether the mayor had a social or moral duty to communicate this information to Mr.

Stanley, or whether he and Mr. Stanley had such a common interest in the matter so communicated as to justify the communication on that ground. Lord Wensleydale, in Toogood v. Spyring, states the rule of law thus: "In general an action lies for the malicious publication of statements which are false in fact and injurious to the character of another (within the well-known limits as to verbal slander), and the law considers such publication as malicious unless it is fairly made by a person in the discharge of some public or private duty, whether legal or moral, or in the conduct of his own affairs in matters where his interest is concerned. In such cases the occasion prevents the inference of malice which the law draws from unauthorized communications, and affords a qualified defence depending upon the absence of actual malice. If fairly warranted by any reasonable occasion or exigency, and honestly made, such communications are protected for the common convenience and welfare of society, and the law has not restricted the right to make them within any narrow limits." In that case the defamatory statement complained of was made concerning a workman employed by the agent of the landlord to do repairs at a farmhouse, and it was made by the tenant of the farm to the landlord's agent. It was held privileged because of the common interest which they had in the work being well done. The tenant was complaining that the work was not well done, that the man had got drunk while he was doing it, and that he believed that he had broken open the cellar door and taken out cider. The learned judge said, in addition to the remarks which I have quoted, that such a communication was privileged "if made with honesty of purpose to a party who has an interest in the inquiry, and that has been very liberally construed." The case of Toogood v. Spyring was cited with approval, and part of the words which I have read from it were quoted in the judgment of the Privy Council in Hamon v. Falle, 4 App. Cas. 247, 27 W. R. Dig. 206, and it was followed in Croft v. Stephens, 10 W. R. 272, 7 H. & N. 570, where the defendant returned some goods to a tradesman on the ground that he had not ordered them. The tradesman thereupon sent him the letter ordering the goods, which purported to be signed by the defendant, to which the defendant replied that it was his firm opinion that the letter was in the plaintiff's handwriting. This communication was held privileged because the defendant and the tradesman had a common interest in ascertaining in whose handwriting the letter was.

In the present case Mr. Stanley and his servant were both staying as guests of the mayor in the Mansion House, which we must take to have been under the mayor's control. I think it must be treated for this purpose as though it had been the mayor's own house. He was greatly interested in the honesty of his guests. It is true that they were on the point of leaving, but if it is admitted that the communication would have been privileged on the ground of common interest if their stay had been prolonged, I do not see how it can possibly be said that such interest ceased until they had actually left the house. Indeed, there is some reason for saying that the moment of departure was the most critical period of the visit, if the suspicion of the plaintiff's honesty had been well founded.

Lord Wensleydale says, as I have pointed out, that the question of interest in the inquiry has been very liberally construed. Without any great liberality of construction the communication in this case might be considered privileged on the ground of the common interest of the mayor and Mr. Stanley in the subject. But I do not rest my judgment on this point alone or principally. There is, in addition to that consideration, the relation of host and guest which existed between them at the time when the communication was made. I have a strong impression that this relation imposed upon the mayor a social and moral duty to act as he did. The true mode of judging upon the question is to put oneself as much as possible in the position of the defendant. I think that most reasonable and cautious people under the same circumstances would have acted as he did, and would have done so from a sense of the duty of a host to his guest.

For these reasons I differ, with respect, from the learned judge who ruled that the defendant was not privileged to make the communication in question to Mr. Stanley. I think that he was so privileged. But then this privilege will be lost if the defendant was actuated by malice; and if there was evidence of such malice this question must be tried by a jury. I have read through the evidence again, both in the notes of the learned judge and in the shorthand notes with reference to the question. The result is that, not only am I convinced of the entire absence of malice on the defendant's part, but, further, I cannot find any evidence of it whatever. The communication which he made was a cautious one, to the effect that the plaintiff was suspected only, and did not go beyond the terms of the letter which had been shown to him. The superintendent of police at Newcastle, who showed him the letter, suggested that he should communicate its contents to Mr. Stanley. The defendant did not know the plaintiff. In fact, he says he had never seen him. There was no conceivable reason why he should have any malicious motive or feeling in the matter. It seems to me neither necessary nor proper to submit the case again to a jury, and I think that the action should be dismissed.

Appeal allowed; judgment entered for the defendant.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, John Nicholls & Co.

Solicitors for the defendant, Collyer-Bristowe & Co., for Hill Motum, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

From Chan. Div. Jan. 28.

In re STUBBS & CO.

BARNEY AND BIRMINGHAM BANKING CO. v. STUBBS & CO. (a.)

Company — Winding up — Debenture — Liquidator — Receiver.

Where a company is being wound up, and an application is made by debenture-holders to appoint a receiver, and another application is made by the creditors in the winding up to appoint a liquidator, the court, in order to avoid trouble and expense, will usually appoint the same person liquidator and receiver.

But, in a case where the only outstanding property of the company consisted of a sum of £180, and the debenture-holders had obtained an order for the appointment of a receiver in a debenture-holders' action previously to the appointment of a liquidator in the winding up,

The Court of Appeal (Lindley and Kay, L.JJ.) (affirming the decision of Kekewich, J., ante, p. 200) refused to appoint the liquidator receiver, in the place of the receiver already appointed in the debenture-holders' action.

In re Henry Pound, Son, & Hutchins, 38 W. R. 18, 42 Ch. D. 402, distinguished.

(a.) Reported by M. J. BLAKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal from the decision of Kekewich, J. (reported ante, p. 200).

On the 30th of September, 1890, a creditor's petition for the winding up of Joshua Stubbs & Co. had been presented. On the 2nd of October an action had been instituted by debenture-holders, whose debentures constituted a charge on the whole of the undertaking and property of the company (including uncalled capital for the time being), with the exception of the company's freehold and leasehold premises; and on the same day an order by consent was made in that action appointing Fisher receiver and manager. On the 15th of October an order was made on the winding-up petition, and Hill was appointed official liquidator.

The debenture-holders, although present when this order was made, neither supported nor opposed it. Subsequently, however, the debenture-holders took out a summons under section 87 of the Companies Act, 1862, for leave to proceed with their action, notwithstanding the winding up. The official liquidator moved that the order made on the 2nd of October appointing Fisher receiver and manager might be discharged, and that the official liquidator might be appointed receiver for the debenture-holders in place of Fisher.

The summons and the motion were heard together by Kekewich, J., who dismissed the motion of the official liquidator, and made an order on the summons giving the debenture-holders leave to continue their action (see the report ante, p. 200).

It appeared that the whole amount of the share capital not paid up was only £180.

The official liquidator appealed.

Renshaw, Q.C., and Ashton Cross, for the appellant.—The usual practice of the court should have been followed, which is to appoint the official liquidator receiver, and discharge the receiver previously appointed: In re David Lloyd & Co., 25 W. R. 872, 6 Ch. D. 339; Campbell v. Compagnie Générale de Bellegarde, 24 W. R. 573, 2 Ch. D. 181; Tottenham v. Swansea Zinc Ore Co., 32 W. R. 716; Perry v. Oriental Hotels Co., 18 W. R. 779, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 420. [KAY, L.J.—How do you get over In re Henry Pound, Son, & Hutchins, 38 W. R. 18, 42 Ch. D. 402?] In the present case the debenture-holders are obliged to come to the court to get a receiver appointed and to proceed with their action, and must, therefore, submit to the jurisdiction of the court. The appointment of the liquidator as receiver will not prejudice the debenture-holders, as he must keep separate accounts. It is both inconvenient and expensive that the court should sanction two officers to realize the same property.

Warmington, Q.C., and R. J. Parker, for the respondents.—There are in fact only eighteen shares of £10 each, not paid up, so that in reality the liquidator has nothing to do. Under the circumstances, the Court of Appeal ought not to interfere with the exercise of discretion of the judge below: Bartlett v. Northumberland-avenue Hotel Co., 53 L. T. N. S. 611, 34 W. R. Dig. 36.

Swinfen Eady, for an assignor of the debentures.

LINDLEY, L.J.—This is an application by the official liquidator of Joshua Stubbs (Limited), that an order of the 2nd of October, 1890, appointing a receiver in a debenture-holders' action may be discharged on the liquidator undertaking to keep a separate account on behalf of the debenture-holders; or, in the alternative, that the liquidator may be appointed receiver for the plaintiffs in the place of the existing receiver. As the case was opened on behalf of the liquidator, it assumed this position—that the court was really employing two officers to realize the same property, namely, Mr. Fisher as receiver for the debenture-holders, and Mr. Hill as official liquidator in the winding up. If there had been nothing more in the case than that, I should have been prepared to say that it was not covered either by In re David Lloyd & Co. or by In re Henry Pound, Son, & Hutchins, and that it fell within the other line of authorities beginning with Perry v. Oriental Hotels Co., and ending with Tottenham v. Swansea Zinc Ore Co. I say that for this reason, that In re David Lloyd & Co. did not involve the consideration of the appointment of a receiver at all. The question there was whether a mortgagee who had commenced a foreclosure action should be allowed to continue it, notwithstanding the winding up, and it was held that he was entitled to leave to do so. That is a well-settled decision, and it has never been questioned; but it does not deal with this particular point. In the case of In re Henry Pound, Son, & Hutchins the facts are entirely different from those here. There the debenture-holders had, by the terms of their contract, a right to appoint their own receiver; and then, it having become necessary to appoint a receiver, they appointed one themselves under their powers. The receiver was not appointed by the court, and was in no sense an officer of the court. But a winding-up order having been made, the receiver could not touch the assets of the company, and the sanction of the court had therefore to be obtained to enable him to take possession as receiver, and an application was made for that purpose. Kay, J., thought that the application ought to be refused, and that the liquidator ought to be appointed receiver, but the Court of Appeal differed from him. In giving judgment on the appeal Cotton, L.J., shows the distinction very plainly between the case of a receiver appointed under a power given to the debenture-holders and the case of a receiver appointed by the court. [The Lord Justice read the passage in the judgment of Cotton, L.J. (42 Ch. D., at p. 419), beginning, "The argument has been this," and ending, "the powers conferred by the deed under which I claim," and continued:—] So that there Cotton, L.J., himself points out the distinction which exists between such a case as the present and that which was before him. Accordingly, in such a case as this, in the absence of any special evidence, I should think the court could, consistently with the decision in In re Henry Pound, Son, & Hutchins, accede to the liquidator's application. I do not think the observations of Giffard, L.J., in Perry v. Oriental Hotels Co. are in any way touched by the later authorities; and, therefore, in my opinion the court would, under ordinary circumstances, as I have intimated, be disposed to accede to such an application as this. But in this case there is this curious circumstance that makes the application of the rule unnecessary here—that there is practically nothing for the liquidator to do; that is to say, he has only to get in a sum of £180 from the shareholders. As Kekewich, J., has said, there is nothing in the circumstances to justify the court in displacing the receiver; and, under the circumstances, I am not prepared to disturb the order made by the learned judge in the exercise of his discretion. The appeal therefore fails.

KAY, L.J.—I am glad this case has come before the Court of Appeal, and that the court has had an opportunity of expressing its opinion that the two cases of In re David Lloyd & Co. and In re Henry Pound, Son, & Hutchins were not intended to alter, and have not altered, the rule of convenience which the court has adopted—namely, that where an application is made to the court to appoint a receiver, and another application is made to appoint a liquidator, the court will take care, in order to avoid trouble and expense, that the receiver and the liquidator shall be the same person in every case where that can properly be done. That has been done in a great many cases noticed in the books, and I have no doubt in a still greater number of cases not noticed in the books; and the convenience of the rule is quite plain, for, supposing a receiver were appointed by the court on behalf of a mortgagee, and then there came a winding up with calls to be made and outstanding assets of that kind to be got in, although future calls were included in the mortgage, and although the debentures might be sufficiently large in terms to cover them, yet the receiver appointed by the court on behalf of the mortgagee would have no power to get in assets of that kind. Without the sanction of the court the receiver would have no right to bring an action or to take proceedings for the particular purpose he had in view; but in a winding up there is machinery provided which can be set in motion by the liquidator for the purpose of making calls in the liquidation and getting in outstanding assets of that kind through the simple and convenient method of what is very well known in chamber practice as a balance order against a shareholder. Now, if there is a large quantity of outstanding assets in the shape of capital not called up, and it therefore becomes necessary that this cheap and expeditious mode of getting in those assets should be put in action, then there would be very strong reasons for making the same person receiver and liquidator, because he is then armed with the power the official liquidator has of using this machinery for the benefit of the mortgagee. If this had been a case of that kind, I confess I should have been strongly inclined to interfere with the exercise by the learned judge below of his discretion; but it turns out that the only uncalled capital of this company consists of eighteen shares of £10 each, or a sum of £180 altogether, so that to suppose that there is anything special for the liquidator to do is out of the question, and therefore the only reason for displacing the receiver and appointing the liquidator in his place fails.

It appears that the receiver appointed on behalf of the mortgagee has been appointed also manager of the business, but we are told that there is no business to carry on at all. If there were any business to be carried on I confess that would be, to my mind, a strong reason for appointing the same person official liquidator and also receiver and manager. The official liquidator would be much more qualified to carry on the business than the mortgagee's receiver would be. The conclusion we come to is this: The receiver of the mortgagee has been appointed; he is in possession; there is no special reason for removing him. This is, in fact, an application for removing him and appointing the official liquidator in his place. One matter to be considered is, that in the exercise of the special powers vested in him, the liquidator might incur considerable costs, and if the two offices were combined it would be a question how much of those costs should be charged against the mortgagee. I should be loth to allow those costs without some strong reason. Upon the whole, I agree with what has been said by Lindley, L.J., that where the judge below has exercised his discretion, and there is no sufficient reason for interfering with that discretion as he has exercised it, this court ought not to interfere.

Accordingly, in my opinion, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors, Henshall Fereday, for Reece, Harris, & Co., Birmingham; Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Smith, Pinsent, & Co., Birmingham; Taylor, Hoare, & Box, for Horton, Lee, & Lee, Birmingham.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Stirling, J. } June 5.

In re S. A. JONES.
BULLIS v. JONES. (a.)

Practice—Order drawn up, but not passed and entered—Oversight—Order re-drawn nunc pro tunc.

Where an order had been drawn up, but never passed and entered, the Court allowed the order to be re-drawn up, passed, and entered nunc pro tunc.

Motion.

By an order of the 3rd of June, 1885, W. R. S. Thomas and W. D. Bullis were appointed trustees of certain estates settled by the will of S. A. Jones for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1882. The order was entered in the Registrar's book, and on the 12th of June the papers were left with the registrar for the order to be drawn up. The minutes of the order were settled by the Registrar, and the order was taken away and engrossed by the solicitor acting in the matter, but was never left to be passed and entered. By virtue of the order the trustees sold the settled estate and invested the proceeds in the purchase of other property. Thomas died on the 19th of February, 1886, and it was only recently discovered that the order had never been perfected. The solicitor in the matter had retired from practice, and the engrossment of the order could not be found.

Oswald, for the surviving trustee and the tenant for life of the settled estate, moved ex parte to have the order re-drawn up, passed, and entered nunc pro tunc, and cited Lawrence v. Richmond, 1 J. & W. 241; Russell v. Tapping, 3 W. R. 379; Ex parte the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, 18 W. R. 724; Daniell's Chancery Practice, 6th ed., p. 811, and Seton on Decrees, 4th ed., p. 154.

STIRLING, J., made the order as asked.

Solicitors, Anderson & Sons.

Chan. Div. } Stirling, J. } April 10.

JOHN MORLEY BUILDING CO. v. BARRAS. (b.)

Company—Directors—Validity of appointment—Practice—Motion to stay action—Costs—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 67; Table A, arts. 35, 52, 53, 58, 62, 71.

Article 58 of Table A to the Companies Act, 1862, does not apply to mere de facto directors, nor to subscribers to the memorandum of association, who, by article 53, are "deemed to be directors," no directors having been appointed by them under article 52; but only to directors who have been duly appointed under the articles.

Where no directors have been appointed by the subscribers to the memorandum of association, nor have they themselves acted as directors, persons who have constituted themselves directors de facto cannot retire from office under article 58, and then continue in office as "vacating directors" under article 62.

The power of appointing directors given to the subscribers of the memorandum of association under article 52 remains in force until an appointment has been made, and reasonable notice only is required for calling a meeting of subscribers of the memorandum of association.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(b.) Reported by H. M. CHARTERS MACPHERSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Motion.

The facts and arguments are sufficiently stated in the judgment of Stirling, J.

Hastings, Q.C., and D. L. Alexander, for the applicants.

Buckley, Q.C., and Quin, for the respondents.

STIRLING, J.—This is rather a peculiar motion; but it is founded upon the authority of Newbiggin-by-the-Sea Gas Co. v. Armstrong, 28 W. R. 217, 13 Ch. D. 310, and the real question raised is, who are the directors of the company at the present moment?

An action has been brought in the name of the company against certain gentlemen, asking for an injunction to restrain them from holding themselves out or acting as directors, and from intermeddling with the affairs of the company or dealing with its funds. That has been met by the present motion, which is also in the name of the company and addressed to the solicitors who issued the writ and to the defendants, asking that all proceedings in the action may be stayed, on the ground that it has been instituted without the authority of the applicants, and that the solicitors may be ordered to pay the costs. The real applicants are, no doubt, the defendants in the action, and the question is, whether they have been duly appointed directors?

The company was incorporated under Table A of the Companies Act, 1862, article 52 of which provides that "the number of the directors, and the names of the first directors, shall be determined by the subscribers of the memorandum of association." Article 53 provides that "until directors are appointed the subscribers of the memorandum shall be deemed to be directors," and article 58 provides that "at the first ordinary meeting after the registration of the company the whole of the directors shall retire from office."

The first ordinary meeting of the company was held on the 3rd of September, 1890, and the adjourned ordinary meeting on the 25th of September, 1890, but nothing was done at either meeting. In the meantime no directors had been appointed by the subscribers to the memorandum of association, nor had they acted as directors; but certain gentlemen appear to have constituted themselves directors and proceeded to act as such. Under article 71 of Table A and section 67 of the Companies Act, 1862, their Acts may possibly be binding, as regards strangers, upon the company; but in point of fact they were never duly appointed directors.

After a time a dispute arose, in which Mr. Rumney, one of these gentlemen, took one side, and Mr. J. H. Matthews, one of the subscribers to the memorandum and secretary to the company, took the other, and the present motion is the result of the quarrel. Mr. Matthews, on the 29th of December, 1890, being advised that the proper course was to hold a meeting of the subscribers to the memorandum, issued a circular calling a meeting for the 31st of December, 1890. That notice was sent to each subscriber, and a meeting was held at which, according to the evidence, ten out of the twelve subscribers were present. No business was transacted, and the meeting was adjourned for fourteen days.

Mr. Matthews says that in the meantime he received a letter from Mr. Rumney asking him to call a meeting of the subscribers. He accordingly, on the 10th of January, issued a circular calling a meeting of subscribers for the 12th of January. On the day fixed ten subscribers attended; two of them delivered a written protest and withdrew, but the rest remained, and, the number of subscribers being twelve, there was still a majority present. The defendants were then elected directors, and, if that meeting was duly constituted, were duly elected.

What was done by the other side—the gentlemen who have been called the de facto directors—was that they attempted to get themselves appointed directors by a document signed by only seven of the subscribers, and, therefore, insufficient within article 52. Further, three of the signatures were obtained in a way which seems to invalidate the appointment, but I need not decide that point, for, even if all the signatures were good, the document is not a valid appointment of the first directors.

Then, have these persons a title in any other way? Mr. Buckley says they were de facto directors down to the holding of the first meeting, that article 58 applies to them, and that as directors they then retired from office. Then he says that as no directors were then or at the adjourned meeting appointed in their places, article 62 applies to the de facto directors, and that as "vacating directors" they continue in office till the ordinary meeting in next year. But does that article apply to de facto directors at all? I think it only applies to those directors who have been validly appointed in pursuance of the articles; when no appointment at all has been made, the article either does not apply at all, or, if it does, it only provides that the vacating directors shall continue in office, and does not confer on them any better title than they had before. Therefore, the de facto directors do not derive any authority from that clause as against directors duly appointed.

Then it is said, if that is so, that under articles 53 and 62, the first ordinary meeting having passed without anything being done, the subscribers of the memorandum remain directors, and must continue as such till the first ordinary meeting in next year. That is not a good argument, because article 58 says that "at the first ordinary meeting after the registration of the company the whole of the directors shall retire from office," and article 53 says that "until directors are appointed the subscribers of the memorandum of association shall be deemed to be directors." The subscribers are not directors, but only to "be deemed" such; and I think that article 58, when construed with articles 53 and 62, means that the whole of the appointed directors shall retire, and has no application to the subscribers of the memorandum at all.

Then, have the subscribers now lost their power, under article 52, of determining who shall be the first directors, because the first general meeting has been held? I think not. Until an appointment of directors has been made, the power given by that article remains in force, and in January, 1891, the subscribers were the persons having the power to appoint directors.

Has the power under article 52 been validly exercised? It has been contended that proper notice was not given of the meeting of the 12th of January, because seven days' notice under article 35, as in the case of a general meeting, was not given the subscribers. But that article does not apply at all to meetings of the subscribers; it only applies to general meetings. There is no special provision in Table A as to convening meetings of subscribers, and, therefore, I must hold that reasonable notice was sufficient; and upon the evidence I think that the two days' notice given in this case was sufficient and reasonable.

I think, in the result, that the defendants were duly elected directors of the company, and the motion succeeds. The order must go in the same form as in Newbiggin-by-the-Sea Gas Co. v. Armstrong.

Solicitors, J. C. F. Barfield; Hammond & Richards.

Chan. Div. } Romer, J. } March 6, 7, 9, 23.

BARKER v. FURLONG. (a.)

Conversion—Wrongful conversion of chattels—Trustee—Possession by cestui que trust*—Auctioneers, under what circumstances liable—Practice—Calling opposite party as a witness when permitted.*

Trustees can maintain an action for wrongful conversion of chattels which were in possession of their cestui que trust under the provisions of a trust instrument, his possession being in law their possession for this purpose. In such a case a defendant cannot set up, by way of defence, the title of a third person, who has not asserted or who has waived his claim to the chattels.

A broker or auctioneer who only settles the price as between vendor and purchaser, receiving commission for so doing, is liable as for wrongful conversion if the vendor is not entitled to sell the goods. Secus, if the broker or auctioneer receives the goods into his own custody, and, on selling them, delivers them to the purchaser with the intention of passing the property in them.

Turner v. Hockey, 56 L. J. Q. B. 301, 35 W. R. Dig. 209, commented on.

After a defendant's case was closed, the defendant himself not having been called as a witness in support of it, an application by plaintiff's counsel to call him as a witness refused, it being admitted that plaintiff's counsel had not been led by any misrepresentation to suppose that the defendant would be called.

Trial of action.

This was an action claiming a declaration that the defendants were jointly and severally liable to account for and make good the value of certain furniture bequeathed by the will of Mrs. Shalless, deceased, which the plaintiffs alleged to have been wrongfully converted.

Mrs. Shalless was immediately before her marriage with the defendant Arthur Shalless entitled to certain furniture. On the marriage, which took place on the 2nd of November, 1876, a settlement was executed by which the furniture was assigned to trustees upon trust immediately after the marriage to sell at their discretion and invest the proceeds, and to hold the same upon such trusts and to and for such ends, intents, and purposes, and in such manner and form in all respects as Mrs. Shalless should, notwithstanding coverture, by deed, will, or testamentary writing appoint, and subject thereto upon trust as therein mentioned. There was a proviso in the settlement that, notwithstanding the trust for sale, the trustees should not sell the furniture so long as Mrs. Shalless was willing and able to retain the actual possession and personal enjoyment of the same, without her consent in writing, and that in the meantime they should stand possessed of the furniture, or such part or parts thereof as should be unsold, in trust for such person or persons, and in such manner as Mrs. Shalless should, notwithstanding coverture, by any writing with the written consent of the trustees or trustee from time to time or at any time appoint, and subject thereto upon trust to permit it to be used by Mrs. Shalless during her life for her separate use without power of anticipation.

From the marriage to her death, which occurred on the 8th of October, 1888, Mrs. Shalless remained in possession of the furniture, and for several years of that time she was living apart from her husband, who had left her. During the whole of that time the trustees never intervened or made any claim in respect of the furniture, except on one occasion when, the husband's creditors having claimed it, interpleader proceedings were taken in the name of Mrs. Shalless and her trustees, and the creditors abandoned their claim.

By her will, dated the 17th of August, 1888, Mrs. Shalless appointed the plaintiff Barker executor and trustee, and he, shortly after her death, proved the will. Another executor and trustee having renounced probate and disclaimed the trusts of the will, the plaintiff Baxter was, on the 31st of July, 1889, appointed trustee with Barker, in his place.

By her will Mrs. Shalless gave all her furniture and other household effects to her trustees upon trust to permit her husband and her infant son to have and enjoy the same during their joint lives and the life of the survivor, and after the death of the survivor she directed that the furniture and effects should fall into and form part of her residuary personal estate. In addition to the furniture and effects she was also entitled to a freehold house in which the furniture was and in which she lived, and by her will she devised her real and residuary personal estate to her trustees upon trust to sell and, after payment of her funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, to invest the residue as therein mentioned and to hold the same in trust to pay certain legacies, and subject thereto in trust to pay the income to her husband until her son should attain twenty-one, he maintaining and educating her said son, and on her son attaining twenty-one upon trust to pay him a legacy, and subject thereto to pay the income to her husband for life, and after his decease upon trust as therein mentioned.

Shortly after the death of Mrs. Shalless, Barker went to the house and had an inventory of the furniture taken, telling the servant who was in the service of Mrs. Shalless at the time of her death, that he was her executor, and directing the servant to look after the furniture, as it was to be held in trust. The servant remained in the house for a month after the death of Mrs. Shalless, and was paid by Barker as executor out of Mrs. Shalless' estate a quarter's salary, representing two months before and one month after the death, for which sum she gave Barker a receipt. Barker did not know of the settlement till some time afterwards, and he permitted Arthur Shalless to live in the house and to have the use of the furniture as beneficiary under the will. The servant above mentioned waited on him during the month, but it was stated in Barker's evidence that her duty was also to look after the house and furniture. On or about the 25th of September, 1889, Arthur Shalless, without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiffs, removed part of the furniture and sent it to London, whence it was subsequently sent to the saleroom of Furlong & Son, auctioneers, of Woolwich, who sold part of it for £121 6s. 6d. net, which they paid to Arthur Shalless, delivering the furniture sold to the purchaser and the remainder to Arthur Shalless, who appropriated it to his own use.

The trustees of the will thereupon brought this action against Arthur Shalless, his brother Henry Shalless, who acted as his agent, and the auctioneers, claiming from Arthur Shalless the full value of the furniture, and from the auctioneers and Henry Shalless the sum of £121 6s. 6d.

(a.) Reported by C. HERBERT BROWN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The trustees of the settlement never interfered or made any claim to the furniture, and after the commencement of the action disclaimed all interest therein.

The defendant Arthur Shalless put in a defence, but did not appear at the hearing.

It appeared on the evidence that the defendant Henry Shalless had been actively concerned as agent for his brother in the transactions complained of; that he had consigned the furniture to the auctioneers; and that the auctioneers sold under his instructions and after consultation with him as to the preparations for the sale, and dealt with him as his brother's agent. There was nothing, however, to show that he knew that his brother was acting improperly in selling.

The defendants Furlong & Son by their defence contended that the furniture did not belong either to Mrs. Shalless or the plaintiffs, but to the trustees of the settlement; or, in the alternative, that the plaintiff Barker, as executor, had assented to the bequest to the husband, who, they said, at the time of the alleged conversion, was entitled, both in his own right and as guardian of his son, to the sole possession of the furniture. They further insisted that they had acted bonâ fide on the request of Arthur Shalless and his brother. They also claimed, if found liable, to have a right of indemnity over against their co-defendants.

Haldane, Q.C., and E. Ford, for the plaintiffs.—Mrs. Shalless had a complete jus disponendi, and by the exercise of her power of appointment, and by appointing the plaintiff Barker as executor, has conferred on him the right to receive the goods, and, therefore, to maintain this action: In re Hoskin's Trusts, 25 W. R. 779, 5 Ch. D. 229, 6 Ch. D. 281, and In re Philbrick, 13 W. R. 570. The plaintiff Barker was in lawful possession, which confers on him a right of action, though the temporary occupation was in another; and the plaintiffs' right of action is not affected by any possibility of a right in the trustees of the settlement, which they never asserted, and have since expressly disclaimed: Congreve v. Evetts, 10 Ex. 298, 2 W. R. Dig. 162, and Wooderman v. Baldock, 8 Taunt. 676. The auctioneers are liable (Hollins v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 757, see pp. 787, 795, 23 W. R. Dig. 238), though acting innocently: Adamson v. Jarvis, 4 Bing. 66, and McEntire v. Potter & Co., 37 W. R. 607, 22 Q. B. D. 438. Turner v. Hockey, 56 L. J. Q. B. 301, 35 W. R. Dig. 209, is not an authority, as it is in conflict with Hollins v. Fowler. Moreover, it is distinguishable from the present case.

As to the liability of Henry Shalless they referred to Stephens v. Elwall, 4 M. & S. 259; Hardman v. Booth, 11 W. R. 239, 1 H. & C. 803; and Pollock on Torts, 1st ed., p. 171.

Neville, Q.C., and Mulligan, for the defendants Furlong & Son.—Where constructive possession is relied on, as in the case of a bailee or cestui que trust, it is open to the person charged with conversion to show that the property is in a third person. The question here is whether the plaintiffs had the right of possession of the goods, as well as the property in them: Bradley v. Copley, 1 C. B. 685; Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Smith's L. C., 9th ed., p. 385; Gordon v. Harper, 7 T. R. 9; and Underhill on Torts, 5th ed., p. 269. The property in this case was in the trustees of the settlement, there being an absolute power of sale which was exercisable after Mrs. Shalless's death: In re Tweedy and Miles, 33 W. R. 133, 27 Ch. D. 315; her power of appointment being over the proceeds of sale. The auctioneers were not guilty of conversion, having received the goods from the person in actual possession of them through his agent: Turner v. Hockey; Greenway v. Fisher, 1 C. & P. 190; and Fine Art Society v. Union Bank of London, 35 W. R. 114, 17 Q. B. D. 705.

Johnston Edwards, for Henry Shalless, referred to the dictum of Blackburn, J., in Hollins v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 767; Selwyn's Nisi Prius, 13th ed., p. 1289; Fenn v. Bittleston, 7 Ex. 152; and Lancashire Wagon Co. v. Fitzhugh, 6 H. & N. 502, 9 W. R. C. L. Dig. 63; and as to want of title in the plaintiffs adopted the argument of counsel for the defendants Furlong & Son.

Haldane, Q.C., in reply, asked permission to call the defendant Henry Shalless, who had not given evidence on his own behalf, but the application was refused.

ROMER J., after stating the facts as reported above, continued:—As against the defendant Arthur Shalless, who does not appear, the action is practically undefended, and there must be judgment against him for the full amount stated in the statement of claim, namely, £228 14s. 11d., with costs.

As against Furlong & Son and Henry Shalless, they are sued for conversion of the goods. They raise two defences, first, that the plaintiffs not being at the date of the alleged conversion in actual possession they, the defendants, may set up jus tertii, and that, the property in the goods really being in the trustees of the settlement, the plaintiffs cannot maintain their action; and, secondly, that they (the defendants) never converted the goods.

As to the first point it seems clear that Mrs. Shalless's will passed the beneficial interest in the goods; that upon her death the plaintiff Barker as executor and trustee took possession of the furniture and house; and that he allowed A. Shalless to remain in occupation as a beneficiary under the will until the removal of the furniture. The occupation at the time of the removal of the furniture was by right of the possession of the plaintiff Barker, or of him and Baxter, who were at law entitled to possession. The plaintiffs had not only an immediate right of possession, but a good title to the chattels as against all the world, subject only to a possible claim on the part of the trustees of the settlement, which claim in fact was never made. This in my judgment gave the plaintiffs ample right to bring this action. When a cestui que trust is in occupation under a trust, the trustee has an immediate right to possession in the eye of the law, sufficient to enable him to bring an action for trover. This appears from the case of White v. Morris, 11 C. B. 1015. That case decided that where goods are assigned as security for an advance of money, upon trust to permit the assignor to remain in possession until default in payment at the time stipulated, and upon further trust to sell them on such default being made, the assignee has a sufficient possession to enable him to maintain an action of trespass against a wrongdoer. The facts were shortly these: Robinson and Storey assigned to White certain goods to hold to White upon trust to permit Robinson and Storey, the mortgagors, to hold the goods until payment of the money to become due under the deed should be demanded, and with power to White to sell in default of payment. Certain creditors of one of the mortgagors obtained judgment against him and issued execution, and seized and sold the goods before any demand had been made for payment of the mortgage money. In support of the case of the creditors Bradley v. Copley was cited. But that case is distinguished in White v. Morris, on the ground that the possession of the mortgagors was, by virtue of the trusts of the deed, the possession of the mortgagee, or, in other words, that the mortgagee had in law an immediate right to possession. Jervis, C.J., said

(11 C. B., at p. 1028) that counsel "had contended that no present possession of the goods in question passed to the plaintiff under the deed of assignment . . . sufficient to entitle him to maintain this action, and in support of this view he relied upon the cases of Bradley v. Copley and Wheeler v. Montefiore, 2 Q. B. 133. But a comparison of the deeds in those cases with the language of the deed here will show that they have no application. Here a right to the possession did pass to the plaintiff by the deed, though it was incumbered with a trust, but which trust is quite consistent with the right to the possession remaining in the plaintiff. In the cases cited, however, instead of a trust there was a proviso to the effect that until default made the assignors should have possession, and no right to the present possession passed to the assignees." And Maule, J., at p. 1030, says: "I am of the same opinion. As to the plaintiff's not being possessed, the distinction between this case and those relied on by counsel has been pointed out by the Lord Chief Justice in a manner quite satisfactory to my mind. The deed was one under which the plaintiff was bound to take possession of the goods assigned, for the purpose of enabling him to perform the trusts." The same view of the law is taken in Wooderman v. Baldock. And when there is a right of immediate possession coupled with a title to goods, though the title may not be perfect as against, or may even be liable to be defeated by, the claim of a third person, yet, if that third person has not intervened, a wrongdoer dealing with the chattels cannot set up the title of that third person as an answer to an action against him for his wrongdoing. In Morgan v. Knight, 12 W. R. 428, 15 C. B. N. S. 669, a man during his first bankruptcy acquired certain goods and fraudulently transferred them to his son, and on his again becoming bankrupt the assignee in the second bankruptcy sued the son for the value of the goods. The son set up as a defence the title of the assignee in the first bankruptcy. It was held no defence as against the assignee in the second bankruptcy, as the assignee in the first bankruptcy had not intervened, and the second bankruptcy was not void.

As regards the second point argued on behalf of the defendants, it is necessary to distinguish the case of Furlong & Son, the auctioneers, from that of H. Shalless. As to Furlong & Son, it is urged on their behalf that they have only acted as auctioneers, and that in so acting they have not been guilty of any conversion, and they rely on the case of Turner v. Hockey. Now, I agree that if an auctioneer or broker does nothing more than settle the price, as between a vendor and a purchaser of goods, and takes his commission, he is not liable for conversion should it turn out that the vendor was not entitled to sell. That is the case put by Lord Bramwell in Cochrane v. Rymill, 27 W. R. 777, as one where the auctioneer would act merely as a conduit pipe, and not be liable for a conversion. But where, as in the present case, the auctioneer receives the goods into his custody, and, on selling them, hands over the goods to the purchasers, with a view to passing the property in them, then I think that he, the auctioneer, has converted the goods and is liable accordingly. In support of this view I may refer to Cochrane v. Rymill; Featherstonhaugh v. Johnston, 8 Taunt. 237; and Adamson v. Jarvis, 4 Bing. 66. The general rule is, that where an agent takes part in transferring the property in a chattel, and it turns out that his principal has no title, the agent's ignorance of this fact affords him no protection. I was referred to the cases of a carrier and a packing agent as supporting the case of the auctioneers. But the carrier and packing agent are generally held not to have converted, because by their acts they merely purport to change the position of the goods, and not the property in them. In the case of Hollins v. Fowler I find statements supporting the views which I have stated. Blackburn, J., says (at p. 766): "I cannot find it anywhere distinctly laid down, but I submit to your lordships that, on principle, one who deals with goods at the request of the person who has the actual custody of them, in the bonâ fide belief that the custodian is the true owner, or has the authority of the true owner, should be excused for what he does if the act is of such a nature as would be excused if done by the authority of the person in possession, if he was a finder of the goods, or intrusted with their custody," and, again, he says, (L. R. 7 H. L., at p. 767):—"Thus a warehouseman with whom goods have been deposited is guilty of no conversion by keeping them, or restoring them to the person who deposited them with him, though that person turns out to have had no authority from the true owner. . . . And the same principle would apply to the cases alluded to by my brother Hannen in his judgment in the court below, of persons 'acting in a subsidiary character, like that of a person who has the goods of a person employing him to carry them, or a caretaker, such as a wharfinger.' . . . It was said, 'Suppose that the defendant had sent the delivery order to Micholls, who had handed it to the railway company, requesting them by means of it to procure the goods in Liverpool and carry them to Stockport, and the railway company had done so, would the railway company have been guilty of conversion?' I apprehend the company would not, for merely to transfer the custody of goods from a warehouse at Liverpool to one at Stockport is primâ facie an act justifiable in anyone who has the lawful custody of the goods as a finder or bailee; and the railway company, in the case supposed, would be in complete ignorance that more was done. But if the railway company, in the case supposed, could have been fixed with knowledge that more was done than merely changing the custody, and knew that the company's servants were transferring the property from one who had it in fact to another who was going to use it up, the question would be nearly the same as that in the present case." Cleasby, B. (at p. 787), states the exact point which arises in this case. "How far," he says, "the intermeddling with the goods themselves by delivering them would do so"—that is, involve any responsibility to third persons—"admits of question, and was the subject of much argument at the bar, and might depend upon the extent to which the broker in each case could be regarded as having an independent possession of the goods and delivering them for the purpose of passing the property. For example, an auctioneer delivers possession for the purpose of passing the property, and it would not be disputed that he would be liable, as upon a conversion, to the real owner." Lord Chelmsford (at p. 795) says: "But to my mind the proposition which fits the case is, that any person who, however innocently, obtains possession of the goods of a person who has been fraudulently deprived of them, and disposes of them, whether for his own benefit or that of any other person, is guilty of a conversion." Lord Cairns (at p. 797) deals with the case in substantially the same way. Lord O'Hagan says (at p. 799): "The defendants got possession of the plaintiffs' cotton. They had it conveyed to the railway station, and forwarded to the purchaser in Stockport, who paid for it, and made yarn of it. It seems to me that this state of facts entitles the plaintiffs to recover in an action of trover, which rests on a right of property, wrongfully interfered with, at the peril of the person interfering with it, and whether the interference be for his own use or that of anybody else." With

[illegible]

[illegible] Henry Shalless. The plaintiffs' counsel, [illegible] asked me to allow him to call this defendant as his witness, because he had assumed that this defendant would be called as a witness on his own behalf, although [illegible] evidence. I did not accede to the application for this reason. In reply to my question the plaintiffs' counsel admitted that he could [illegible] without calling the defendant he had not been misled or anything [illegible] from the other side, [illegible] that they would call him. It appeared to me therefore that the plaintiffs' counsel had in the exercise of his judgment preferred to close his case without calling the defendant, on the chance that the defendant would appear in the box to support his own case when he would be cross-examined without the risk attending his being called as one of the plaintiffs' witnesses, and it appeared to me that if I had granted the plaintiffs' application after the defendant's case had been argued and closed and a reply begun I should be making a precedent which would, if established, lead to an improper amount of laxity in the conduct of a plaintiff's case. But though I refused this application, I fully agree with what Mr. Haldane said, that I am entitled and bound under the circumstances of the defendant not appearing to support his case, though he was in court, to make every reasonable presumption against him; and, in this footing, having regard to the admissions made on behalf of this defendant in the course of the trial, I think that the plaintiffs have established their case against him. From the admitted correspondence of Henry Shalless with Furlong & Son, he appears to have been actively concerned in forwarding the chattels to the auctioneers; it appears, moreover, that the goods were under his control while being forwarded by the railway company; that the keys were sent by his directions, accompanied by letters containing instructions directed to him, care of the auctioneers, which he directed the auctioneers to open for instructions. What those instructions were does not appear; but it does appear that, following this forwarding of the chattels for the auctioneers to deal with according to instructions, they did in fact, as was previously admitted by Henry Shalless during the plaintiffs' opening, receive and sell certain of the chattels; and an admitted letter to Henry Shalless from Furlong & Son shows the auctioneers still consulting him about the preparation for sale of these chattels by the auctioneers after they have received them. Under these circumstances I think Henry Shalless must be taken to have sent the chattels to the auctioneers, and to have instructed the auctioneers to sell them as they did with the view of passing the property in the goods sold to the purchasers as against the true owners of the goods sold. This, in my opinion, amounted to a conversion according to the rules I have before referred to. In fact the case of Henry Shalless in this matter is far stronger as a conversion than that of the agent in Stephens v. Elwall, which has always been recognized as a binding authority, and is referred to with approval in Hollins v. Fowler. Under these circumstances there must be judgment for the plaintiffs against Furlong & Son and Henry Shalless for £121 6s. 6d., the price of the goods sold, and they must pay the costs of the action as against them.

On the question whether H. Shalless was liable to indemnify the auctioneers

Romer, J., said that no promise to indemnify could be implied. H. Shalless warranted that he was acting by the direction of A. Shalless, but he had in fact that authority. Furlong & Son knew that the goods were to be sold by the direction of A. Shalless given by H. Shalless. There was no direction by H. Shalless, except on behalf of A. Shalless; and Furlong & Son did not act on any such footing as that they were to receive an indemnity if any authority was exceeded. This claim of Furlong & Son failed, and they must pay the costs of it.

Solicitors, McDiarmid & Teather, for J. D. & D. M. Macdonald, Newcastle-on-Tyne; E. W. Sampson; Edwin Shalless.

Q. B. Div. (Denman and Wills, JJ.) June 5.

Hayward v. Mutual Reserve Fund Association. (a.)

Practice—Official referee—Jurisdiction to make an order for a commission to examine—Appeal—Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 36, rr. 48–50—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), ss. 14, 15.

The words in ord. 36, r. 50, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883—"the referee shall have the same authority in the conduct of any reference or trial as a judge of the High Court"—must be construed as giving the referee a general control over the conduct of the cause or subject-matter referred to him, and are not limited to the conduct of the actual hearing of the cause. A referee, therefore, has power to hear interlocutory applications, such as for a commission to examine a witness in reference to the cause.

A referee being deemed by section 15 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, to be an "officer of the court," an application will lie to the judge at chambers from his decision on interlocutory matters.

Appeal from the refusal of Mr. Ridley, acting as official referee, to grant an order for a commission to issue, referred by Henn Collins, J., at chambers to the Divisional Court.

This action had been referred by an order of reference made under section 14 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, ordering the whole cause to be tried before the official referee, Mr. Ridley. Before the hearing of the reference, application was made to the referee by the defendants for an order to examine a witness on commission. The official referree refused the application. Upon appeal the judge at chambers doubted (1) whether there was any appeal from the referee, and (2) whether the referee had any jurisdiction to make the order, and referred both questions of jurisdiction to the court.

Bousey, for the defendants.—The official referee is, under section 15 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, made an officer of the court, and "shall have such authority and shall conduct the reference in such a manner as may be prescribed by rules of court." By R. S. C., 1883, ord. 36, rr. 48, 49, 50, the trial of a reference is regulated; and by rule 50 the referee "shall have the same authority with reference to discovery and production of documents and in the conduct of any reference or trial . . . as a judge of the High Court." The jurisdiction of the referee is analogous to that of a master, and as such he could order a commission to issue for the examination of a witness abroad.

(a.) Reported by Spencer L. Holland, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

He cited Richard v. Talbot, 38 W. R. 478; Byrne v. Brown, 37 W. R. 592, 22 Q. B. D. 657: In re Leigh, 25 W. R. 56, 27 Ibid. 241, 4 Ch. D. 661.

Willes Chitty, for the plaintiff.—There is no power in the referee to make any order for a commission. His authority is confined to the trial of the subject-matter referred. Section 14 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, incorporates the repealed section 57 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and section 3 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1842: the whole cause or any issue of fact may be tried before a referee, but a reference is confined to where a referee reports to the judge on some portion of a cause. There is nothing in the section or the ord. 36, rr. 48, &c., taking away the control of the court over the cause referred for trial only to the referee, nor do the rules give to referees the powers of masters except expressly as to discovery and production: Danvillier v. Myers, 29 W. R. 535, 17 Ch. D. 346. Assuming that the referee had jurisdiction, there is no appeal from his decision. The only appeal provided for is by rule 52, for questioning his report, but there is no appeal in interlocutory matters. If there is any appeal it must be to the Divisional Court: Cooke v. The Newcastle Co., 10 Q. B. D. 332.

Bonsey replied.

DENMAN, J.—There is great difficulty undoubtedly in coming to a clear decision as to the meaning of ord. 36, r. 49, owing to its not very happy wording. "Subject to any order to be made by the court or judge ordering the same"; but I take it that the words must be interpreted as being antecedent, and "the same" must refer to the trial by a referee. The real question here turns upon the extent of the meaning of the subsequent words in rule 50, where it is stated that "subject to any such order as last aforesaid," i.e., subject to any special order restricting the reference in any way, "the referee shall have the same authority with respect to discovery and production of documents and in the conduct of any reference or trial . . . as a judge of the High Court." The ordinary meaning of the words, "conduct of a trial" is more restricted, than the one we are, I think, bound here to put upon the phrase. It is technically taken to mean the actual hearing; but putting the words together in this order, "the conduct of the reference or trial," I think the meaning cannot be restricted to the actual hearing, nor do I think the word reference can be restricted as Mr. Chitty would have us believe. The words here embrace all that is commonly meant by a reference; it may be a reference of only one question, or subdivision of a case, or it may be a reference of the whole cause. In both cases the large sense of the word is implied, and the conduct of any reference in this larger sense means the conduct of any part of the cause or matter referred and of the whole or part of any of the subject-matter referred. If so, we cannot restrict the words to the hearing of the reference. The referee has powers with regard to discovery and production of documents specially given him under ord. 36, r. 50, for which, under the old rule, application was formerly necessary to the High Court.

It must be assumed from the wording of the rule that the referee is also to have all the ordinary powers of a judge in the conduct of a cause, subject to any order limiting such. If so, the official referee is an officer of the court, with the powers of the court delegated to him; but, being an officer of the High Court, if he makes a mistake, then, in accordance with the cases, it has been held that, where an officer of the court, having duties as such imposed on him, makes a mistake, parties have power to come to the court to have this set right. That is the application here, though it is nominally an appeal—it is an application to do what the referee declined to do. As to whether upon the merits this ought to be done, I understand that the parties are willing to go before the judge at chambers. On the question of jurisdiction, I think that parties, if they are dissatisfied with the decision of an officer of the court such as a referee, and show reasonable grounds for their dissatisfaction, are entitled to come to the court. I think, therefore, that the true construction of rule 50 of order 36 gives the larger sense to the terms "conduct of any reference or trial" than this technical meaning; that rule 48 regulates, but does not interfere with, the true construction of rule 50; and that the meaning of "the same" in rule 49 refers to the subject-matter of the sentence—viz., trial before a referee, and does not affect the question under rule 50.

WILLS, J.—The reference in this case was a reference of the whole cause under section 14 of the Arbitration Act, 1889. By section 15 of that Act the official or special referee in all cases referred is to act as an officer of the court. It was said by Mr. Chitty that the order here was not one of reference, but only an order for trial, and that the referee had no authority over the action except for the purpose of hearing the trial. But clearly this order in the ordinary form, and this section, covers all references made by order of the court, and the referee has such authority over the whole conduct of the action referred to him as a judge would have had it come before him, subject to any special directions which may have been made by the court referring the cause.

The rule in question (ord. 36, r. 50), dealing with the conduct of the reference, includes all things ancillary thereto in order to bring everything to a satisfactory termination. Under ord. 36, rr. 49, 50, it is difficult, no doubt, to construe the words "the same"; there seems to be no antecedent to those words; but taking the rules together, I suppose it does mean what my learned brother suggests, that, subject to any order limiting the reference, the referee is to have the same ample authority as a judge of the High Court would have had in the conduct of the action. This view is strengthened by section 16 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, and the conduct of a reference must include everything ancillary to it. I cannot understand why it should be supposed that powers to order discovery and production should be given to official referees and yet other powers be withheld. Such powers were probably only expressly given because they are by the rules reserved to the judge at chambers, but the referee is equally expressly endowed with all the other ordinary powers of a judge over the conduct of a cause. Is there, then, any appeal from the referee's exercise of such jurisdiction? Yes, if that jurisdiction has been improperly exercised. The referee is made an officer of the court, and as such he is subject to the control of the court in the exercise of that jurisdiction. The form of application is a review rather than an appeal, as in a review of taxation of costs. It is similar, I may say, to the control which, as a railway commissioner, I exercise over the registrar of that commission, to whom various duties of the court are delegated. That view of the control of the court over masters is confirmed by the old decisions under the Lands Clauses Acts, where the powers as to taxation of the costs of arbitration were specially exempt from appeal, on the ground that in those cases the masters of the Queen's Bench were not exercising powers delegated to them as officers of the court, and analogously that the court would have had control over them had they been so acting.

Appeal allowed on point of jurisdiction, and referred on merits to judge at chambers.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, F. W. Spencer.

Solicitors for the defendants, Foss & Ledsam.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. July 10.

REEVES v. BUTCHER. (a.)

Limitations, Statute of—Simple contract debt—Cause of action—Accruer of—21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3.

By an agreement in writing, dated the 25th of April, 1880, the defendant, in consideration of a sum of money advanced by the plaintiff, stipulated to pay interest thereon by equal quarterly payments, and the plaintiff stipulated not to call in the principal sum for five years if the defendant should so long live and should duly pay the interest. The agreement contained a proviso that, if the defendant died before the expiration of the five years, it should be lawful for the plaintiff to call in the principal upon giving six months' notice to the defendants' executors; and a further proviso that, in case the defendant made default in any payment of interest for twenty-one days after the same became payable, the plaintiff, immediately upon the expiration of the twenty-one days, might call in the principal and all interest owing in respect thereof.

No payment, either of interest or principal, was ever made by the defendant. On the 13th of February, 1891, the plaintiff brought an action to recover the principal sum and also so much of the interest as had accrued thereon since the 13th of February, 1885 (being a period of six years before the issue of the writ). The defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), s. 3.

Held, that the cause of action arose on the expiration of twenty-one days from the 25th of July, 1880, the date when the first quarterly payment of interest became payable, and that the plaintiff's claim was, therefore, barred by the statute.

Hemp v. Garland, 4 Q. B. 519, approved.

Appeal from a divisional court (Day and Lawrance, JJ.) of the Queen's Bench Division.

This was an action instituted on the 13th of February, 1891, to recover a principal sum of £425 18s., with interest thereon at the rate of £7 per cent. per annum, claimed to be due to the plaintiff, Mrs. Harriet Elizabeth Reeves, by the defendant, Sarah Anne Butcher, under an agreement in writing dated the 25th of April, 1880. The defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), s. 3, as a bar to the claim both for principal and interest. The plaintiff, in reply, gave up any claim for interest accrued due prior to the 13th of February, 1885.

By the agreement of the 25th of April, 1880, the defendant, in consideration of the sum of £425 18s advanced to her by the plaintiff, agreed to duly and regularly pay interest on the said principal sum from the date thereof at the rate of £7 per cent. per annum, by equal quarterly payments; and the plaintiff thereby agreed not to call in the principal sum, or any part thereof, during the term of five years from the date of the agreement if the defendant should so long live, and should duly and regularly pay the said interest. Provided always that in case the defendant should die before the expiration of the said term it should be lawful for the plaintiff to call in the said principal sum upon giving to the executors or administrators of the defendant six months' previous notice in writing of her intention so to do; provided also that in case the defendant should make default in payment of any quarterly payment of interest for the period of twenty-one days next after the same should become payable, it should be lawful for the plaintiff immediately upon the expiration of such twenty-one days to call in and demand payment of the said principal sum and all interest then owing or accruing in respect thereof.

No payment in respect of principal or interest had ever been made by the defendant.

The Divisional Court held that the plaintiff's claim was barred by the Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), s. 3, which enacts that "all actions of debt grounded upon any contract without specialty shall be commenced and sued within the time and limitation hereinafter expressed, and not after; that is to say, the said actions for debt, within six years next after the cause of such actions, and not after."

The plaintiff appealed.

McCall, Q.C., and Morton Smith, for the appellant.—The Divisional Court considered the case to be governed by Hemp v. Garland, 4 Q. B. 519. In the present case, however, the plaintiff under this agreement has two distinct causes of action, either of which she could exercise at her option; she might sue the defendant on the expiration of twenty-one days from the first default in payment of interest; or she might wait until the expiration of the five years from the date of the agreement and then sue for non-payment as agreed upon. The cause of action now sued upon did not arise till the 25th of April, 1885, which date is within six years of the date when the writ was issued.

They referred to Hughes v. Palmer, 13 W. R. 974, 19 C. B. N. S. 393.

Loehnis, for the respondent, was not called on.

LINDLEY, L.J.—It would be quite impossible for us to differ from the court below without altering what is well settled law. [The Lord Justice read the terms of the agreement, which are set forth above, and continued:—] The action is to recover the money lent, with interest thereon, under that agreement. The Statute of Limitations is relied on as a defence to the action. [His lordship read the words of section 3 of 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, and continued:—] The words "cause of such action" were the subject of judicial determination in 1848 in Hemp v. Garland, and it was held that the time at which the debt or money might be recovered, was the time at which the statute began to run.

FRY, L.J.—The agreement contains a stipulation by the lender not to call in the principal sum for a period of five years if the borrower should so long live and should duly and regularly pay interest thereon. That would imply a contract to repay the principal at once on the death of the borrower, or the moment default was made in the payment of interest, were it not for the last clause in the agreement. That clause implies a contract for the postponement of the repayment of principal in case of the death of the borrower until the lender has given six months' notice in writing to the executor of the borrower; and it also implies a postponement of the repayment of the principal in case of default in payment of interest until a period of twenty-one days should have elapsed. Subject to these conditions the implied contract to pay the principal remains the same. In this case, therefore, the debt became payable twenty-one days after the 25th of July, 1880, when the first default in payment of interest was made, and therefore the Statute of Limitations applies.

(a.) Reported by M. J. BLAKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

LOPES, L.J.—The old form of the plea of the Statute of Limitations is "that the alleged cause of action did not accrue within six years before this suit." In this case the cause of action accrued on the expiration of twenty-one days from the 25th of July, 1880, the time when default was made in payment of the first quarterly payment of interest. Hemp v. Garland is a decision in accordance with the words of the statute, and is a clear authority in favour of the defendant. In my opinion that case is perfectly good law.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, E. C. Goldring.

Solicitors for the respondent, Marsland, Hewitt, & Urquhart.

From Chan. Div. July 15.

In re DAVIS.
EVANS v. MOORE. (a.)

Limitations, Statute of—Executor—Legacy—Assent of executor—Implied trust—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 8.

The time for bringing an action or other proceeding to recover any legacy is limited by section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, to a period of twelve years next after the accruer of a present right to receive the same; and neither the fact that the executor has assented to the legacy, or that the legacy is coupled with any implied trust, prevents the operation of the statute.

Appeal from North, J.

Henry Davis, by his will, dated April 21, 1825, directed the income of his residuary personal estate to be accumulated until all his grandchildren should attain twenty-one or marry.

Henry Davis died on May 16, 1825, leaving Jane Davis, his widow, and several children, including T. H. Davis, him surviving.

Jane Davis, the widow, by her will, dated May 13, 1848, disposed of her residuary personal estate as follows:—One-third part thereof to her eldest son, the said T. H. Davis, absolutely; one-third to her second son; and the remaining one-third equally between her two grandchildren, Henry A. M. Evans and Mary Evans, the children of her son-in-law, John Evans, absolutely. And the testatrix declared that her son-in-law, John Evans, should from time to time regulate and direct the mode in which, during the minority of the testatrix's grandchildren, the shares bequeathed to them of the testatrix's residuary personal estate, and the income arising therefrom, should "be invested, applied, or accumulated; and that neither John Evans nor the testatrix's executor should be accountable for any loss which might arise in the investments."

The testatrix died on January 4, 1854, having appointed the said T. H. Davis her sole executor, by whom the will was proved on June 22, 1854.

On July 20, 1857, an order was made in an action (Davis v. Stokes) for administration of the estate of Henry Davis, whereby it was declared that the persons who would have been the next of kin of Henry Davis at the time of his death, if he had died intestate, or their respective estates, were entitled to the income, and to the accumulations thereof, which had accrued due on Henry Davis's residuary estate on May 16, 1846 (when a period of twenty-one years from the date of Henry Davis's death expired), and also to the income thereafter to accrue upon such residue and accumulations until the period for distribution of such residue as appointed by the will of Henry Davis should arrive; and the order further directed, inter alia, that one-third part of a certain sum when carried over to an account as therein directed should be paid to T. H. Davis as the legal personal representative of Jane Davis, widow, deceased; and that the amount of the dividends which should accrue on any sum of Consols from time to time standing in the name of the Accountant-General in Davis v. Stokes when carried over should be divided and paid each year, as to one-third part thereof, to T. H. Davis as the legal personal representative of Jane Davis, deceased.

Jane Davis, as the widow of Henry Davis, would have been entitled to one-third of his personal estate if he had died intestate, and the effect of the above order was that one-third of the accumulations accrued from May 16, 1846, to the date of the order, and one-third of the income to arise in the future on the residuary estate of Henry Davis until the period of distribution, was directed to be paid to T. H. Davis as the legal personal representative of Jane Davis.

Mary Evans and Henry A. M. Evans, the two above-mentioned grandchildren of Jane Davis, and who under her will were together entitled to one-third of her residuary personal estate, attained the age of twenty-one respectively in 1863 and 1866.

T. H. Davis died on July, 21, 1888, and appointed W. E. Moore his executor.

T. H. Davis, up to his death, received each year one-third part of the income of the fund in court as the legal personal representative of Jane Davis under the order of July 20, 1857, but never rendered any account or made any payment to Henry A. M. Evans or Mary Evans in respect of their share therein.

On January 15, 1891, an originating summons was taken out by Henry A. M. Evans and Mary Evans as plaintiffs, Moore, as the executor of T. H. Davis, being the defendant, and by it the plaintiffs claimed to have it declared that T. H. Davis was, and that his estate now is, liable to account for and make good to the plaintiffs one-third part of the dividends and income received by him as the legal personal representative of Jane Davis under and in accordance with the order of July 20, 1857.

On the hearing of the summons the defendant admitted liability to account, but contended that the account could only be claimed for twelve years prior to the date of the originating summons.

North, J., sitting in chambers, however, made an order directing an account of the dividends, interest, and income received by T. H. Davis, deceased, the executor of Jane Davis, under and in accordance with the order of July 20, 1857, and by the defendant Moore, the executor of T. H. Davis, since the death of T. H. Davis, or either of them; and also directing an inquiry in what manner T. H. Davis and the defendant applied such dividends and income so received.

The defendant appealed, and by his notice of appeal asked that the order might be limited to an account of the dividends, interest, and income received within twelve years prior to January 15, 1891 (the date of the originating summons), by T. H. Davis, executor of Jane Davis, under and in accordance with the order of July 20, 1857, and by the defendant, the executor of T. H. Davis, since the death of T. H. Davis, or either of them.

(a.) Reported by M. J. BLAKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Haldane, Q.C., and Pauli, for the appellant.—This is a proceeding to recover a legacy—viz., a share of residue under the will of Jane Davis—and by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 8, "No action or other proceeding shall be brought to recover . . . any legacy, but within twelve years next after a present right to receive the same shall have accrued." There was no trust declared by the will of Jane Davis with respect to the plaintiffs' share of her residuary estate, nor did the order of July 20, 1857, create an express trust with respect to such share. No doubt T. H. Davis must be taken to have assented to the bequest to the plaintiffs of one-third of Jane Davis's residuary estate, but assent to a bequest does not constitute an executor a trustee of the legacy so as to prevent the statute operating: In re Rowe, Jacobs v. Hind, 58 L. J. Ch. 703, 37 W. R. Dig. 4. [FRY, L.J.—In the present case the executor assented to a legacy consisting of a share of residue, part of which was an accruing sum to be received, under an order of the court, by the executor, and by him only; when he received it, did he not become a trustee?] No; because the sum was received by him as executor, not as trustee. In Phillipo v. Munnings, 2 My. & Cr. 309, the executor was by the will expressly constituted a trustee of the legacy there in question. [LOPES, L.J., referred to O'Reilly v. Walsh, Ir. Rep. 6 Eq. 555, 21 W. R. Dig. 289.] Section 25, sub-section (2), of the Judicature Act, 1873, enacts that no claim of a cestui que trust against his trustee for any property held on an express trust shall be barred by any statute of limitations, but that does not touch a mere implied trust.

They referred also to In re Johnson, 33 W. R. 502, 29 Ch. D. 964, at p. 974.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and B. B. Rogers, for the plaintiffs, the respondents.—The will of Jane Davis on its true construction creates an express trust of the share of the plaintiffs in her residuary estate. It amounts to a direction to T. H. Davis to invest one-third of the residue for the benefit of the plaintiffs, the then infant children of John Evans. Phillipo v. Munnings was not the case of an express trust. The defendant cannot claim the benefit of the Trustee Act, 1888, as his testator has received the money and converted it to his own use.

Haldane, Q.C., in reply.—T. H. Davis was not constituted a trustee of the residue by Jane Davis' will. The declaration in that will as to investment is, that John Evans, the father of the plaintiffs, might have directed an investment of the plaintiffs' share of the residue to be made, and that might have been done in John Evans' name, or the executor might have paid the infants' share into court under the Legacy Duty Act (36 Geo. 3, c. 52).

He also referred to 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38 (Intestate's Estate), s. 13.

LINDLEY, L.J.—The question raised is whether an order of North, J., directing an account against the executor of an executor ought to be left open as to time, or whether a limit of twelve years previous to the bringing of the action ought to be inserted in the order, having regard to the provisions of section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874.

The real question is as to the liability of T. H. Davis, the immediate testator of the present defendant. The plaintiffs are claiming against his estate for what they say T. H. Davis received as executor of Jane Davis. Jane Davis had a fund, arising from accumulations, which was in court under an order which directed the income of the accumulated fund to be paid, as to one-third part thereof to T. H. Davis as the legal personal representative of his mother, Jane Davis, who was found to be entitled to one-third part of this fund. Jane Davis by her will disposed of her residuary personal estate as follows:—[The Lord Justice read the will as above set out, and continued:—] The will contained no clause expressly in terms directing the one-third of the residue bequeathed to her grandchildren to be invested; the clause only confers on John Evans, the father of the grandchildren, power to "regulate and direct the mode in which" the shares bequeathed to the grandchildren should "be invested, applied, or accumulated" during their minority, and declares that neither the father nor the executor shall be accountable for any loss which might arise in the investments. It was contended by Mr. Cozens-Hardy that on the true construction of this clause in the will, the executor became a trustee for the grandchildren and that it contained an express trust to invest their shares for their benefit. I cannot find it. I think Mr. Haldane was right in what he said on this point, and that the clause contains no express trust to invest, unless John Evans, the father of the grandchildren, directed an investment. But suppose he gave no directions, or suppose he died, where is there any clause directing T. H. Davis to invest? The position of T. H. Davis, then, would only be that of an executor having property to divide amongst infants.

In my opinion there is no express trust in this will. If so, what is the true nature of the claim of these grandchildren? Are they in a position to claim anything more than a legacy under this will? In my opinion they can only claim as for a legacy, and, that being so, they are brought within section 8 of the Act of 1874. I think Mr. Haldane is right in his contention as to that. But it was further contended by Mr. Hardy that T. H. Davis was constituted a trustee under the order of the 20th of July, 1857. The answer to that argument is clear. The Statute of Limitations excepts one class of trusts, and one only, viz., express trusts, and this order no more declares an express trust than does the will. An implied trust will not do, for a legacy does not cease to be a legacy because it is coupled with some implied trust. In one sense an executor is always a trustee. But the Statutes of Limitation cannot be got rid of by calling the executor a trustee, or by proving him to be a trustee. The only way of getting out of the Statute of Limitations is by proving an express trust. I think the statute applies in this case and the appeal must be allowed.

FRY, L.J.—The plaintiffs are each entitled to one-sixth share of the residuary estate of their grandmother, Jane Davis. Part of her residuary estate consisted of the dividends of a fund in court. The plaintiffs' action is primâ facie an action brought to recover their legacy, and section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, says that such an action can only be brought within twelve years. Primâ facie, therefore, the statute applies. But Mr. Cozens-Hardy says that the will of Jane Davis creates an express trust in favour of the plaintiffs, and therefore that the statute does not apply. That depends on the true construction of the clause in the will relating to the gift to the plaintiffs. [The Lord Justice read the clause, and continued:—] The clause only indicates "investment" as one of three modes in which the plaintiffs' share of residue was to be dealt with; the other modes being either accumulation, or application in some other way. The will therefore contains no trust as to investment, but only gives John Evans a power to regulate and direct in which of three modes the share of the plaintiffs was to be applied. In my opinion the will contains no direction at all that the legacy to the plaintiffs should be invested unless John Evans directed investment; and therefore, in the absence of any direction by John Evans, T. H. Davis, the executor, could deal with the plaintiffs' legacy according to the ordinary law. In my opinion, therefore, there is no express trust to invest whatever.

Then arises the inquiry if there is any implied trust arising from the peculiar circumstances of the case, viz., the fund being in court and an order having been made by which the executor of Jane Davis, and he alone, could receive the dividends, and the fact of his assent. I do not wish to express any opinion as to whether these circumstances created an implied trust or not. But assuming that there was an implied trust, the fact that a legacy is coupled with an implied trust does not prevent the Statute of Limitations applying to an action brought to recover the legacy. An express trust is outside the statute.

LOPES, L.J.—I concur with the other Lords Justices. I am inclined to think that there was no trust at all, either express or implied, fixed on T. H. Davis.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Wilde, Berger, & Wilde.

Solicitors for the respondent, Clayton, Son, & Fargus.

Original motion. May 13.

JONES v. INSOLE. (a.)

Practice—Appeal—Final or interlocutory order—Extension of time—Special circumstances—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 25, r. 4; ord. 58, r. 15; ord. 64, r. 7.

After the expiration of twenty-one days from the date of the perfecting of an order made under ord. 25, r. 4, dismissing an action on the ground that the statement of claim disclosed no reasonable cause of action, the plaintiff applied to the Court of Appeal for special leave to appeal from such order, alleging as a special circumstance that, until the decision in Salaman v. Warner, ante, p. 547, [1891] 1 Q. B. 734, it was doubtful whether such an order was an interlocutory or a final order, and although that case had decided that such an order was interlocutory, a report of it had not been published before the time for appealing had expired in the present case, and that the plaintiff's solicitor had acted in the belief that the plaintiff had a year within which to appeal from the order in question. The plaintiff had in fact already twice amended his pleadings, but had not asked for leave to re-amend at the time when the order now sought to be appealed from was made.

The Court of Appeal (Lindley, Lopes, and Kay, L.JJ.) refused to give special leave to appeal under the above circumstances.

Salaman v. Warner, ante, p. 547, [1891] 1 Q. B. 734, approved.

Original motion.

This was an application by the plaintiff in the action for leave to appeal from an order made by Chitty, J., striking out the plaintiff's statement of claim and dismissing the action as against one of the defendants, on the ground that the claim disclosed no reasonable cause of action against that defendant.

The twenty-one days from the date on which the order in question was perfected, had expired on April 17, 1891.

It appeared that the plaintiff had twice amended his statement of claim, and that he did not ask for leave to amend when the order now sought to be appealed from, was made.

MacSwinney, for the applicant.—It was only quite recently decided by Salaman v. Warner, ante, p. 547, [1891] 1 Q. B. 734, that an order dismissing an action on the ground that the claim disclosed no cause of action, was an interlocutory, and not a final, order. That decision was not published until after the expiration of the twenty-one days from the perfecting of the order in the present case, and was not known to the plaintiff or his solicitor. Before that decision the point was doubtful, and the plaintiff's solicitor thought the plaintiff had a year within which to appeal. Further, my client was unwell and unable to attend to business for some time.

Christopher James, contrà.

The following cases were also cited: Standard Discount Co. v. La Grange, 26 W. R. 25, 3 C. P. D. 67; McAndrew v. Barker, 26 W. R. 317, 7 Ch. D. 701; In re Blyth and Young, 28 W. R. 266, 13 Ch. D. 416; In re Manchester Economic Building Society, 32 W. R. 325, 24 Ch. D. 488, 497; In re New Callao (Limited), 31 W. R. 185, 22 Ch. D. 484; Trowell v. Shenton, 26 W. R. 837, 8 Ch. D. 318, 321; R. S. C., 1883, ord. 58, r. 15; ord. 64, r. 7.

LINDLEY, L.J.—This is an application to extend the time for appealing against an order striking out the plaintiff's statement of claim and dismissing the action against one of the defendants. [His lordship read ord. 58, r. 15, and ord. 64, r. 7, and continued:—] Special circumstances are therefore required to be shown to induce the court to extend the time for appealing.

At first I thought that there had been a mere slip, and that justice would be done by giving the leave sought, on terms. But, having heard more of the case, I do not think that such leave ought to be granted. It appears that the plaintiff has already twice amended, and when the order was made in the court below dismissing the action the plaintiff did not then ask for leave to amend.

It is competent for him to take one of two courses, either to apply as he has done here for leave to appeal on terms, or else to issue a new writ.

It appears to me that in this case justice will be done by leaving the plaintiff to his remedy of issuing a fresh writ in the action. It is not a case in which the plaintiff is entitled to any indulgence. I agree with what was laid down in Salaman v. Warner, that an order striking out a statement of claim on the ground that it discloses no cause of action is an interlocutory and not a final order.

LOPES, L.J.—I think this case is not one in which we ought to exercise the power given us by ord. 64, r. 7. [His lordship read that rule, and continued:—] I think that the indulgence allowed by that rule ought not to be extended unless a strong case is shown. I do not think that here a strong case has been made out. The plaintiff's statement of claim was struck out as disclosing no cause of action and the action was dismissed. The plaintiff has already twice amended, and when the order now sought to be appealed from was made in the court below, the plaintiff did not ask for leave to amend his claim.

KAY, L.J.—I understand that in this case the action was brought against several defendants and was dismissed as against one defendant because it disclosed no cause of action as against him. We have been told that this is not the first attempt on the part of the plaintiff to sue this defendant. The plaintiff has twice amended his statement of claim, and when

(a.) Reported by M. J. BLAKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

[illegible]

[illegible] Lands Clauses Consolidation Act [illegible] May, [illegible] [illegible] Act and the incorporated [illegible] Lands Clauses Consolidation Act [illegible]

[illegible] the tenant for life applied [illegible] of the compensation money paid [illegible] on the ground that he would have worked [illegible] his lifetime, as at the date of the [illegible] only forty-two years of age, and the [illegible] could, as the evidence showed, have been [illegible] worked out in twenty years, and some of [illegible] in a much shorter time.

Butcher, for the tenant for life.—We are entitled to [illegible] compensation money: In re Barrington, Camden v. Lyon, 35 W. R. 164, 33 Ch. D. 523. The [illegible] on the other side to show we should not have worked out all the minerals. At the very least we are entitled to the amount we could have worked since we gave our notice in January, 1886, i.e., a clear five years' working. I rely on sections 69 and 70 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845.

Stallard, for the remainderman and trustees, cited Errington v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 30 W. R. 663, 19 Ch. D. 559.

Sargant, for the railway company.

Butcher replied.

CHITTY, J., stated the facts, and continued:—

Thus the result was a sale of these minerals by [illegible] power of [illegible] Act, 1845. Now [illegible] to me on behalf [illegible] reference has [illegible] the decision of Kay, J. [illegible] opinion neither [illegible] any application [illegible] taking land where [illegible] and it does not [illegible] does not fall [illegible] for me to make [illegible] except by [illegible] satisfied Kay, J., did not [illegible] meaning of the words [illegible] considered that the £136 would [illegible] reversion in the minerals [illegible] could have gotten between [illegible] of the reversion and the [illegible] Mr. Butcher lays hold of [illegible] that the learned judge [illegible] as at present advised I [illegible] on section 74 does not apply. [illegible] apportionment at all. I [illegible] affecting it would be [illegible] the value of such portion [illegible] as he could actually have worked [illegible] making the order, i.e., to ascertain [illegible] in which the minerals could [illegible] and then give him his [illegible] the years he could have worked: [illegible] section 74 does not apply. The [illegible] sections 69 and 70. Section 69 [illegible] mentioning various ways [illegible] deposited in the bank can be applied. [illegible] purposes affect the inheritance [illegible] any particular interest, such as, for [illegible] any person under a purchase of [illegible] the same uses. It is the last clause [illegible] argument is founded, viz., "On payment [illegible] party becoming absolutely entitled to such [illegible] On the face of it, the section does not [illegible] apportionment, and where apportionment is [illegible] in a statute it is specially directed. Now [illegible] treats the whole money as belonging to [illegible] absolutely entitled, and it must be read with [illegible] sections. I am satisfied that no apportionment [illegible] directed. The argument is that if the [illegible] been taken the tenant for life would have [illegible] out, and during the period since he first [illegible] intention to work them he would have [illegible] the minerals to a certain proportion, [illegible] years he would have got a certain portion [illegible] therefore, he ought to have an apportionment [illegible] years paid him. But in my opinion he ought [illegible] that the statute directs apportionment. [illegible] were adverse proceedings, yet the sale was [illegible] ment, and the tenant for life must find [illegible] the power of sale under the settlement [illegible] the purchase-money. Where trustees have [illegible] to sell the minerals apart from the rest of the [illegible] the tenant for life takes no part of the [illegible] Similarly under the Settled Land Acts [illegible] minerals are sold separately the tenant for [illegible] though unimpeachable for waste, does not [illegible] purchase-money, nor in the case of a mining [illegible] whole rent. I think a special provision would [illegible] necessary to give him the purchase-money.

Finally, I may observe that, though the Act [illegible] been in operation forty-five years, I have never [illegible] of such an application before to-day. The [illegible] be invested and the income paid to the [illegible] life.

Solicitors, [illegible] Murton, for [illegible] Beale & Co.

(a.) Reported by G. ROWLAND ALSTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

. Div. }
y, J. } March 6, 7, 10.

In re WATSON & SONS (LIMITED). (a.) ny—Voluntary liquidation—Committee of inspec- — Creditors—Restrictions imposed on voluntary dator—Companies Act, 1862, ss. 95, 96, 133 (sub- m 7), 149, 151—Companies (Winding-up) Act, , ss. 6, 9, 12.

court may impose the same restrictions upon a ry liquidator as a liquidator in a compulsory g up would be subject to, and also dispense with ions imposed upon a liquidator in a compulsory g up.

Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, can be made by the court, by way of analogy, for the purpose of restrictions upon a voluntary liquidator's powers. n of order continuing a voluntary winding up upervision, subject to the control of a committee of ion.

tion.

was a petition presented by a shareholder, as also a creditor, for winding up the above- company, which was incorporated in 1887, nominal capital of £100,000 divided into shares of £10 each, for the purpose of acquir- d carrying on the business of a general ware- nan, previously carried on by Messrs. Watson & petition was presented on the 16th of February, nd on the 18th a resolution was passed by the rs that a committee of creditors should be ted, and that the creditors should bear rate- uch incidental expenses as should not be borne company or payable out of its assets.

eneral meeting of the creditors was convened bruary 24, to determine the course to be taken petition. At this meeting the following reso- was passed:—

at this meeting adopt and confirm the resolu- f the principal trade creditors on the 18th inst., hat, upon the information laid before it, this g is of opinion that it is advisable, in the its of the unsecured creditors, that the voluntary g up of the company should be continued under pervision of the court, with Mr. Miles as sole ator, provided that the committee of creditors, majority of it, be appointed by the court to ent the unsecured creditors in the winding up, he powers it would have if it were a committee pection under the Companies (Winding-up) Act, or that such other directions be obtained from urt as, in the opinion of the solicitor for the com- , will afford to the committee due facilities for senting and protecting the interests of the unse- creditors in all matters in the winding up ing them."

s resolution was approved by creditors for sums nting to £41,500.

February 25 an extraordinary resolution to wind e company voluntarily, with Mr. Miles as liqui- , was passed.

ne, Q.C., and Eve, for the petition, asked for a ulsory order.

rwell, Q.C., and Jenkins, for the creditors for 00, asked that the voluntary winding up might ontinued under supervision, with a committee gous to the committee of inspection provided for e Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, s. 9.

They referred to In re London Quays and Warehouse Co., 16 W. R. 530, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 394; In re Rochdale Property and General Finance Co., 12 Ch. D. 775, 27 W. R. Dig. 50.

Oswald, Alexander, Ribton, and Micklem, for the company and other creditors.

Byrne, Q.C., replied.

CHITTY, J.—It is plain in a question of this kind that the court may have regard, under the 149th section, to the wishes of the creditors, and I think I ought to give weight to the wishes of so large a majority as that which I have before me, asking for a voluntary winding up under supervision. It was said that the company has been carrying on its business at a loss (and this forms a staple of Mr. Oswald's argument) and, consequently, that there was a case of suspicion and a case requiring investigation. I am not satisfied that the affidavit filed in support of this contention does present any such case as Mr. Oswald attempted to raise in his argument at the bar. The company has been unfortunate, but it is not enough on this question of balancing the wishes of the majority and the minority of the creditors to say, "Inasmuch as there have been losses we have a suspicion there is something wrong"; that will not do, for although the court does not require a case of misfeasance or maladministration to be proved with the utmost strictness, it will not act, when balancing the wishes of one portion of the creditors against that of another, upon suspicion or upon a mere assertion that the affairs of the company require investigation. What is required is, that a strong primâ facie case should be made out, and although it is plain that under the Act of 1890 there are provisions whereby a more searching investigation can be made than there were in the Act of 1862, yet I think the Act of 1890 has made no alteration whatever in the principles upon which the court acts in reference to the matter which I am now considering. Therefore if I have jurisdiction, I think that on the facts it would be right to make such an order as is asked for by the majority. But Mr. Ribton argued that if that was done it would be a delegation of the powers of the court. I am of opinion that the order I propose to make, neither in form nor in substance, will amount to anything of the kind. I treat the case as if the Act of 1890 had not been passed, mentioning, by the way, that the 31st section of the Act shows that the Act does not apply to a winding up under the supervision of the court. Under the 151st section of the Act of 1862 it is provided that "where an order is made for winding up subject to the supervision of the court, the liquidators appointed to conduct such winding up may, subject to any restrictions imposed by the court, exercise all their powers without the sanction or intervention of the court, in the same manner as if the company were being wound up altogether voluntarily." That enables the court to impose restrictions upon the exercise of the liquidator's powers. The nature of the restrictions is not defined; apparently it is left entirely to the discretion of the court to say what the restrictions, if any, shall be. In In re London Quays and Warehouses Co. Cairns and Selwyn, L.JJ., imposed on the voluntary liquidator the same restrictions as an official liquidator would be subject to in a compulsory winding up, except so far as the court should think fit to dispense with those restrictions. That is an authority for the exercise of the jurisdiction imposing restriction. Now turning to the 133rd section I find, under sub-section 7, "The liquidators may, without the sanction of the court, exercise all powers by this Act given to the official liquidator." Turning to the 95th section, which con-

Reported by V. DE S. FOWKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div. North, J. June 2.

In re SHARPE.
In re BENNETT.
MASONIC AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE CO. (LIMITED) v. SHARPE AND OTHERS. (a.)

Company—Winding up—Estate of deceased director—Misfeasance—Payment of dividend out of capital—Delay—Stale demand.

The articles of association of a limited company provided (1) that interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum should be payable half-yearly on all money paid on the shares until otherwise determined by the directors, and (2) that no dividend or bonus should be payable except out of the profits arising from the business of the company, including the income arising from paid-up capital. No profits were ever earned by the company. From 1869 to 1878, when the Board of Trade interfered, the directors made half-yearly payments of interest or dividend at the rate of five per cent. per annum on the amount of shares paid up. These payments, which amounted to £4,500, were made out of capital. The company was ordered to be wound up in 1886. This action was commenced in 1890 against the representatives of two deceased directors. Certain moneys were recovered from the estate of one of the deceased directors under a compromise effected with the sanction of the court. Certain moneys had been also recovered from the surviving directors.

Held, that the payments were made by way of dividend, and that the estate of a deceased director was liable to the liquidator for so much of the £4,500, with interest at four per cent., as had not been already recovered.

Held, that the delay was not such as to disentitle the liquidator to succeed.

Action.

This action was brought by the liquidator of the Masonic and General Life Assurance Co. (Limited), now in liquidation, against the representatives of two deceased directors, Captain H. A. Bennett and Mr. Sharpe, to recover from their estates certain sums of money alleged to have been improperly paid out of capital as interest or dividend when the company had earned no profits. The said directors were alleged to have been guilty of misfeasance or breach of trust. A compromise having been made with the executors of Mr. Sharpe with the leave of the court, the action proceeded against the representative of Captain Bennett alone. The company was formed in 1868, and was ordered to be wound up in 1886. Captain Bennett was appointed a director in 1869, and held that office until his death in 1883. No profit and loss account was ever made out, and, although the company never earned any profits, the directors made half-yearly payments at the rate of five per cent. per annum on the amount of the shares paid up, from July, 1869, to July, 1878, when the Board of Trade interfered, and the payments were discontinued. The moneys so paid amounted to more than £4,500. The liquidator had obtained payments from the surviving directors. Among the articles of association of the company were the following:—"(5) The capital of the company shall be allotted by the board when and as they think fit. Every applicant for shares shall pay £1 per share on application. Interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum shall be payable half-yearly on all moneys paid on the shares until otherwise determined by the directors. (116) No dividend or bonus shall be payable except out of the profits arising from the business of the company, including the income arising from the paid-up capital."

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Swinfen Eady, for the plaintiff.—The directors have distributed dividends when there were no profits, and without calling in professional assistance: Rance's case, 19 W. R. 291, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 104; Leeds Estate Co. v. Shepherd, 36 W. R. 322, 36 Ch. D. 787.

S. Hall, Q.C., and Oswald, for the representative of Captain Bennett.—The payments were made as for interest in accordance with article 5, and not as dividend. The demand is stale; twelve years have elapsed since the last payment: In re Mammoth Copperopolis of Utah, 50 L. J. Ch. 11, 29 W. R. Dig. 41; Stringer's case, In re Mercantile Trading Co. (Limited), 17 W. R. 694, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 475.

NORTH, J.—I think the plaintiff must succeed. The half-yearly payments were made by way of dividend, although not only was no profit ever made, but there was no year or half-year in which the expenditure did not exceed the gross receipts. It is true the articles authorize the payment of interest, but they do not warrant these payments, which were made by the directors in pursuance of regular resolutions, and which were paid by cheques called dividend warrants, and clearly by way of dividend and not out of profits. In 1878 the Board of Trade interfered, and no further payments were made, except some small amounts which were due to persons who had not received sums to which they were entitled in respect of previous half-years. Further, no steps were taken which sometimes justify directors in thinking there are profits when there are not. There were no properly made up accounts. No profit and loss account was ever made up. It is clear there were no profits. This case is in line with Rance's case and the Leeds Estate case, and I am therefore of opinion that the directors are liable for these payments. I do not say anything impugning Captain Bennett's honesty, but these payments were all wrong. Again, ought I to decline to grant relief to the plaintiffs because this demand is stale? I think I ought not. The cases of In re Mammoth Copperopolis and Stringer's case have been quoted to show that delay is a bar. But in In re the Alexandra Palace Co., 30 W. R. 771, 21 Ch. D. 149, Fry, J., distinguished those cases on the ground that the facts of the case then before him were such as resembled the present case. In his judgment his lordship said: "These dates do not differ materially from the dates in In re Mammoth Copperopolis, in which Vice-Chancellor Hall considered that the staleness of the demand was a sufficient answer to the application of the official liquidator. If the two cases had been precisely parallel I should have felt myself bound to follow that decision, but it appears to me that they are not. In that case the directors had declared a dividend upon the footing of a balance-sheet, which had been made up, and which, I think, according to the view of the Vice-Chancellor, was made up in a bonâ fide manner, although there might be grave questions as to the propriety of it. He considered that the liquidator's application was in fact an attempt to unravel the balance-sheets which had been passed and acted upon, and I observe that, in stating the considerations which led him to the conclusion that the demand was stale, he dwells in the first place on the nature of the demand. Similar observations apply to Stringer's case. There an attempt was made to compel a director to repay a dividend said to have been paid out of capital, by means of attacking three items in a balance-sheet which had been passed and acted upon. There, also, the court thought that the delay was a sufficient answer. In the present case there is nothing of that sort. The transaction stands disclosed in the simplest way. There is no balance-sheet which it can be for a moment suggested induced the directors to come to the conclusion that there were divisible profits. It is a simple case in which the capital of the company or the moneys borrowed by the company were applied in the payment of that which, according to the plain terms of the articles of association, could be paid only out of profits."

(a.) Reported by C. F. DUNCAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Although here it is true the payments were made long ago, no material evidence has been lost by the delay, and, although Captain Bennett is dead, there is nothing to show that there would have been any defence available which is not now before the court. Again, this demand is not barred by any statute, and there is nothing else which can bar it. Even assuming that the liquidator has been dilatory, I do not see why the creditors are to lose their rights, although if I thought the parties proceeded against were prejudiced by the delay, I might relieve them, but it is not so here. The plaintiff is entitled to judgment for so much of the £4,500, with interest at 4 per cent., as has not been already recovered.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Hicklin, Washington, & Passmore.

Solicitors for the defendants, Smith, Stenning, & Croft; Johnson, Weatherall, & Johnson.

Chan. Div. }
Kekewich, J. } June 26.

COCKSEDGE v. METROPOLITAN COAL CONSUMERS' ASSOCIATION (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Action for rescission—Winding-up order—Practice—Statement of claim—Amendment after commencement of winding up.

In an action against a company for rescission of a contract to take shares, the plaintiff cannot, after the commencement of the winding up of the company, raise, by amendment of his statement of claim, a ground for relief distinct from those raised in his original statement of claim.

Point of law.

On the 7th of February, 1889, the defendants, the Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association (Limited) and F. D. Leslie, the alleged promoter of the company, issued a prospectus inviting an application for shares. On the 11th of February, 1889, the plaintiff applied for shares, and on the 19th of February, 1889, the same were allotted to him. On the 18th of April, 1889, the plaintiff commenced proceedings against the defendants for rescission of the contract to take shares, and for rectification of the register of the members of the company, and on the 9th of August, 1889, delivered his statement of claim, and therein alleged that the prospectus contained certain misrepresentations of material facts, and that other material facts had been suppressed. On the 13th of November, 1889, a petition was presented to wind up the company. On the 2nd of December, 1889, the defendants delivered their statements of defence. On the 23rd of December, 1889, the plaintiff amended his statement of claim by adding an allegation that the allotment of shares to him was invalid, inasmuch as it had been made by persons not duly appointed and not having the powers of directors. On the 20th of January, 1890, an order was made to wind up the company. The defendant company subsequently amended their statement of defence, and submitted that, as to the matter alleged for the first time in the plaintiff's amended statement of claim, the plaintiff was not, having regard to the said order for winding up, entitled to any relief, and that the plaintiff had, as to such matter, lost all right to relief by his laches and delay.

The point of law thus raised by the defendant company now came on for hearing before the trial of the action upon the merits of the case.

Warmington, Q.C., and H. Terrell, for the defendant company.—The amendment is in the nature of a new and independent action, and cannot be maintained after the commencement of the winding up, since the rights of creditors have intervened: Whitehouse's case, 15 W. R. 892, L. R. 3 Eq. 790; Oakes v. Turquand, L. R. 2 H. L. 325, 16 W. R. H. L. Dig. 15; Reese River Silver Mining Co. v. Smith, 17 W. R. 1042, L. R. 4 H. L. 64.

Marten, Q.C., and Ashton Cross, for the plaintiff.—The directors had the power to cancel, and ought to have cancelled the allotment at the commencement of the action upon the ground for relief alleged by the plaintiff for the first time in his amended statement of claim. The plaintiff can rely on such ground although it was not alleged until after the commencement of the winding up: Wright's case, 20 W. R. 45, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 55.

KEKEWICH, J.—It is now settled, according to Oakes v. Turquand and other cases, including the case of Reese River Silver Mining Co. v. Smith, that a contributory—that is, the person whose name appears on the registered list of members of a company—cannot, after a winding-up order, when the rights of creditors for the first time intervene, assert, by legal proceedings, a title to be relieved from his liability on the ground of misrepresentation or on any other ground which, according to law, would avoid the contract. And it is also settled by the same authorities that, if he has commenced proceedings before the commencement of the winding up—before, in this case, the presentation of the petition—he is entitled to relief either by leave of the court in that action, or, if it may be more conveniently given, in the winding up; but he is entitled to that relief, notwithstanding the winding-up order, if he can prove the facts on which his title to relief depends.

A shareholder is entitled to relief if he institutes legal proceedings, having good grounds for them, before the commencement of the winding up. Does that mean that, as long as he issues a writ for the purpose of obtaining the relief, he is entitled to obtain that relief in the end, notwithstanding that there is no hint in the indorsement on his writ of the particular ground of complaint on which he ultimately is able to succeed, or, if the case has gone a step farther, notwithstanding that the statement of claim has not alleged that only ground for avoiding the contract which the court has eventually to decide?

It seems to me that when the House of Lords held, in Oakes v. Turquand, that a man may save his right by the institution of legal proceedings, it held that he may do it by claiming relief on the grounds put forward at the commencement of the action and persisted in to the end. If it were not so, there would be an encouragement to persons who thought the company in which they held shares was not in a safe condition, simply to issue a writ or to deliver a statement of claim, made as strong as circumstances permit, and then to take their chance of making it better and stronger afterwards; or, to put it in another way, the rights of creditors which, according to the settled law, are now protected against the claims of persons who bethink themselves of their rights after the commencement of the winding up, would be protected, not against them, but would be liable to be interfered with by persons who really had not discovered their rights at all, but were only perhaps grumblers up to that date, and unable to formulate their complaint in legal manner. "Legal proceedings" must, I think, mean legal proceedings based upon a precise foundation on which the claim to relief is built up and on which it eventually stands. I think the different allegations in any case of avoiding a contract must be treated as in all respects distinct. I think the test of that is this, that no amount of insufficient allegation will make one sufficient. If a man seeks to avoid a contract on five or six different grounds, one is obliged to take them separately. If he fails upon one, two, three, four, five, and six, he fails altogether; if he succeeds upon one, he succeeds at once, and the other five need not be tried; and the same applies to any one of the others. But no amount of approximate success on all six would justify the court in making a decree in his favour. That is another way of showing, I think, that the allegations must be regarded as distinct.

(a.) Reported by J. WINKFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Here I have an allegation that the allotment was invalid, inasmuch as it was made by persons not duly appointed and not having the powers of directors. It is impossible, to my mind, to conceive any allegation more distinct than that is, from an allegation that the prospectus contained misrepresentations of fact. I think the plaintiff is introducing an entirely new ground for relief. To my mind Wright's case, upon which Mr. Marten has relied, has not assisted him. The ratio decidendi in that case was this, that before the commencement of the winding up the contract between the shareholder and the company had been determined—determined by the shareholder himself on one ground, and determined by the directors on another ground. It was impossible, said the Lord Chancellor, for him afterwards to claim to be a shareholder, although he had only determined the contract on one ground. Therefore he was at liberty to insist upon the determination of the contract on grounds which, though not known to him, had influenced the directors. That is a case of a peculiar character, and does not at all apply to a case like this, where there has been no determination of the contract before the commencement of the winding up. I think that the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief in respect of the ground which he has attempted to introduce by amending his statement of claim.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Edward Lawrance Boyer.

Solicitors for the defendant company, Lumley & Lumley.

Q. B. Div. (Denman and Wills, JJ.) July 13, 20.

CLEAVER v. MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION. (a.)

Insurance, life—Policy for benefit of wife of insured—Murder of insured by wife—Right of executors of insured to recover insurance moneys—Trust for wife—Public policy—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 11.

Where a man insures his life for the benefit of his wife, by virtue of section 11 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a trust is thereby created in favour of the wife, and the insurance moneys form no part of the estate of the insured. If, therefore, the wife murders the insured, his executors cannot maintain an action on the policy against the insurers, such an action being for the benefit of the wife, and it being contrary to public policy that she should profit by her crime. The question whether or not she knew of the existence of the policy before she committed the murder is immaterial.

Fauntleroy's case (Amicable Society v. Bolland), 4 Bligh N. R. 194, followed.

Question of law stated for the opinion of the court under R. S. C., ord. 34, r. 2.

On the 3rd of October, 1888, James Maybrick effected an insurance upon his life with the defendants for £2,000 for the benefit of his wife, Florence E. Maybrick. The policy provided that, for the considerations therein mentioned, the association received James Maybrick as a member, and that "there shall be payable to Florence E. Maybrick, wife, if living at the time of the death of the said member, otherwise to the legal personal representatives of the said member, the sum of £2,000 sterling within ninety days after receipt of satisfactory evidence to the association of the death of the said member."

James Maybrick died on the 11th of May, 1889.

In August, 1889, at the Liverpool Assizes, Florence E. Maybrick was indicted for the wilful murder of James Maybrick, her husband, by the administration of poison to him, and was convicted.

Her sentence was afterwards commuted to one of penal servitude for life.

This action was brought to recover the moneys due under the policy, the plaintiffs being Richard Cleaver, who sued as assignee of the policy from Mrs. Maybrick, and as administrator of her property under the Act of 1870 "to Abolish Forfeitures for Treason and Felony" (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), and Thomas and Michael Maybrick, who sued as executors under the will of James Maybrick.

The plaintiffs' case, so far as it rested upon the rights of Cleaver, was abandoned at the present hearing.

The question of law upon which the opinion of the court was desired was "whether, if it be proved that the said James Maybrick died from poison intentionally administered to him by the said Florence E. Maybrick, that would afford a defence to this action (c) as against the plaintiffs Thomas Maybrick and Michael Maybrick as executors of the said James Maybrick, deceased."

The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 11, provides that "a policy of assurance effected by any man on his own life, and expressed to be for the benefit of his wife or of his children . . . . shall create a trust in favour of the objects therein named, and the moneys payable under any such policy shall not, so long as any object of the trust remains unperformed, form part of the estate of the insured or be subject to his debts. . . . . The insured may by the policy, or by any memorandum under his hand, appoint a trustee or trustees of the moneys payable under the policy. . . . . In default of any such appointment of a trustee such policy, immediately on its being effected, shall vest in the insured and his legal personal representatives in trust for the purposes aforesaid. . . . The receipt of a trustee or trustees duly appointed, or, in default of any such appointment, the receipt of the legal personal representative of the insured, shall be a discharge to the office for the sum secured by the policy."

Sir Charles Russell, Q.C. (Pickford and A. G. Steel with him), for the plaintiffs.—Assuming that Mrs. Maybrick murdered her husband, that does not affect the liability of the defendants to pay the amount due on the policy. The executors of the deceased are the persons who are entitled to receive the money and to give a valid discharge to the defendants under section 11 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. We are entitled to assume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that Mrs. Maybrick was not aware of the existence of the policy; that being so, she could not have murdered her husband with the object of obtaining the insurance money, and therefore the defendants cannot be relieved on the grounds of public policy. Fauntleroy's case (Bolland v. Disney), 3 Russ. 351, 4 Bligh N. R. 194, is no authority in the present case. There the assured himself had committed an act whereby the assurers were prejudiced; here the act was done by a person who was not aware that she would benefit by it, and in principle the case is the same as if Mr. Maybrick had been poisoned by a person who was a total stranger to the policy.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

He also referred to Clift v. Schwabe, 3 C. B. 437; Moore v. Woolsey, 3 W. R. 66, 4 E. & B. 243; Dufaur v. Professional Assurance Co., 25 Beav. 599, 7 W. R. Dig. 51, 56; Prince of Wales Association Co. v. Palmer, ibid. 605; Horn v. Anglo-Australian Assurance Co., 9 W. R. 359, 7 Jur. N. S. 673.

Sir Edward Clarke, S.G. (Hextall with him), for the defendants.—The executors have no interest in the insurance money as representing the deceased, for by section 11 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, it forms no part of his estate. The only way in which the executors can claim is as trustees for Mrs. Maybrick, and their case is governed by Fauntleroy's case. [WILLS, J.—Section 11 says that the moneys shall not form part of the estate of the insured "so long as any object of the trust remains unperformed." Is not the object of the trust gone since Mrs. Maybrick is civilly dead?] Mrs. Maybrick's right (if any) arose immediately upon her husband's death; she did not become dead in law until her conviction, and there is no relation back. Assuming that she was not aware of the existence of the policy (which is very improbable), yet she cannot come into court to profit by her own wrong—to get £2,000 which has come to her because she committed a murder. It would be dangerous to say that a minute inquiry into the question of her knowledge is necessary. To allow her to succeed would be to remove a restraint against crime, and that is contrary to public policy: per Lord Lyndhurst, 4 Bligh N. R., at p. 211.

Pickford, in reply.—In Fauntleroy's case it is clear that Lord Lyndhurst attached importance to the fact of knowledge of the effect of the crime on the contract of the assurers. There is no such knowledge here, and this case is therefore outside Lord Lyndhurst's decision.

DENMAN, J.—In this case the question put to us must be answered in favour of the defendants. The action was brought by several plaintiffs, but counsel have argued it upon their strongest ground—that is, upon the case so far as it rests upon the rights of Thomas and Michael Maybrick, two of the plaintiffs, who are the legal personal representatives of James Maybrick. James Maybrick, we are to take it, was murdered by his wife, Florence E. Maybrick, in April, 1889. Now, these personal representatives bring this action, not in their capacity of personal representatives of the deceased and for the benefit of his estate, but because, by virtue of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, they have become trustees of the moneys payable under this policy for the benefit of the wife. It requires no argument to show that such trustees are in no better position than their cestui que trust. I need not go through the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act on the subject except to say that these are the proper persons to sue under section 11. As regards public policy, the question is exactly the same whether she or they sue. The objection which is taken is that neither she nor they can sue upon this policy of assurance upon the life of the husband for the wife's benefit, when the wife has been convicted of the murder of her husband.

The only case which is really in point is that which appears in the court below as Bolland v. Disney, 3 Russ. 351, and in the House of Lords as Amicable Society v. Bolland, 4 Bligh N. R. 194. That was a curious case, and not in every respect like the present. There Fauntleroy had insured his life and had afterwards committed forgery, which was then a capital offence, and been executed. The action was brought by his assignees upon the policy. Sir John Leach, M.R., held that the action could be maintained. His decision went upon the narrow ground that "to avoid the obligation to pay the act of the party insured which produced the event must be done fraudulently for the purpose of producing the event," and Fauntleroy could not be supposed to have had that view in committing forgery, although it was a capital crime. But the House of Lords took a different view, and the real ground of their decision covers the present case. Some of the words of Lord Lyndhurst's judgment are worth quoting. He says, "It appears to me that this resolves itself into a very plain and simple consideration. Suppose that in the policy itself this risk had been insured against—that is, that the party insuring had agreed to pay a sum of money year by year, upon condition that, in the event of his committing a capital felony, and being tried, convicted, and executed for that felony, his assignees shall receive a certain sum of money—is it possible that such a contract could be sustained? Is it not void upon the plainest principles of public policy?" No doubt Lord Lyndhurst was discussing the case before him, but I think that those remarks apply here also, and indeed that this is an à fortiori case. He goes on: "Would not such a contract (if available) take away one of those restraints operating on the minds of men against the commission of crimes—namely, the interest we have in the welfare and prosperity of our connections. Now, if a policy of that description, with such a form of condition inserted in it in express terms, cannot, on grounds of public policy, be sustained, how is it to be contended that in a policy expressed in such terms as the present, and after the events which have happened, that we can sustain such a claim? Can we, in considering this policy, give to it the effect of that insertion, which, if expressed in terms, would have rendered the policy, so far as that condition went at least, altogether void." Applying that reasoning here you would have to insert a condition in the policy that the wife or her trustees might sue on this policy even if the death of the insured had been caused by an act of murder on the part of the wife. Put that way, the case is really a stronger one than Fauntleroy's. Can these persons be allowed to sue when the death has been brought about by the person for whom they sue? I do not think that the law allows that. I think that Lord Lyndhurst's "short and plain ground" applies here, and that, upon that ground, this action fails.

WILLS, J.—I am of the same opinion. The proper way to look at this action is to regard it as having been brought the day after the death of James Maybrick, and we are to assume that his death was caused by his wife. The effect of a policy in this form is, by virtue of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, to create a trust for Mrs. Maybrick. If the money had been paid to the executors immediately after the death there would have been a bare trust for her, and she would have been entitled to have it handed over to her. The trusts imposed upon a curator or administrator under the Felon Act, 1870, only relate to property to which the felon is really entitled, and the provisions of that Act are, therefore, outside the question which we have to decide. This must be looked on as an action by trustees for Mrs. Maybrick's benefit. Is it a sufficient defence to say that she murdered her husband without also saying that she murdered him in order to obtain the policy moneys? I think it is sufficient. The case was, in my opinion, rightly defended upon the grounds of public policy. Is it possible to conceive a case to which considerations of public policy apply with greater force than the present? It is true that some of the observations of Lord Lyndhurst in Fauntleroy's case, where he is explaining why the claim was contrary to public policy, do not apply here, because in that case there was knowledge of the existence of the policy on the part of the assured, while in the present case we must assume that Mrs. Maybrick had no such knowledge. I do not think that the issue can depend upon whether she had that knowledge or not. It would be very dangerous, in my opinion, to allow that question to be raised. It would be almost impossible to ascertain how much or how little she knew. But the ground of public policy is wider than Sir Charles Russell contended. The proper way to state it here is that a person who commits murder shall not be allowed to benefit by his crime, and to say that that broad principle can be defeated by showing that the motive for the crime was not to obtain the money would be to greatly impair its efficacy. For these reasons I think that the defendants' contention is right.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Sharpe, Parker, Pritchard, & Sharpe, for Cleaver, Holden, & Co., Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendants, Robinson & Stannard.

Q. B. Div. (Day and Lawrance, JJ.) April 20.

BARLOW v. TERRETT. (a.)

Nuisance — Unsound meat — Order for destruction — Penalty on person to whom such meat belongs — Exposure for sale — Nuisances Removal Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 117), s. 2.

The appellant, a farmer in the country, sent meat which he knew to be unsound to a salesman in London for the purpose of being sold. The salesman never exposed the meat for sale, but showed it to the inspector of nuisances, who took it away and obtained a justice's order for its destruction.

Held, that, there having been no sale or exposure for sale, the appellant could not be convicted under section 2 of the Nuisances Removal Act, 1863.

Case stated under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43 and 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 33.

On the 7th of October, 1890, the appellant, who was a farmer in the country, sent some meat, which he knew to be unsound and unfit for human food, to a salesman in the London Central Meat Market, for the purpose of being sold. The salesman unpacked the meat, but never exposed it for sale, and early on the next morning he spoke to the respondent, the inspector of nuisances, and directed his attention to it. The inspector took the meat away, and on the same day an order was made by a justice that it should be destroyed.

The inspector then laid an information and took out a summons against the appellant, under section 2 of the Nuisances Removal Act, 1863, charging him with being the person to whom did belong the carcase of a lamb and two pieces of meat, to wit, veal, which were unlawfully deposited in the London Central Meat Market for the purpose of sale, and intended for the food of man, the same being diseased, unsound, unwholesome, and unfit for the food of man.

Section 2 of the Nuisances Removal Act, 1863, enacts that the inspector of nuisances may at all reasonable times inspect and examine any meat "exposed for sale, or deposited in any place for the purpose of sale or of preparation for sale, and intended for the food of man"; and in case any such meat shall appear to him to be diseased, or unsound, or unwholesome, or unfit for the food of man, he may take it away and obtain a justice's order for its destruction; and "the person to whom such . . . meat . . . belongs or did belong at the time of sale or of exposure for sale, or in whose possession or on whose premises the same is found," shall be liable to a fine or imprisonment.

The summons was heard before an alderman of the City of London, who convicted the appellant and stated this case.

Toller, for the appellant.—The conviction is wrong. The owner of unsound meat, as distinguished from the person on whose premises it is found, cannot be convicted under this section unless there has been a sale or an exposure for sale. In Mallinson v. Carr, ante, p. 270, [1891] 1 Q. B. 48, a case under the corresponding provision of the Public Health Act, 1875, the proceedings were taken against the person on whose premises the meat was found. That case does not govern this: see Vinter v. Hind, 31 W. R. 198, 10 Q. B. D. 63.

G. M. Freeman, for the respondent.—It is not necessary that there should be an exposure for sale. Here the meat was, by the appellant's orders, deposited in the salesman's shop for the purpose of being sold. The section in its first part says that meat so deposited may, if it is unsound, be seized and destroyed. And the second part of the section provides that the owner of such meat may be punished.

DAY, J.—I regret that I do not see my way to uphold this conviction, because it is against the public interest that a person in the country, who knowingly sends unsound meat up to the London market, should escape punishment merely because there has not been an exposure for sale. But the distinction between selling and exposing for sale and depositing for sale is well known to the Legislature, and it occurs in this section. An inspector of nuisances may seize meat which is exposed for sale or deposited for sale, and obtain a magistrate's order for its destruction. But the owner of such meat, if he has deposited it for sale anywhere except on his own premises, cannot be punished under this section unless there has been a sale or an exposure for sale; the words providing for the punishment of the owner omit all reference to depositing for sale. Unless there has been a sale or an exposure for sale the owner is not liable to any punishment except the loss of the meat. The offence here charged does not come within the section, and the conviction must be quashed.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

Conviction quashed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Brownlow & Howe, for Harding, Leicester.

Solicitor for the respondent, E. A. Baylis.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). Dec. 15.

TREDEGAR IRON AND COAL CO. v. OWNERS OF STEAMSHIP "CALLIOPE."
"THE CALLIOPE." (a.)

Ship—Wharfinger—Obstruction in navigable river—Negligence.

Where there is nothing foreign or strange in the condition of the bed of a river, other than what results from its normal use, wharfingers on the bank are under no obligation to remove such impediments to navigation.

A ship, attempting to approach a wharf to which safe access was a mere matter of time, and outside of which ridges of mud had been formed by the action of the river and the vessels stranding alongside, suffered damage.

Held, that, the river being in its normal state, and the nature of the river known to those in charge of the ship, the wharfingers were not guilty of negligence.

Decision of the Court of Appeal reversed.

This was an appeal by the defendants in the action, the Tredegar Iron and Coal Co., from an order of the Court of Appeal (Lord Esher, M.R., Cotton and Lindley, L.JJ.) reversing a decree of Butt, J., reported 38 W. R. 155, 14 P. D. 138.

The facts are set out in the judgment of Lord Watson.

Finlay, Q.C. (Joseph Walton and Adams with him), for the appellants.

Gorell Barnes, Q.C., and W. S. Robson (H. Holman with them), for the respondents.

The Moorcock, 37 W. R. 439, 14 P. D. 64, and Curling v. Wood, 16 M. & W. 628, were cited.

Lord HALSBURY, L.C.—I cannot help thinking that this case affords a somewhat important illustration of the necessity of calling upon litigants to place in some written form of pleading the precise cause of action upon which they rely, for I think that the time during which your lordships have been occupied, and the time which has been occupied in the courts below, has to a considerable extent been the result of an oscillation in the minds of the advisers of the plaintiffs as to what was their cause of action.

I cannot entertain a doubt, when I look at the form of the statement of claim as it originally stood, that the cause of action was originally founded upon the notion that this vessel was invited to a berth, in the strict and proper sense of that word, at which it was unfit for a vessel under any circumstances to lie, and that, by reason of the inequality and unfitness of the berth, the vessel, being brought there, was strained and injured. If that had been the complexion of the case, I certainly entertain no doubt that the law, as laid down in the earlier cases and in the later case of The Moorcock, would have been applicable to that state of things. In this case the wharfinger, who happened to be the consignee, invites the vessel to a particular place to unload. If, as it is said, to his knowledge the place for unloading was improper and likely to injure the vessel he certainly ought to have adopted one of these alternatives; either he ought not to have invited the vessel, or he ought to have informed the vessel what the condition of things was when she was invited, so that the injury might have been avoided.

But gradually, as the case proceeded, it apparently occurred to the parties that that ground could not be maintained, and that the vessel, if it had got there, would have been perfectly well able to lie there in a fit and proper place for unloading, and no injury would have resulted; and then came an application to amend, to which the learned judge acceded. The amendment is of this character, that the persons who were in charge of the operation of bringing the vessel to the berth were guilty of negligence. Who those persons were I will say in a moment. The nature of the negligence alleged is this, that in the ordinary condition of things a vessel of that draught could not properly get to that berth at the particular time of the tide, and a Mr. Griffiths is alleged to have misled the pilot and the captain as to the safety with which that vessel might get there to lie there.

Now let us see what the meaning of this contention is, and upon what ground it is suggested that the wharfinger and consignee was guilty of the negligence imputed to him. He in the first instance, as he had a right to do, gave a direction that the vessel should come and unload at that wharf. If under no circumstances and at no time the vessel could have gone to that wharf, though in that case, as I think, a serious question would arise as to whether it is not for the captain or the pilot as representing the shipowners to make up his mind whether he can safely get to that place or not, and to make his election whether he will or will not attempt to do so with a view to safety—still, if under no circumstances the vessel could with safety have gone there, and if he had relied upon that statement for the purpose of getting there, a different question would have arisen. But the facts do not raise that case, because, as I understand the facts relied upon, there is given in the letter the draught of water which, under ordinary circumstances, may be expected at the particular time, and at the same time as that direction is given the writer says, "But your pilot will tell you what to do." What is the meaning of such a phrase as that? What is the suggestion when the person to whom the direction is given is told to rely upon the pilot? What does a pilot do? What is a pilot's duty? It is impossible to doubt that under ordinary circumstances that would mean this: This is information which I give you for the purpose of forming your own judgment whether you can come there or not—that is to say, this is the height of water which may be expected at such and such a time, but you, the person in charge of the navigation of the vessel, the captain or the pilot, must form your own judgment upon the matter, and you must not expect me to give you a warranty that that height of water will exist, but you, the captain or the pilot, must form your own judgment upon it, and must act accordingly.

Under the particular circumstances of this case it appears that the utmost amount of water which could possibly be expected at the top of the tide was 18 feet 9 inches, and that depended upon a comparison between the Bathurst Basin at Bristol and this Tredegar Wharf, between which there was said to be, under the ordinary condition of things, a difference of two feet in favour of the Tredegar Wharf. The vessel in question was drawing aft 18 feet 3 inches; and at the top of the tide, therefore, assuming everything to be normal in the condition of things with which the parties were dealing, there would be six inches to spare, and that was all. The facts appear to be that about an hour and a half before the top of the tide the vessel attempted to get in. I think it is idle to say that she was there for the purpose of attempting to get in at the top of the tide. It is manifest to me from the evidence that she attempted to get in long before the state of the tide would have justified her doing so, and it was as absolutely certain as any calculation could make it, not only that she was likely to ground, but that she must ground if she attempted it. And she did attempt it.

(a.) Reported by CHARLES H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Then it is said that Mr. Griffiths encouraged the pilot and the captain to come in, and in fact the phrase is used that he "gave orders." I think in the course of the argument it has been sufficiently pointed out that the use of those words is inaccurate if understood in the sense that Mr. Barnes has relied on. That a foreman, who is concerned with the regulation and management of the wharf, in a certain sense "gives orders" is true enough. He has a right to assume that the captain and the pilot who are navigating the vessel alongside the wharf, will navigate her safely; but when it comes to a question of what particular position alongside the wharf, or what berth the vessel is to occupy with reference to the loading and unloading of the goods, the person on the wharf is the person to give directions at what particular part of the wharf, and how, the vessel shall be moored; because with reference to the cranes and other machinery at the wharf for loading and unloading the vessel it may be important that the person in charge of the wharf should give such directions, and accordingly Mr. Griffiths appears to have given such directions. But is it contended for a moment that either the captain or the pilot would understand that Mr. Griffiths' position there was such that he was in a position to give orders to the captain or the pilot with reference to the approach of the vessel, or information as to the water she would draw? The absurdity of such a proposition is at once apparent when it is remembered that this question not only depends upon the absolute depth of the water either at the top of the tide or an hour and a half before it, but also has relation to the draught of the vessel, with which the captain and the pilot may be supposed to be perfectly familiar, but which would be totally unknown to Mr. Griffiths on the wharf.

That words which appeared to resemble orders may have been used by Mr. Griffiths when once the difficulty had arisen, and it was found that the vessel was incapable of reaching the wharf, is exceedingly likely. I should concur with Butt, J., in the opinion that, while each side, perhaps, has given a colour to the particular language used, it is extremely likely that Mr. Griffiths used words which, understood literally, and without reference to the relations existing between Mr. Griffiths and the captain or the pilot, might in one sense be described as orders; but that he gave orders in the sense of a command in relation to the approach of the vessel to the side of the wharf, or that they so understood it or placed any reliance upon his words as being orders, I certainly do not believe.

But we are not left without guidance upon the subject, because the captain and the pilot themselves give, to my mind, an absolutely overwhelming proof that they knew perfectly well that what they were doing was an operation attended with risk, for the pilot himself said that he would not undertake the risk, because he knew that he might lose his certificate, and that if it was done it must be done upon the responsibility of the captain. Now what does that disclose? In the first place, it discloses an absolute intention not to rely upon any "orders" supposed to have been given to them, and in the second place it also shows that they knew that the operation was one which was attended with danger.

That brings me to the next point, What was the danger? The danger was a danger which has in fact been recognized by the pilot in the very first part of his evidence. He knew there were these inequalities in the bed of the river, inequalities owing to the nature of the river, to the nature of the soil of the bed of the river, and incident to the ordinary user of the bed of the river. Under those circumstances it is suggested that there was some duty, before any vessel came in, that this particular berth should be scraped even, so that the vessel should lie on an even keel the moment that she got up to within—I do not know that I am able to give verbal expression exactly to what is suggested—but to within some reasonable distance of the wharf, within what I think Mr. Robson called "the sphere of their operations." I am not quite certain that was not a phrase which was very adroitly used, because it would comprehend something that was so vague that one cannot quite grasp it. The berth itself is admitted now to have been perfectly proper to be in, and how far this alleged responsibility for the approach to the berth extends I really do not know. I suppose, to put it most in favour of the respondents, it would be suggested that it extends as far as vessels coming in and lying at this wharf, and by lying there, raising the ridge upon which so much has been said. Now upon that subject, whenever it does arise, I hope I shall keep my mind perfectly free to have it discussed; but it is absolutely new to me to find that there is by law a responsibility or an obligation upon everybody using the river in a natural and normal way, and by lying on mud flats, raising, by the operation described, some of these inequalities, so that another vessel coming in and lying there transversely might suffer injury.

Then, the accident having happened in this way, the contention is that this obligation exists, and that, to put it plainly, there was a hard substance left in front of this berth which ought to have been cleared away, and that by reason of its not having been cleared away this accident happened.

With regard to that, which is in plain terms the contention which has been made, all I shall say upon that part of the case is that I do not know whether that is so or not, but one difficulty is that there is no evidence. That this vessel was injured by lying in the place where she did lie is certain, but neither shipowner nor wharfinger ever intended that she should lie there. The mode in which she got stuck originally I have already referred to, but if it is said that that was not the normal condition of the bank in that place, all I can say is I have no evidence that that was so. There is the theoretic evidence (I admit) that whenever two vessels lie there they raise this ridge; but I do not know when two vessels did lie there; certainly there is no evidence of that sort before us. If two vessels did lie there, I do not know that the ridge that was raised by their lying there has not been scraped away.

Then it is said, "Well, but that lies within the knowledge of the defendants." In one sense that is quite true. There is no pretence of it on the other side; and it is part of the case for the plaintiffs that that amount of negligence is in the management of the wharf. That is part of the evidence which the plaintiffs ought to give, and the plaintiffs have given no such evidence. I do not know when they last scraped the place, and I do not know that two vessels ever did lie there before this vessel after the last scraping.

In the result, it appears to me that, putting it upon the grounds upon which this case was originally put, there is a complete answer to it; and putting it upon the grounds which have been gradually brought forward in lieu of those originally insisted upon, the whole case is left absolutely without evidence. The only explanation that I can give of that is, that the particular cause of action had not occurred originally to the advisers of the plaintiffs. Much as I respect any judgment of the Court of Appeal (particularly on such a case as this) when presided over by the Master of the Rolls, when I look to see the grounds upon which the judgment of the Court of Appeal proceeded in this case it appears to me that they have assumed a state of facts without evidence to support it, and one which, for my own part, I am unable to affirm.

I therefore move your lordships that this appeal be allowed, and that the respondents pay to the appellants their costs both here and below, and that there be a return of the £1,000 paid as a condition of this appeal.

Lord WATSON.—Upon the facts proved, this appears to me to be a very plain case.

The cargo of The Calliope, consisting of iron ore, was deliverable at Newport to the appellant company, who were indorsees of the bill of lading. They were also in the occupation of a tidal wharf within the limits of the port of delivery known as the Tredegar Wharf.

On the arrival of The Calliope at Newport about 2.30 p.m. on Saturday, the 29th of January, 1886, the captain received instructions from the appellants to bring her alongside the Tredegar Wharf for discharge. The vessel, which drew 18 feet 3 inches aft, and 14 feet 7 inches forward, did not then proceed to the wharf, because the pilot advised that the depth of water at the next tide would be insufficient. On the afternoon of the same day the captain received a note from Griffiths, traffic foreman to the company, in these terms: "You can bring your steamer s.s. Calliope to the Tredegar Wharf Monday morning's tide, as we have two feet more water than at Bathurst Basin. Pilot will tell you what to do." The spring tides were just beginning, and it was, in my opinion, a matter left entirely to the pilot, who knew the draft and trim of the vessel, to judge whether she could be safely berthed on the Monday morning, or must wait for the tide of Monday afternoon or Tuesday morning. The captain, who was naturally anxious to avoid delay, read Griffiths' communication to the pilot. He admits that the pilot at once said that he did not think there would be water enough on Monday morning. The pilot says that he not only expressed that opinion, but distinctly told the captain that, inasmuch as he would incur the risk of losing his certificate, he would not take the vessel to Tredegar Wharf on Monday morning upon his own account, although he was willing to make the attempt if the captain would undertake responsibility for the consequences. The captain denies that such a statement was made to him, but the pilot's evidence is corroborated by two witnesses who were present on the occasion.

There are two berths at the Tredegar Wharf, one alongside the quay, and another just outside it, in which vessels lie when stranded by the receding tide. The Calliope was destined to the inner berth, and it is not now disputed that if she had got there she would have lain in perfect safety. At that part of the river Usk the foreshore is chiefly composed of mud, varying in consistency, becoming harder and harder as it approaches the underlying rock.

A loaded vessel when stranded presses upward the mud on either side of it, and when two vessels are lying side by side that pressure tends to form a ridge of mud between them, which remains after they leave. From the action of the river a deposit of muddy silt rapidly accumulates upon the foreshore.

The appellant company are neither owners nor lessees of the foreshore upon which their wharf abuts, they have no rights except as members of the public; although their position as occupiers of riparian land gives them a use of the river and its adjacent solum for the purpose of loading and unloading craft which the members of the public cannot enjoy without their permission. They cannot interfere with the natural condition of the foreshore in any way which could possibly affect the flow of the river or its navigation; and such innocent operations as they may venture upon are only protected by the tacit consent of the owners of the solum. It appears that the appellant company and other wharfingers upon the Usk are in the habit, at intervals of ten days or a fortnight, of removing from their berths the mud deposit, because it impedes the floating of vessels with the rise of the tide, and also of scraping down the ridge or mud bank between the berths.

On the Monday morning The Calliope was taken up the river under steam until she passed the Tredegar Wharf. She was then turned round to port and her course directed straight to the wharf. When her stem had got within a few feet of the lower end of the quay her stern took the mud, and attempts made to berth her by warping her stern towards the upper end of the quay proved unsuccessful. The time at which she attempted to reach the berth was shortly after 4 a.m., more than an hour before full flood. She did not float at the top of the tide, and at low water her stem and stern were fast in mud, whilst amidships she rested upon, and was partly sunk into, the ridge already described, which had been scraped down, as usual, about a fortnight previously. In that position her hull suffered damage, for which her owners are now seeking to make the appellants responsible.

The sole cause of action disclosed in the respondents' statement of claim was that the berth which the appellants directed The Calliope to occupy was unfit for that purpose, being "in an uneven and dangerous and defective condition." Had it been shown that such was the fact, and that the injuries sustained by The Calliope were due to that cause, the present case would have been within the principle followed both by the Admiralty judge and the Court of Appeal in The Moorcock, 14 P. D. 64. In the course of the trial before Butt, J., the respondents put forward two new grounds of action, and asked leave to amend their pleadings, in order to introduce them. One amendment was allowed by the learned judge, "in order to raise the question of negligence on the part of Griffiths, upon the assumption that he was intrusted with the authority to bring this ship in; and that his acts were the acts of the defendants." The second amendment proposed, to the effect that the statement in Griffiths' note as to the excess of water at the wharf beyond its depth at Bathurst Basin was a material misrepresentation, by which the captain and pilot were misled, was reserved for consideration after the evidence was completed.

So far as concerns the amendment allowed, it is obvious that Butt, J., did not attach implicit credence to the account of Griffiths' actions given by The Calliope witnesses, which was contradicted by Griffiths himself and other witnesses for the appellants. But assuming that account to be true, it falls far short of showing that Griffiths was either intrusted with or exercised authority in bringing the vessel to the wharf. The fair inference to be derived from it is, in my opinion, that the whole charge of navigating the vessel and of bringing her alongside the quay was from first to last in the hands of her officers and pilot, and that Griffiths did and said no more than might naturally have been expected of a wharfinger's servant who was assisting to warp and moor her.

The other amendment, which was not expressly allowed, but was dealt with by Butt, J., in the course of his judgment, is equally without foundation in fact. I think with Butt, J., that the representation made by Griffiths was substantially true. According to the register kept from actual observation, at Bathurst Basin the extreme depth of water there on the morning in question was 16 feet; adding 2 feet that would only give 18 feet at Tredegar Wharf, whereas the after part of The Calliope was drawing 18 feet 3 inches.

For these reasons Butt, J., dismissed the suit. On appeal his judgment was reversed by Lord Esher, M.R., with Cotton and Lindley, L.JJ., who condemned the present appellants in costs and damages. Their lordships did not deal with any of the questions raised in the court below, but rested their decision on the ground that the appellants were lessees of a portion of the river bed ex adverso of their wharf, including the space between the berths, and that they had failed in their duty to those in charge of The Calliope by neglecting either to remove the ridge or to warn The Calliope of its existence.

In their argument at your lordships' bar the respondents mainly relied upon the cause of action which has been affirmed by the Court of Appeal. I hesitate to affirm the principle that a court of review ought to entertain a new ground of action of which the defendant had no previous notice, based upon inferences of fact derived from evidence directed to other points—inferences which the defendant might possibly have been able to explain away or contradict if he had been required to lead proof with reference to them. But in the present case I am satisfied that the inferences which the Court of Appeal has drawn are not warranted by the evidence.

The assumption that the appellants were lessees of the river bed is expressly negatived by the only passage in the depositions to which the respondents were able to refer. Yet it seems to have been regarded as an important factor in the case, and Lindley, L.J., says that "the learned judge in the court below failed to attribute sufficient weight to the fact that the ship was injured by grounding on the ground of the defendants."

I do not doubt that there is a duty incumbent upon wharfingers in the position of the appellants, towards vessels which they invite to use their berthage for the purpose of loading from or unloading upon their wharf; they are in a position to see, and are in my opinion bound to see, whether the berths themselves and the approaches to them are in an ordinary and reasonable condition of safety for vessels coming to and lying at the wharf. If the approach to the berth is impeded by an unusual obstruction, they must either remove it, or, if that cannot be done, they must give due notice of it to ships coming there to use their quay. I think it would be altogether unreasonable to hold that the river bed in front of the Tredegar Wharf was not in an ordinary condition of safety unless it was kept as level as a billiard table; the evidence shows that in the river Usk the stranding of a vessel necessarily occasions a certain rise of the mud above the adjacent level, that the creation of such a ridge as that between the appellants' berths is incidental to all the wharves on the river, as well as theirs, and also that the scraping down of such ridges at intervals of time is the usual and only method which has been followed, at all these places, for enabling vessels to enter the inner berth in safety. It is proved that the appellants had not neglected to take the usual precautions for reducing the ridge; and it is not even suggested in the evidence that on the occasion when The Calliope stranded upon it the ridge had attained greater dimensions or height than it usually did before the process of scraping came to be repeated in course.

In these circumstances I find it impossible to impute negligence to the appellants. I do not think that a seaman of ordinary skill would have experienced difficulty in ascertaining when the tide would be of sufficient depth to carry The Calliope safely into the inner berth; and I can hardly conceive conduct more reckless than that of the persons intrusted with the duty of taking her there. They knew that safe access was a mere question of time, and that by waiting for high water on the Monday afternoon, or Tuesday morning at farthest, it could be secured. The pilot did not think that there would be enough water; he knew that the attempt to take her in would put him in peril of losing his certificate; and the captain, who seems to have had no personal knowledge of the locality, was aware of the pilot's opinion. Both were in fault, and it is unnecessary to consider the proportion of blame attaching to either, because the present case is between ship and wharf, and the ship must be answerable for what they did either singly or jointly.

One other observation occurs to me upon the facts of this case. I think it is clearly proved that the existence of the ridge was not the cause which prevented the vessel from getting into berth. It has never been suggested that the muddy solum upon which her sternmost part rested was in an abnormal or unsafe condition, either as regards level or otherwise. According to the captain, whose evidence on the point is uncontradicted, her stern only was aground until after the tide began to ebb, when for the first time she grounded amidships; so that until she grounded on the ebb her midships must have been afloat above the ridge for the period of an hour at least. During that period efforts were made to warp her into the berth; and it is plain that these were defeated, not by the ridge, but by the fact that her stern was too fast in the mud. If the grounding of her stern was due to the negligence of those in charge of The Calliope I cannot understand upon what principle the appellants could be made responsible for her being held fast by the stern in such a position that she stranded upon and was injured by the ridge when the tide ebbed.

I therefore concur in the judgment proposed by the Lord Chancellor.

Lord HERSCHELL.—I am of the same opinion. I think, as my noble and learned friend has pointed out, that there was some misapprehension on the part of the learned judges in the court below which influenced their decision, and led, to some extent at all events, to their differing from the learned judge whose judgment they were reviewing. What I conceive to have been the misapprehension is put most pointedly in the judgment of Lindley, L.J., who says that he thinks "sufficient weight was not given by the learned judge in the court below to the fact that this ship was injured by grounding on the land of the defendants." and later on he speaks of them "as occupiers of the place and having control of the bed of the river," and says that this "was not sufficiently attended to by the learned judge in the court below."

Both the Master of the Rolls and Cotton, L.J., speak of the defendants having been lessees of the particular part of the bed of the river where the accident occurred. Now the learned counsel for the respondents, being pressed upon this point, have entirely failed to show the slightest foundation for any such allegation. I do not understand that the appellants had in any way whatsoever a control of this part of the river; nor do I think it is accurate to say, as was said by Cotton, L.J., that the unevenness of the bed of the river was caused by the appellants mooring, for their own purposes, vessels opposite their wharf.

The real position of things I take to be this. Persons navigating the river with vessels have a right to discharge those vessels at any convenient and suitable wharf along its course; and when a vessel grounds and lies near a wharf for the purpose of discharging, that is as much a natural use by the vessel of the river as is her use in being water-borne to the place where she is to discharge; and when she is in that position for the purpose of discharging, her situation there and the discharge are as much a matter of her concern as they are of the wharfinger's, and are as essentially a part of the mode of using the river for the purposes of navigation as any other. Therefore I approach the case from an entirely different standpoint, with all respect to the learned judges in the court below. It appears to me that these ridges or elevations in the bed of the river were caused by the use of the river, by vessels navigating it, in one of the ordinary modes in which a river is used; and to attribute them to the wharfinger, to speak of them as if they were his work and the result of acts done by him is in my judgment, with all respect, to misapprehend the real state of things and the relations of the parties. No doubt it is to his advantage that ships should discharge at his wharf. On the other hand, it is an advantage to the ships that they should go to the place of discharge where commercially the products which they carry are required.

Therefore I am by no means prepared to say that there was any legal obligation on the part of the appellants, when vessels had been lying at their wharf, to remove all unevenness from the bed of the river in order that it might become a perfectly level surface again, any more than there was an obligation on the ships which had caused the elevation to remove that elevation themselves. I will deal in a moment with the duties which might, under certain circumstances, conceivably arise to cast an obligation upon the wharfinger; but I am only saying that the mere fact that vessels so lie and cause a difference of elevation in different parts of the river does not in itself appear to me to involve necessarily any such obligation as is suggested.

Now I do not for a moment deny that there is a duty on the part of the owner of the wharf to those whom he invites to come alongside that wharf, and a duty in which the condition of the bed of the river adjoining that wharf may be involved. But in the present case we are not dealing, as were the learned judges in the cases which have been cited to us, with a condition of the bed of the river in itself dangerous—that is to say, which is such as necessarily to involve danger to a vessel coming to use the wharf in the ordinary way—and we are not dealing with the case of what I may call an abnormal obstruction in the river—some foreign substance or some condition not arising from the ordinary course of navigation. If the mischief had arisen from the bed of the river adjoining the wharf being in such a condition that a vessel invited there could not, even if she had come in at the most fitting and proper time of tide, have lain there in safety, it may well be that there would have been a cause of action. But the peculiarity of the present case is that it was all a matter of time and degree; whether it was safe to come or not depended upon a variety of elements. There was no necessarily inherent danger in the condition of the bed of the river. If this vessel had been of a somewhat lighter draught she might have come safely to this wharf when she did, and, having got safely in, have remained uninjured. If, on the other hand, being of the draught that she was, she had waited for a later time of tide, she might equally have come in safely and have discharged her cargo absolutely uninjured. But the mischief arose from the fact that, being of the draught she was, she came at the time she did, and attempted then to do that which she might safely have done later, or that which a vessel of a lighter draught or a more even keel might have done at that time.

Now, under those circumstances, apart from the question of representation, with which I shall deal in a moment, can it be said that there was a breach of duty on the part of the appellants? What was their duty? Was it to keep the bed of the river adjoining their wharf in such a condition as that, at all tides, any ship, however heavy her draught, might come in? Such a proposition, surely, can hardly be contended for. Then, why was there an obligation in respect of this ship at that particular time, or at any particular time, indeed, that could be named? (I mean, of course, apart from the alleged representation). That I am wholly unable to see. Therefore that proves that this case differs altogether from any of those which have been cited, because here the accident, such as it was, arose entirely from the circumstance of a vessel with this draught coming in on this particular tide.

I have said that, if the obstruction which created the difficulty in the approach of this vessel to the wharf at this particular tide, had been one caused by some unusual and extraordinary circumstance, which those navigating the river would have no right to anticipate, but known to the wharfinger, then I quite agree that some duty on his part would arise towards them, and, in the absence of warning, it may be that he would be under some responsibility. But the truth is, that the pilot knew perfectly well that these inequalities did arise at all the berths in the river from time to time, owing to vessels lying there. No doubt, from time to time, at different places, some scraping took place for the purpose of lowering the level of these elevations. I have already expressed my doubt whether, although that work was undertaken by the wharfingers, it was in pursuance of any duty incumbent upon them. It was perfectly natural, of course, that they should undertake it in their own interest, because, of course, if these elevations were allowed to increase it would render access to their wharves more difficult. The witness called for the defendants on this part of the case explained that it was for this reason that they did scrape from time to time, in order that the access to their wharf might not be interrupted to the extent that it would otherwise be, but it may be doubted whether it was not in their interest rather than in the discharge of an obligation that they from time to time scraped these elevations. I would say this, that it was not by reason of their having any control over this part of the river in any peculiar sense, or having any superior right to that of any other member of the public that they undertook this work, or would be able or entitled to undertake it. I mean any other member of the public who was, as they were, a riparian proprietor. I apprehend that, being riparian proprietors, they would have a right to execute such work in the neighbourhood for the purpose of improving the access to their wharves as they might be advised to execute, provided that in so doing they did not prejudicially affect or interfere with the rights of any third persons or the rights of the public. Subject to the rights of the public, and subject to the rights of any third persons not being interfered with, I do not suppose that they could be in any way rendered liable for thus dealing with the bed of the river in the neighbourhood of their wharf.

Now, as I have said, this is not a case of anything foreign or strange in the condition of the bed of the river. It is one of the results of the normal use of the river; and all that can be said is that the wharfingers may not on this occasion have done as much as they had previously done to remove the elevations caused by that use of the river; but certainly it is to my mind impossible to say that, even if they did to some extent omit to do what they had done on previous occasions (and all the evidence as to that is of the vaguest description), they failed in their duty towards those who were about to approach their wharf.

That, to my mind, apart from the question of the letter and the representation which came in the letter, is sufficient to dispose of the case. One observation I may make, although it is to some extent connected with the representation which the appellants made—it is this, that if on the one hand the condition of the bed of the river may be said to have been a matter peculiarly within the knowledge of the appellants, on the other hand the draught of the vessel, which was of at least as great importance in determining whether the vessel could have approached the wharf or not, was peculiarly within the knowledge of the respondents; and to say that the respondents, who had this knowledge, which they would know would not in the ordinary course be in the possession of the appellants, were entitled to rely upon a statement made to them by the appellants as to their being able to get safely to the wharf at a particular time, appears to me a somewhat startling proposition. No doubt the letter of Griffiths does represent that in his opinion (and there is no reason to doubt that it was honestly his opinion) the captain could bring the steamer to the Tredegar Wharf on Monday morning's tide. But surely that could not absolve the shipowners, or those who were in charge of the ship, from the responsibility of considering for themselves whether it was possible. As I say, presumably the man who gave that information would not know, as they would, the draught of the ship and her trim, because if this ship had been of the same draught, but that draught had been on a different trim, it would very likely have been the case that the vessel would have made her way in with safety. Therefore I do not think that this letter can be taken as an invitation to come in under all circumstances, or an assertion that they can come in under all circumstances, but it must be taken merely as a general statement of what the condition of the water at the wharf was in comparison with the berth at Bathurst Basin, and what, therefore, they would have a reasonable right to expect under ordinary circumstances, of course assuming that those who were navigating the ship would know that they must make sufficient allowance, because the bed of the river in the neighbourhood of the wharf might not be in a perfectly even condition. It seems to me to be out of the question to suppose that it is a right and proper thing to run the matter so fine that if you have six inches of elevation at any particular point near the wharf above the surface of the bottom of the berth itself you will have too little water. I cannot think that it was really a prudent thing to run it so fine as that, and I think that a greater margin ought to have been left in order to insure reasonable safety.

With regard to the representation, it is not alleged as a deceit, it cannot be put as a warranty—the utmost the plaintiffs can allege appears to be a representation by the foreman in charge of the wharf of his belief, he being ignorant of that which those on board knew, namely, the draught of water of the vessel, on which depended the possibility or not of getting this ship on to the berth.

Under these circumstances I am unable to see any breach of duty on the part of the appellants rendering them liable to this action, and I concur with the motion which has been made.

Lord MORRIS.—I concur.

Order of the Court of Appeal reversed and decree of Butt, J., restored with costs; cause remitted to the Admiralty Division.

Solicitors for the appellants, Pritchard & Sons, for Vaughan & Hornby, Newport, Mon.

Solicitors for the respondents, Downing, Holman, & Co.

Court of Appeal

From Chan. Div. March 9, 10, 13.

INDIGO CO. v. OGILVY. (a.)

Practice — Jurisdiction — Amending writ — Adding foreign firm as defendants—Some members of foreign firm resident within the jurisdiction — Introducing fresh causes of action in respect of transactions out of the jurisdiction—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 11, r. 1 (g)—Service out of the jurisdiction.

The plaintiffs, an English company, entered into certain agreements in India with an Indian firm relative to the manufacture of indigo and the sale and disposal of the proceeds of the indigo so manufactured. The agents in England of the Indian firm were an English firm, consisting of five out of the six members of the Indian firm, several of whom were resident in India. The Indian firm consigned the indigo to the English firm as their agents, on behalf of the plaintiff company, and drew bills against it on the latter, who, upon such bills being presented, dishonoured them, on the ground of their exceeding the amount authorized. The English agents having then taken up the bills and sold the indigo, the plaintiff company commenced an action against them claiming the indigo and other relief, and all the members of the English firm appeared to the writ. On a motion for an interlocutory injunction, the plaintiff company introduced charges of fraud against the native servants of the Indian firm. The plaintiff company subsequently obtained leave ex parte to amend their writ by adding the Indian firm as defendants and by making consequential amendments, and to issue a concurrent writ for service out of the jurisdiction, but on that application they did not go into the question of fraud. They then amended their writ, and added a claim against the new defendants, the Indian firm, which raised entirely fresh causes of action arising out of alleged breaches in India by the Indian firm of the agreements. The Indian firm then moved to discharge the order which had been obtained ex parte, and North, J., granted the application.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the order giving leave to amend was rightly discharged, but that, under the circumstances, the plaintiffs ought to be allowed to amend their original writ by substituting the names of the individual members of both firms who were resident within the jurisdiction for the name of the English firm, and by adding a claim for relief in respect of breaches of the agreements, and that the members of both firms who were resident out of the jurisdiction ought to be allowed to set aside their appearances, and that the order to be made must be without prejudice to any application by the plaintiffs for leave to add as parties all or any of the members of the said firms so resident out of the jurisdiction, and to serve them with the amended, or a concurrent, writ.

Western National Bank of New York v. Perez, ante, p. 245, [1891] 1 Q. B. 304, *followed.

---

* See R. S. C., June, 1891 (35 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 589), ord. 48A, rr. 1—11, as to actions by and against firms.

(a.) Reported by R. H. DEANE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal from North, J.

The Indigo Co. (Limited) was an English company whose business was the working in India of a certain patent for the manufacture of indigo by a particular process.

It appeared that the plaintiff company had entered into certain contracts in writing with Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot, & Co., a Calcutta firm, who were managers and part proprietors of some indigo estates in India. These contracts, which were respectively executed at Calcutta on the 9th of May, 1887, and the 30th of May, 1888, contained provisions for the manufacture of indigo by the patent process on the aforesaid Indian estates of Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot, & Co., and for the sale at Calcutta of the indigo so manufactured. Messrs. Ogilvy, Gillanders, & Co., an English firm, were the London agents and correspondents of Gillanders, Arbuthnot, & Co., and the latter firm consisted of six persons, five of whom constituted the English firm, some of the members of both firms being resident in India.

The plaintiff company being dissatisfied with the prices obtained for the indigo in Calcutta, wrote the following letter, in January, 1890, to Ogilvy, Gillanders, & Co.:—"In consideration of your telegraphing to your Calcutta firm to ship the patent indigo made at Begumserai and Khan Mirzapore factories to this market instead of selling at Calcutta at the very low valuation of Rs.120 named, we hereby undertake to accept on presentation draft or drafts of your Calcutta firm, Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot, & Co., for the amount due to the proprietors of Begumserai and Khan Mirzapore factories, plus Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot, & Co.'s disbursements for freight, insurance, and shipping charged at 90 d/s with document attached, for payment, and to pay the same at maturity."

In consequence of that communication the Indian firm shipped to England 410 chests of the indigo, consigned to Ogilvy, Gillanders, & Co., for the plaintiff company, and drew bills against it on the latter for more then £17,000, which they negotiated in Calcutta. When the bills came to the plaintiffs they refused to accept them, on the ground that they were in excess of the amount authorized, and the bills were then taken up by Ogilvy, Gillanders, & Co.

The plaintiff company issued their writ of summons against the English firm of Ogilvy, Gillanders, & Co. only in October, 1890. The indorsement on that writ was:—"The plaintiffs' claim is (1) for a declaration that they are entitled to certain goods in the possession of the defendants, to wit, 410 cases of indigo shipped by Gillanders, Arbuthnot, & Co. from India to the defendants, or the proceeds thereof, and alleged by the plaintiffs to have been shipped for or on their account; (2) for an order directing the defendants to deliver the said goods, or their proceeds, to the plaintiffs; (3) for an injunction restraining the defendants, their brokers or agents, from selling or disposing of the said goods, or any of them, or from receiving or dealing with the proceeds of any sale or disposition thereof; and (4) for damages for the wrongful conversion and detention by the defendants of the said goods."

All the members of the English firm entered an appearance, including those residing in India.

The indigo having been sold by Messrs. Ogilvy, Gillanders, & Co.'s brokers, the latter were afterwards added as defendants.

The next step in the proceedings was a motion on behalf of the plaintiff company to restrain the defendants from parting with the indigo. From the affidavits filed in support of that motion it appeared that the company claimed to be entitled to damages from the Indian firm for frauds alleged to have been committed by their native employés at the factories, with the object and effect of increasing the amounts chargeable against the plaintiff company in respect of indigo manufactured under their process. However, as the result of an arrangement between the parties as to the disposal of the proceeds, the injunction was allowed to stand over till the trial.

In December, 1890, the company applied ex parte to the judge in chambers for leave to amend their writ by adding the Indian firm as defendants, "and by making such amendments in the indorsement of the said writ as may be necessary in consequence of the joinder of the said Gillanders, Arbuthnot, & Co. as defendants," and for leave to issue a concurrent writ for service out of the jurisdiction. This application, which was supported by an affidavit not referring to the alleged frauds, having been granted by the judge, the company proceeded to amend their writ by adding the Indian firm as defendants, and by adding to the indorsement on the writ a claim for £5,000 "for money received by them to and for the use of the plaintiffs, and for damages for breach by them of two agreements in writing, dated respectively the 9th of May, 1887, and the 30th of May, 1888."

The response to this was a motion on behalf of the Indian firm to discharge the order obtained ex parte granting the company leave to add the Indian firm as defendants, &c., unless the company would undertake to confine themselves in the action to such breaches of the contracts as took place within the jurisdiction, because, as the Indian firm alleged in their notice, the substantial dispute, as far as they were concerned, related to matters and alleged breaches outside the jurisdiction of the English court.

This motion came on for hearing before North, J., on the 13th of February, 1891.

North, J., acceded to the application and discharged the order obtained ex parte by the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Napier Higgins, Q.C., and W. S. Robson, for the appellants.—The learned judge was wrong in discharging the order which gave us leave to add the Indian firm as defendants. At all events, we ought not to be debarred from proceeding against those members of that firm who reside in this country. All the members of the English firm, including those resident in India, appeared to the original writ, and that includes five out of six of the Indian firm, and they ought not to be allowed practically to set aside their appearances. But our contention is that, there having been a breach of contract within the jurisdiction, it was right to add the Indian firm as defendants: R. S. C., 1883, ord. 11, r. 1 (e) (g); Reynolds v. Coleman, 35 W. R. 813, 36 Ch. D. 453; Western National Bank of New York v. Perez, ante, p. 245, [1891] 1 Q. B. 304; Massey v. Heynes, 36 W. R. 834, 21 Q. B. D. 330.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Cababé, for the respondents.—The claim for £5,000 added by the amendment does not affect the defendants who are within the jurisdiction at all, and ought not to be tried here. The order of the learned judge was right. The order to amend obtained ex parte could only have been allowed to stand upon terms of the plaintiffs undertaking to confine the action to such of the alleged breaches as took place within the jurisdiction: Thomas v. Duchess of Hamilton, 35 W. R. 22, 17 Q. B. D. 592. The only substantial question in the action is as to the alleged frauds, but nothing was made of that on the ex parte application. An action, which should properly be brought in India, ought not to be allowed to be brought here by a side wind. There is nothing between the parties that could not be settled in five minutes except the so-called Indian frauds. We say

(1) there was no breach; (2) if there was any breach, it was out of the jurisdiction; (3) even if there was a breach within the jurisdiction, there is no damage. The question of the Indian frauds ought to be tried in India, not in England. They took place in India, and the witnesses are resident there.

They referred to Massey v. Heynes.

Higgins, Q.C., in reply.—[LINDLEY, L.J.—The objection seems to be that you are seeking in substance to add an entirely new cause of action to your claim.] The original order which was discharged was a perfectly proper one, and ought not to have been discharged, and certainly not on the grounds on which it was discharged. All the confusion seems to have arisen from suing the firms instead of the individuals. [LINDLEY, L.J.—Yes; and that was your fault. KAY, L.J.—The English firm seem to have had nothing to do with the alleged breaches.] In substance the firms are identical. The distinction between them is purely technical. The learned judge, at most, ought to have struck out the amendments actually made, not discharged the order giving leave to amend. There are not two causes of action. They are substantially the same. The matter is so complicated that practically it is one cause of action only.

He referred to Massey v. Heynes.

Cur. adv. vult.

March 13. — LINDLEY, L.J. — This action was brought by a limited company in this country against the firm of Ogilvy, Gillanders, & Co., and according to the indorsement on the original writ it appears to be neither more nor less than an action of trover. Some of the partners in Ogilvy, Gillanders, & Co. do not reside in this country, and the plaintiffs, therefore, were wrong in issuing their writ, without leave, against that firm. There is no order which justifies it at all. The plaintiffs ought to have applied for leave to serve the partners who are abroad. But then, we are told, those members of the firm who are abroad have appeared, and if there had been nothing more in it there would be no reason why that appearance should be in any way disturbed. But the plaintiffs obtained an order ex parte whereby it was ordered that they should be at liberty to amend the writ of summons by adding Gillanders, Arbuthnot, & Co., of Calcutta, in the Empire of India, as defendants, and by making such consequential amendments in the indorsement of the writ as might be thereby necessitated; and then it was ordered that the plaintiffs should be at liberty to issue a concurrent writ, and so on. After that an application was made on behalf of the Calcutta firm to discharge that order. In the interval the plaintiffs had availed themselves of the order by amending their writ, adding the name of the Calcutta firm and introducing a new cause of action altogether, suing now both firms for breaches of two agreements entered into as I will presently mention. North, J., on consideration of the matter came to the conclusion that the liberty given by the order I have just referred to was confined, and intentionally confined, merely to this—to adding the Calcutta firm for the purpose of obtaining relief against the English firm according to the claim on the writ—for there is no statement of claim yet—and he considered that it was going beyond what was intended by that order, and beyond what was reasonable and proper, to recast the whole case and add the Calcutta firm with a view to the case so made, and he accordingly discharged the order. From that the plaintiffs appeal.

Now it appears to me that there have been misconceptions on both sides in this matter. In the first place I take it to be now settled, after the discussion which this matter has undergone in the case of the Western National Bank of New York v. Perez, that you cannot sue a firm some members of which are abroad, at all events without leave; that if you can sue them at all in the firm name, which seems to be doubtful, you must at all events obtain leave. Therefore, when this writ was issued it was all wrong so far as the foreigners were concerned. That being so, the addition of the Calcutta firm did not make it more right. That was wrong too; and, therefore, the order of North, J., giving the plaintiffs liberty to amend, by adding another firm to a defective writ, was wrong, and that order ought to be discharged and put right—in other words, the appeal ought to fail.

But then comes the question what ought we now to do. It is not right for this court, or any court, to play battledore and shuttlecock with suitors, and North, J., ought, it appears to me, to have given the plaintiffs liberty to amend their writ in such a way as was possible without doing injustice to the defendants; and I propose now to state the order which we think he ought to have made, and to make that order.

But before doing that I will make one or two remarks about the cause of action here. The real cause of action arises from alleged breaches of two contracts made in Calcutta between the Calcutta firm and the plaintiffs. Some of the alleged breaches were in Calcutta and some in this country. But the plaintiffs' rights are based entirely on those contracts. There are two firms, one consisting of five partners, and the other of six. All the members of the English firm are members of the Calcutta firm; but there is one member of the Calcutta firm who is not a member of the English firm. Now if partners abroad, who have partners resident here, enter into any agreement as such with a person here, the partners resident here can be sued for any breach of that agreement whether the breach is in this country or abroad. I apprehend there is no doubt at all about that, and the struggle to prevent the plaintiffs here from suing the partners here for breaches abroad appears to me to be almost futile. It can be done in some way or another, but I do not say it can be done in the shape in which the plaintiffs have attempted to do it. On the other hand, the plaintiffs have got into a hopeless confusion, and I do not think it would be right to leave them in that state, in which no good can accrue to them, and no good to the defendants, when there is a very serious matter in controversy between them.

In order to do justice, therefore, it appears to me that North, J., ought to have done this; and we propose to do it. First of all we dismiss this appeal with costs, because the form is all wrong; and we set aside the amended writ. The plaintiffs are to be at liberty to amend their original writ by substituting for the name of the firm, Ogilvy, Gillanders, & Co. (that is, the name on the original writ), the names of the members thereof, and the names of the members of the firm of Gillanders, Arbuthnot, & Co., who are in this country; and to amend the writ by adding a claim for relief in respect of any illegal breaches of the contracts of May, 1887, and May, 1888. Now if we stopped there that would hardly be fair, because some members of the firm of Ogilvy, Gillanders, & Co. are resident abroad, and they have appeared, and it would not be right, I think, to put them to their appearance to the amended writ, which disclosed a totally new cause of action; and I do not know that they would have appeared to that. Therefore what we propose to do is this. The members of the above firms who reside abroad, and who have appeared to the original writ, are to be at liberty to set aside their appearances. That will leave as defendants those members of the two firms who are in this country. Of course they must appear and meet any cause of action which the plaintiffs can have against them. Then we propose to add this, which may or may not be necessary—and I do not know whether it will or not—"and this order is to be without prejudice to any application which the plaintiffs may make to add as parties to such amended writ all or any of the co-partners of the said defendants who are not resident in this country, and to serve them with such amended writ, or a concurrent writ, as the plaintiffs may be advised." There are two reasons why we do not now give them liberty to do that. In the first place, I do not know that it is necessary; and, in the next place, if it should become necessary, there may, for anything I know, be reasons which the defendants can show against their being joined. I think, therefore, it would not be fair to the defendants to go so far as to give the plaintiffs liberty to do it now; but inasmuch as, by striking out those two firms, this order may very seriously embarrass the plaintiffs, we propose to put it in that form—that the order is to be without prejudice to any application which they may make, if they find it necessary; although, so far as I can see, they will not find it necessary.

KAY, L.J.—I assent to the proposed order, and I will shortly state my view of the matter. The writ as originally framed asked for a declaration against the persons who are now defendants to it, who were named by the name of the firm, Ogilvy, Gillanders, & Co., that the plaintiffs were entitled to certain goods in the possession of the defendants; and, secondly, for an order directing the defendants to deliver those goods, or their proceeds, to the plaintiffs; and, thirdly, for an injunction to prevent them disposing of the goods in any other way; and, fourthly, damages for wrongful conversion and detention by the defendants of the said goods. That is all that appears on the writ, and the effect of that is a suggestion that there are certain goods in the possession of the firm, who were defendants, in this country, to which the plaintiffs have a right, and what practically they seek is to recover those goods.

Well, that firm, it appears, was entirely an English partnership, and some of the members were actually in England, others of the members of that firm were not in England, but were in India; but they all appeared to the writ, so that, so far as any claim was asserted against the specific goods in the possession of the firm in England, there was a complete action. However, the plaintiffs were not satisfied with that. They wanted to add a firm who are, in fact, an Indian firm, and carry on business in Calcutta. That Indian firm is composed of all the members of the English firm, and one additional member, so that it is a separate firm; and the plaintiffs obtained, under an ex parte order, leave to add that firm, and to amend their writ; and then they amended their writ by adding that Indian firm also, by the name of Gillanders, Arbuthnot, & Co., not making any of the individuals, either of the English or foreign firm, parties to the writ; and then they added to the writ this claim—"And the plaintiffs also claim against the defendants Gillanders, Arbuthnot, & Co. £5,000 for money received by them to and for the use of the plaintiffs, and for damages for the breach by them of two agreements in writing, dated respectively the 9th of May, 1887, and the 30th of May, 1888." Now that is the first mention of those agreements in the writ, and the effect of that writ, as amended, is to ask all the original relief, not only against the English firm, but also against the Indian firm, and to add certain special relief against the Indian firm which is, in point of fact, alternative, and probably inconsistent, relief.

The facts, as now appears, are these: There were two agreements between the plaintiffs and the Indian firm, the English firm not being party to either of those agreements. They were altogether agreements with the Indian firm, and those agreements were practically for the use by the Indian firm of certain patent processes of the plaintiffs in preparing indigo; and it is claimed (I am not at all wishing to indicate any opinion of my own as to the real meaning) that by virtue of one or other of those agreements the Indian firm were bound to consign to this country indigo so prepared; and the plaintiffs' claim is that when the indigo so prepared was consigned to this country they had a right to that specific indigo. But under this amendment of the writ they are not merely claiming the specific indigo which is being transmitted to this country, but they want damages against the Indian firm for breaches of those two contracts. Now, that relief is alternative relief; or, at least, it is relief which is not in the least degree involved in the writ as originally framed; and under it the defendants state that they are apprehensive that claims may be made against the Indian firm for breaches of these two contracts, or one of them, which occurred in India. Now it is quite clear that an original writ for breaches of these contracts, which breaches occurred in India, would not be allowed to issue in this country against people resident abroad. If the defendants against whom that sort of relief was asked were resident abroad, the answer to any application to allow a writ to be issued against them in this country would be this: "Your cause of action, the breach of the agreement, is abroad. It does not come within the terms of the orders at all. You must sue them in the country in which the breach occurred." I take it that is very clear indeed; and what the defendants say is this: "The plaintiffs are now trying, under guise of an amendment of their writ, and by reason of the leave they obtained ex parte, to add the foreign firm as parties in order to obtain against that foreign firm relief which, unless they had joined them in this way, they would not have been allowed to obtain in this country at all." That I understand to be the main difficulty which the defendants raise.

Now, certainly one case, Massey v. Heynes, which was referred to has gone very far. In that case the Divisional Court, and afterwards the Court of Appeal, did allow the addition by amendment of persons resident abroad to an action commenced against persons resident in this country, and allowed the plaintiffs to ask against the persons resident abroad alternative relief, which could not have been obtained upon an original writ against those persons alone, because the cause of action was not a cause of action in this country, and did not come within the rule. Wills, J., in a very careful and well-considered judgment, says this:—"The brokers made a charter-party with the plaintiffs which had to be performed in the Mediterranean, and was there broken. On complaint made to the defendants abroad, they answered that the brokers in England had exceeded their authority in effecting the charter-party in the terms which it contained, and, therefore, that the foreign firm was not liable. Thus two sets of persons were involved in the transaction, against whom the plaintiffs had no joint remedy or joint cause of action, but in respect of each of whom the suggested cause of action against one excluded that against the other, for if the firm abroad had given authority to the brokers in London to make this charter-party, no action would lie against the brokers; if, on the other hand, the firm had not given authority to the brokers, no action would lie against the Austrian firm, but an action would lie against the brokers for breach of their implied warrant of authority. So that perhaps no case could be put in which the objections which have been raised to the service out of the jurisdiction would be more strikingly illustrated. The Austrian firm certainly could not have been served alone, because under none of the sub-sections of ord. 11, r. 1, would a case for service out of the jurisdiction against them arise. Also, if the action succeeded against the foreign firm, it would be on the ground that the English defendants were not liable, and, therefore, in one sense, ought not to have been sued." But the result of that case was this—that both the Divisional Court and the Court of Appeal agreed that the claims against the persons resident in England and the foreign firm arose out of the same transaction, and, therefore, there being a bonâ fide claim against the persons resident in England, it was proper in that case to allow the foreign firm to be joined on alternative relief sought against the foreign firm, which could not have been obtained in an action against the foreign firm alone, because they could not have been served. The case certainly is a very strong one, and Wills, J., says, in a further part of his judgment:—"If there was the least ground for saying the action was brought against the brokers in this country malâ fide, and with the knowledge that they were not liable, simply to try in England a case which otherwise could not be tried here, then, although the action was against a person in this country, it would not be 'properly' brought." In the circumstances supposed, he held that leave to add the foreign firm and serve them abroad could not have been given. But I do not think that case properly applies to what has been done here, for in the first place there would be the difficulty, which Lindley, L.J., has pointed out, in the frame of the original action. It was not right to frame this original action by making the English firm defendants simply in the name of the firm. The proper way would have been to make the partners in that firm parties by their individual names, and, then, if it was a proper case, leave might be obtained to serve those who were abroad. Or another mode of proceeding would have been merely to have made those members of the English firm who were actually resident in this country parties, and not to have added those members who were resident abroad. But the plaintiffs did not do that, and no doubt they were justified in saying that any defect of that kind was cured by the fact that the partners in that firm, though resident abroad, put in an appearance. However, they are now seeking to deal with the foreign firm in the same kind of way. They do not make the individual members of that foreign firm parties at all, but they have made the firm parties by the name of their firm only, without naming any of the individual members. It seems to me that that is wrong, and I cannot divest myself of the notion that the plaintiffs have really found out that their cause, as the writ was originally framed against the English firm, is a weak one, or at any rate, that it does not raise the real point they want to try, as they really want to try a question of breaches of these contracts abroad by the foreign firm, and, therefore, I am not quite convinced that this was a bonâ fide case of bringing the foreign firm before the court, and I rather think the case comes within those last observations of Wills, J., which I have read.

But now what is to be done? Supposing this writ were altogether set aside, and the action were stayed or dismissed, still it is quite clear that the plaintiffs might sue any of the members, either of the English or foreign firm, whom they happen to find in this country, and there are such members here. There are partners here who are members both of the English and of the foreign firm, and if the plaintiffs choose to bring an action against those members alone nobody could prevent them, and it would be no answer to say, "You are bringing an action against a member of a foreign firm in respect of a breach of contract in that foreign country." They have a right to do it if they find him here; they have a right to assert their remedy against a defendant who is in this country in respect of a breach of contract which occurred abroad. Therefore, in considering what is the proper course for the court now to take, it seems to me it is not right that we should simply affirm the order of North, J., without putting the parties, as far as may be proper now, in a position which they might clearly put themselves in if they liked without any authority of the court. I therefore quite assent to the order which Lindley, L.J., has stated. It enables the parties, if they please, to put their writ in a right form, and in a form which the court could not prevent their putting it in; and it obviates the necessity of issuing a new writ by giving them leave to amend this writ, and to utilize the proceedings which have been taken up to this point, if they please, for the purpose of the action which they contemplate bringing. More than that at present, I agree, it would not be well to do; but I have been considering the case very anxiously with a view, if possible, of preventing our having this fight, which was a somewhat prolonged one, considering the matter involved, all over again in court—a danger which, I am afraid, we have not altogether obviated.

Appeal dismissed. Order varied.

The minutes of the order were drawn up in the following form:—

Dismiss the appeal with costs, and set aside the amended writ; but the plaintiffs are to be at liberty to amend their original writ by substituting for the name of the firm Ogilvy, Gillanders, & Co. the names of the members thereof and of the firm Gillanders, Arbuthnot, & Co. who are in this country, and to amend the said writ by adding a claim for relief in respect of any alleged breaches of the contracts of May, 1887, and May, 1888; and the members of the above firms who reside abroad, and who have appeared to the original writ, are to be at liberty to set aside their appearances. And this order is to be without prejudice to any application which the plaintiffs may make to add as parties to such amended writ all or any of the co-partners of the said defendants who are not resident in this country, and to serve them with such amended writ or a concurrent writ as the plaintiffs may be advised.

Solicitors, E. W. & R. Oliver; Slade & Munk.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. }
Stirling, J. } April 24.

KENSINGTON AND KNIGHTSBRIDGE ELECTRIC LIGHTING CO. (LIMITED) v. LANE FOX ELECTRICAL CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Patent—Injunction—Threats—Alleged infringement—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 32.

The registered owner of an invention had agreed to assign it to a company, and had commenced an action against another company for infringing it, and the company to whom the patent was agreed to be assigned had threatened the other company and their customers with legal proceedings in respect of the alleged infringement.

(a.) Reported by H. M. CHARTERS MACPHERSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that, under section 32 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, the latter company were persons aggrieved and entitled to obtain an injunction to restrain such threats; and that, the action for the infringement not having been brought by the company who had made the threats, but by the legal owner of the patent, they were not within the proviso in section 32 that the section should not apply.

Motion.

St. George Lane Fox, by an agreement dated July 31, 1890, agreed to assign to the defendants, the Lane Fox Electrical Co. (Limited) a patent for certain improvements in electric lighting, of which he was the registered owner, upon terms not disclosed by the evidence.

The nominal capital of the defendant company was £100 divided into 100 shares of £1 each, and on March 10, 1891, Lane Fox held seventy-three shares, and was the managing director of the company.

On November 15, 1890, Lane Fox commenced an action against the plaintiffs, the Kensington and Knightsbridge Electrical Lighting Co. (Limited) to restrain them from infringing his patent, and this action was still pending.

On February 21, 1891, the defendant company sent the following letter to Messrs. John Barker & Co., of Kensington, who were being supplied with electricity by the plaintiff company:—

"We understand that your house is being supplied with electric light by the Kensington and Knightsbridge Electric Supply Co., which company, as you are doubtless aware, is now being sued for damages for infringement of our patented system of electric distribution. We have been advised that you, as one of the users of the said system, are liable for the infringement. We beg, therefore, to caution you of the fact, and to offer you an indemnity upon the terms contained in the enclosed circular. These terms, however, are to be considered as withdrawn if not accepted by the 28th inst."

The circular referred to in this letter stated that "The Lane Fox Electrical Co. (Limited) by whom all Mr. Lane Fox's patents for his system of electric light distribution are now held, are prepared to grant licences for the use of this system on the following terms, provided they are accepted without delay." It then stated the terms, and ended with a short description of the Lane Fox system.

Similar communications had been received by other customers of the plaintiff company.

The present action was commenced on March 4, 1891, by which the plaintiffs claimed "an injunction to restrain the defendants from threatening any persons with legal proceedings and liability in respect of any alleged infringement of" the Lane Fox patent, and damages; and this was a motion to restrain the defendants from such threats until the trial of the action or further order.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and R. Wallace, for the plaintiff.—We are entitled to an injunction to restrain these threats under section 32 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883. The evidence shows that there is no substance in the Lane Fox patents, so that there can be no infringement of it.

J. C. Graham, for the defendants.—If the threats had been uttered in the name of Lane Fox we would clearly have been within the proviso of section 32, for he has commenced an action for infringement of his patent: Barrett v. Day, 38 W. R. 362, 43 Ch. D. 435. The threats having been made by the defendant company, to whom the patent in equity belongs, cannot make any difference to the plaintiffs. The object of the section is that the questions of validity and infringement shall be tried, and the onus lies on the plaintiffs to establish their case: Challender v. Royle, 36 W. R. 357, 36 Ch. D. 425. Here they have failed to do so; the evidence simply amounting to a conflict of opinion.

STIRLING, J.—This is a motion made under section 32 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, which is in these terms:—"Where any person claiming to be the patentee of an invention by circulars, advertisement, or otherwise threatens any other person with any legal proceedings or liability in respect of any alleged manufacture, use, sale, or purchase of the invention any person or persons aggrieved thereby may bring an action against him, and may obtain an injunction against the continuance of such threats, and may recover such damage (if any) as may have been sustained thereby, if the alleged manufacture, use, sale, or purchase to which the threats related was not in fact an infringement of any legal rights of the person making such threats." Then there is this proviso:—"Provided that this section shall not apply if the person making such threats with due diligence commences and prosecutes an action for infringement of his patent."

The action is brought to restrain threats, of which a sample has been put in evidence in a letter, dated the 21st of February, 1891. [His lordship then read the letter.] I think, upon the construction of that letter, there is no doubt that it contains a threat. [His lordship then read the circular enclosed with the letter, and continued:—] Upon that it seems to me that the defendant company, who there describe themselves as now holding all Mr. Lane Fox's patents for his system of electric light distribution, and, therefore, according to the definition of "patentee" within section 46 of this Act, claim to be the persons "for the time being entitled to the benefit of a patent," claim to be the patentees of this invention within the meaning of section 32.

Then by that section, these defendants claiming to be patentees and threatening legal proceedings by circular, any person aggrieved may bring an action against them. Are the plaintiffs such persons? They are engaged in operations for supplying various persons within a particular district of London with the electric light, and upon the evidence there is no doubt at all that these threats interfere with their operations and prevent them from being so effectively conducted as they ought to be. The plaintiffs are therefore persons aggrieved, and they can bring an action and obtain an injunction "if the alleged manufacture, use, sale, or purchase to which the threats related was not in fact an infringement of any legal rights of the person making such threats." Have the defendants, who make the threats in this case, any legal rights to prevent the infringement of this patent, whether it be good or bad?

The only light which was thrown upon that was by the affidavit of Mr. Lane Fox, who says that he is the inventor of the invention referred to in this action, and is still the registered owner thereof, though he has, by an agreement dated the 31st of July, 1890, agreed to assign the said patent to the defendant company. Therefore, so far as appears at the present time, the defendants, the persons making the threats, are not the owners of the patent or entitled to the benefit of it, but are simply entitled to the benefit of an agreement for the assignment of it to themselves upon some terms, the nature of which is not disclosed. It is perfectly clear that the defendants have obtained no such legal assignment as could enable them to sue, from the fact that Mr. Lane Fox has brought an action in his own name for the infringement of the patent.

Now it appears from the evidence that the defendant company is somewhat remarkable in its constitution. Its nominal capital consists of £100, divided into 100 shares of £1 each. On the 30th of June, 1890, all these shares had been taken up; there had been called up on those shares nil; and there was "considered as paid" on each of these shares £1. One can understand that Mr. Lane Fox may have very good reason for not being eager to clothe that company with the legal title to sue for an infringement of the patent. At all events, there is no evidence that he has done so, and I think I ought, upon the evidence before me, to arrive at the conclusion that the company have no legal title, but are simply entitled to such an equity as is referred to in the concluding sentence of section 37 of the Act, which provides that "any equities" in respect of a patent "may be enforced in like manner as in respect of any other personal property"—that is to say, if they desire to enforce their rights they must bring an action against Mr. Lane Fox, and make him complete the contract to which he refers as having been made on the 31st of July, 1890. It appears to me, therefore, that the defendants, "the persons," in the language of the Act, "making the threats," have no legal rights of which the acts of the plaintiffs can be any infringement.

Then, does the proviso in section 32 apply? [His lordship read it.] Now "the person making such threats" is the defendant company, and they have commenced no action for infringement. It is true such an action has been commenced, but this has been done by Mr. Lane Fox, the legal owner of the patent, who is not the person making the threats; so that, if any damages are at the trial proved to have been occasioned to the present plaintiffs by the threats which have been used, those damages will not be recovered from Mr. Lane Fox, the person suing for the infringement, at all, but from this company, with a nominal capital of £100, which is to be considered as fully paid up.

I think, under these circumstances, that the plaintiffs bring themselves within the section, and that, without entering into the question of the validity or invalidity of the patent, or whether the acts of the plaintiffs are such as would entitle the legal owner of the patent to complain, the plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant company, their officers and servants, from threatening the above-named plaintiffs, or any of their customers, or other person or persons within the district of the plaintiff company.

Solicitors, Deacon, Gibson, & Medcalf; Sydney Morse.

Q. B. Div. (Cave and Vaughan Williams, JJ.) Jan. 26; May 14.

METROPOLITAN RAILWAY CO. v. FOWLER AND OTHERS. (a.)

Land tax—Liability—Railway company—Tunnel under roadway—Ownership of the soil—38 Geo. 3, c. 5, s. 4.

Section 4 of 38 Geo. 3, c. 5 makes "all and every manors, messuages, lands, and tenements, . . . and all hereditaments, of what nature or kind soever they be," assessable towards payment of the land tax.

A railway company, under the powers of their special Act, constructed a tunnel under a roadway without purchasing the land or paying any rent therefor.

Held, by Cave, J. (Vaughan Williams, J., dissenting), that the rights of the company in the soil occupied by their tunnel amounted to ownership, and that they were assessable to land tax in respect thereof.

Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Bowley, 17 Q. B. 358, distinguished.

Special case stated under Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 34, r. 1.

The material portions of the case stated as follows:—

By 38 Geo. 3, c. 5 (hereinafter referred to as the Land Tax Act) it was, by section 4, enacted that "all and every manors, messuages, lands, and tenements, and also all quarries, mines of coal, tin, &c., and all fishings, tithes, tolls, annuities, and all other yearly profits, and all hereditaments of what nature or kind soever they be, situate, lying, and being, happening or arising" within England or Wales or Berwick-upon-Tweed should be assessable towards payment of the land tax.

By the Metropolitan and District Railways (City Lines and Extensions) Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. ccl.), s. 5, the plaintiff company, in conjunction with the Metropolitan District Railway Co., were authorized to make and maintain certain railways, a new street, and other works in the said Act described, with all proper stations, sidings, approaches, works, and conveniences connected therewith respectively, and to enter upon, take, and use such of the lands delineated upon the deposited plans therein referred to as might be required for that purpose. Among the railways authorized by the said Act was a line therein described as "railway No. 1," effecting a junction between the lines of the Metropolitan District Railway Co at their Mansion House Station and the lines of the plaintiff company at their Aldgate Station.

By section 2 of the last-mentioned Act, the Land Clauses Consolidation Acts, 1845, 1860, and 1869, the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, with certain other parts of Acts in the said section named, are, except where expressly varied by the Act, incorporated with and to form part of the said Act, and are to be applicable to each of the two companies. Amongst other sections conferring power on the said two companies with reference to lands are the following:—

Section 16.—"With respect to any lands which the two companies are, by the provisions of this Act, authorized to enter on, take, and use for purposes of the railways, new street, and works, and which are in or under the roadway or footway of any street, road, or highway, the two companies shall not be required, wholly to take those lands or any part of the surface thereof, or any cellar, vault, or any other construction therein or thereunder held or connected with any house in any such street, road, or highway, but the two companies may appropriate and use the sub-soil and undersurface of any such roadway or footway, and if need be they may purchase, take, and use, and the owners of and other persons interested in any such vault, cellar, or arches shall sell, the same for the purposes of the railways, new street, and works, or any of them; and the purchase of any such cellar, vault, or construction shall not in any case be deemed the purchase of a part of a house or other building, or manufactory within section 92 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845."

Section 17.—"Nothing contained in the section of this Act with respect to underpinning or otherwise strengthening houses near the railways, or in the section of this Act authorizing the two companies to acquire easements only under roads, &c., and purchase cellars, &c., nor any dealing with the lands in pursuance of those sections, or either of them, shall relieve the two companies from the liability to compensation under the 68th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, or under any other Act."

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By the Metropolitan Railway Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. xxv.), s. 5, the plaintiff company alone were authorized, subject to such of the provisions of the Act 42 & 43 Vict. c. cci. as should be applicable, to make a certain part of the projected railway No. 1 above mentioned, and such part was described in the deposited plans as passing across or under a public street or highway, consisting both of foot and roadway, known as the Crescent, Minories, in the City of London.

The plaintiff company proceeded to make the said railway, and in course thereof, and in the proper exercise of their powers under the Act 42 & 43 Vict. c. cci. above stated, and during construction, disturbed the surface, and entered, appropriated, and used the surface, subsoil, and undersurface of so much of the said public street or highway as was necessary for the due construction of the said railway, and after removing the same they duly made their line below and across the said street or highway in the space thus created in the manner hereinafter described. The plaintiff company did not purchase nor, except for the purpose of and whilst making the arched tunnel or way as hereinafter mentioned, take or use any portion of the surface of the said street or highway, nor did they purchase, take, or use any cellar, vault, or other construction therein or hereunder held or connected with any house in the said street or highway. The portion of the plaintiff's railway passing under the said street or highway occupies solely the position of the subsoil removed for the purpose of its construction. The said railway was completed and opened for traffic upon the 25th of September, 1882, and has since been used by the plaintiff company. The said railway was constructed through the said land by entering into possession of the surface for the purposes of and during construction, and then by a system known as the "cut and cover" system—viz., the cutting or excavating the soil and by arching or building an arch in brickwork of a thickness of 4 to 5 ft. over the said excavation or cutting to enclose the company's railway, which arched tunnel or railway is about 28 ft. wide and 6 ft. high. The said arch is then covered with soil. The foundation or abutment of the said arched brickwork is permanently built in the soil. The company have entered into a contract for letting the use of the railway to a firm of advertisement contractors, without excepting parts of the railway which lie under the streets or highways. The company also affix lamps, notice boards, and other fixtures thereto. The company have laid mains for the supply of gas and water (but for the purposes of their railway only) in the said arched railway, and under the soil thereof; sleepers and rails have also been laid by them throughout the said arched railway on the surface of the soil at the bottom of the same.

The plaintiff company do not pay, and never have paid or agreed to pay, any rent, or any other sum of money, whether by way of compensation under the Lands Clauses Act, or otherwise, for or in respect of the entry upon, appropriation, use, and removal of the subsoil of the said street or highway as aforesaid, or in respect of the occupation by their line and works of the space thus created, or in respect of the user thereof for the purposes of their undertaking, or otherwise in respect of the passage or working of their railway under the said street or highway.

The plaintiff company do not receive any tolls or yearly profits in respect of the portion of their railway under the said street or highway otherwise than by means of the fares paid to them for the carriage of passengers and goods in the trains of the company passing over the same. The said railway has never been nor is it now worked at a profit.

On the 13th of December, 1882, the assessors for the land tax acting under the statutes 38 Geo. 3, c. 5 and 38 Geo. 3, c. 60 for the division of the City of London, by their certificate of assessment, assessed the plaintiff company at £3 6s. 8d. in respect of the portion of their railway underneath the street or highway above mentioned.

The plaintiff company refused payment of the said assessment, and, under protest, appealed from the said assessment to the commissioners, who dismissed the appeal. The defendant Barton thereupon, acting under the authority of the commissioners, distrained in respect of the said assessment by seizing certain of the goods of the plaintiff company upon the said portion of their line. The plaintiff company then brought this action against the commissioners and Barton, claiming damages for wrongful entry upon their premises, and wrongful seizure of their goods, and the parties agreed to state the questions of law arising in the said action in the form of this case in accordance with order 34 of the Rules of Court, 1883.

The question for the opinion of the court was: Whether the plaintiff company are liable to be assessed towards the payment of land tax in respect of the portion of their railway described in the said assessment under the circumstances set forth?

Balfour Browne, Q.C. (Lawson Walton, Q.C., with him), for the plaintiffs.—We admit that where we have purchased land we are assessable, but here we have no interest in the soil which can be brought under any of the words of section 1 of the Land Tax Act. Our takings for the carriage of passengers are not "tolls," and as to "profits," the case states that we have made none. The word "hereditaments" only sums up the preceding expressions. The company have no greater rights in the land occupied by the tunnel than a waterworks company have in the land occupied by their pipes, and they are therefore not assessable: Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Bowley, 17 Q. B. 358.

They also referred to Vauxhall Bridge Co. v. Sawyer, 6 Ex. 504; and Charing Cross Bridge Co. v. Mitchell, 3 W. R. 182, 378, 4 E. & B. 549.

Sir Horace Davey, Q.C. (Scrutton with him), for the defendants.—The decision in the waterworks case went upon the view taken by the court that the pipe was a mere chattel. But here the brick tunnel is a part of the soil for every purpose, and the company have a perpetual right in it which is assessable: Reg. v. East London Waterworks Co., 18 Q. B. 705, at p. 716; Waterloo Bridge Co. v. Cull, 7 W. R. 87, 1 E. & E. 213, at p. 242. It is a right which partakes of the characters of a corporeal and of an incorporeal hereditament, and is created by the company's Act. Such a right is covered by the word "hereditaments" in the Land Tax Act.

Balfour Browne, Q.C., in reply, cited Metropolitan Board of Works v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 17 W. R. 416, L. R. 4 C. P. 192.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 14.—VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—The question in this case is whether the Metropolitan Railway Co. are liable to be assessed towards the payment of land tax in respect of the portion of their railway described in the assessment under the circumstances set forth in the case. The validity of the present assessment depends on the 4th section of the statute 38 Geo.

3, c. 5, whereby it is enacted that all bodies corporate having or holding any lands and tenements shall be charged to the land tax. The first question is, therefore, do the railway company have or hold any lands or hereditaments by reason of their appropriation and user, under the powers of the special Act, of the subsoil and undersurface of the roadway?

It appears by section 17 of the special Act that what the company acquire by this appropriation and user is an easement only under the road. Now it seems to me that, according to the judgment of Lord Campbell in Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Bowley, an easement is not a hereditament within the meaning of 38 Geo. 3, c. 5. It is quite true that in the Chelsea Waterworks case the easement was very different in many respects from the easement in the present case, but Lord Campbell in his judgment does not deal with the particular easement conferred by the special Act on the water company, but with easements generally. He seems to me to say that the Land Tax Acts, in speaking of lands and hereditaments, contemplate property to be let by a landlord to a tenant, and goes on to say that the company are not the owners of the land where the pipes lie, nor are they the tenants of the land. It is to be observed that Lord Campbell is here dealing with the attempt to assess the water company as occupiers of land by reason of their user of the land under their easements, and he reads section 4 as dealing first with manors, messuages, lands, and tenements, and then with hereditaments of what nature or kind soever they be—i.e., hereditaments other than land—which has already been dealt with in the former part of the section—e.g., tolls granted by an Act of Parliament: see Charing Cross Bridge Co. v. Mitchell. And when, in a former part of his judgment, Lord Campbell speaks of the right of the water company as a right "in the nature of an easement, and neither land nor hereditament," he did not, as Sir Horace Davey in his argument suggested, speak in ignorance that an easement in gross was or might be a hereditament, but merely asserted that an easement was not land within the former part of the section, or a hereditament within the latter part. It seems to me that Lord Campbell's construction of the section is right, because if the catalogue is looked at beginning "and also all quarries, mines," &c., it is plain that these words are introduced into the section to prevent in the enumerated cases any argument that the taxation of the mine would involve a double land tax on the same piece of land; whereas, if the word "hereditaments" is intended to cover any possible grant of an assignable right to use land—e.g., of a mining sett, or of the right to enter and work mines within a given area and take away the minerals there found—the enumeration of mines in the catalogue would have been unnecessary. The same argument seems to me to apply even if, disregarding the natural meaning of the words of the 16th and 17th sections of the company's special Act, one treats the right of the company as a right to the underground land itself, because the land is primâ facie assessable to the land tax in respect of the surface, and one would, if one held the underground land assessable, be imposing a double tax on land in a case not falling within the enumeration in the section. In my opinion, however, no part of the land has passed to the company, and quâcunque viâ I think that the plaintiff company are not liable to be assessed to the land tax.

CAVE, J.—In this case I am of opinion that our judgment should be for the defendants. The question is whether the plaintiff company is liable for land tax on a part of their line constructed under a public road under the authority of their Act. The Act gives them power to purchase, take, and use land for a tunnel under private property, and also to appropriate and use the land in question, which is under a street, for the same purpose. The plaintiffs contend that their Act gives them an easement only, through the land in question, and that, on the authority of Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Bowley, they are not liable to pay land tax on such an easement. I am of opinion, however, that the effect of the Act is to give them a legal interest as owners of so much of the soil under the road as is required for the formation of the tunnel. It is admitted that they are liable for land tax in respect of so much of their line as passes under land the surface of which is occupied by private individuals, and I think the Act gives them the same interest in the tunnel under the road as they have in the other parts of the tunnel. I cannot see what rights there are which are reserved to the owner of the soil under the roadway, and which are taken away from the owners of the soil under which the other portions of the railway are made. Ownership is a convenient name for a bundle of undefined rights comprising all the rights which a subject may exercise over land. When these rights are separated and divided among different persons, the person who has some special right allotted to him is said to have an easement, while the person who retains the residue of the bundle of rights is said to be the owner of the land subject to the easement. In this case, what rights has the owner of the soil under the roadway over the brick tunnel and the space therein included? I am unable to see that he has any. He could not, I think, use the tunnel for any purpose, whether consistent or inconsistent with the use of it as a railway. He could not, I think, get access to the interior of the tunnel by boring through the wall from his adjoining land, nor, when he had so bored, could he let the use of the inside of the wall, for instance, to other people for the purpose of affixing advertisements to the wall of the tunnel, although such a user might be consistent with the use of the tunnel by the railway company for the purpose of passing their trains through it. It is true that if minerals were discovered under the tunnel he might, subject to the obligation of not letting down the roadway, work and get those minerals if the railway company, on proper notice being given them, refused to purchase the minerals, but that right the owners of the subsoil enjoy with respect to every part of the company's line. If the company elected to buy the minerals, they would become the owners of them, and it would be a strange position if they could become the owners of the minerals which supported the tunnel and yet not the owners of the tunnel supported.

Counsel for the plaintiffs relied mainly on the language of section 17 of the company's Act, 1879, in which the section authorizing the company to appropriate and use the subsoil and undersurface of any roadway is spoken of as the section authorizing the company to acquire easements only under roads, &c. Now the right in question is certainly not an easement in the strict sense of that term, and as I think that the Legislature intended to give the company an exclusive right to the use of the tunnel, the word easement must be taken to refer to the kind of user by the company which the Legislature had mainly in contemplation, and not to qualify the right of the company to an exclusive user. Even assuming that the company has an easement only through the tunnel and nothing more, the case of Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Bowley is distinguishable, for the court there held that under the peculiar phraseology of that Act the company had no legal interest in the soil in which their pipes were laid (see per Lord Campbell in Reg. v. East London Waterworks Co., 18 Q. B. 705, at

p. 716), and even so they found a difficulty in distinguishing the cases in which it has been held that water companies are rateable to the relief of the poor as occupiers of the soil in which their pipes are laid. Moreover, in Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Bowley the court referred to the inapplicability of the clauses for the redemption of the land tax to an occupation which they regarded as essentially of a temporary character. Here no such difficulty exists, as the tunnel is of a permanent character, and the possibility that it might cease to be used for railway purposes would only affect its value for the purposes of contribution to the share of the land tax apportioned on the parish in which it exists. In Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Bowley the right possessed by the company was said by the court to be a right in the nature of an easement, and apparently they regarded it as less than an easement, or, as Lord Campbell said in Reg. v. East London Waterworks Co., it was a right giving the company "no interest in the land." Here the right, if it is to be said to be in the nature of an easement, seems to be greater than an easement, as giving the company more extensive rights of user by themselves, and of interference with the user by the owner of the surrounding land, than a mere easement would give. Moreover, the court in Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Bowley nowhere laid it down that an easement is not a hereditament under the Act, but only that the right there given was of such a temporary character as not to amount to an interest in the land. In this case I come to the conclusion that the company are assessable to the land tax, on the ground that their Act gives them something which, however it may be described popularly, cannot in law be distinguished from the ownership of the soil which is occupied by their tunnel, and, consequently, that the ratio decidendi of the Chelsea Waterworks case does not apply.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J., as junior judge, withdrew his judgment, and judgment was given for the defendants.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Fowler, Perks, Hopkinson, & Co.

Solicitor for the defendants, H. R. T. Alexander.

Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith and Grantham, JJ.) April 14.

FLETCHER v. FIELDS. (a.)

Metropolis—Street traffic—Unloading coke during prohibited hours—Traffic Regulation (Metropolis) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 134), s. 15.

Section 15 of the Traffic Regulation (Metropolis) Act, 1867, prohibits the loading or unloading of coal on or across any footway during certain hours.

Held, that a person who had unloaded coke on a footway during the prohibited hours was not guilty of an offence under this section.

Special case stated by a metropolitan police magistrate.

The appellant was a carman employed by the Gas Light and Coke Co., and it was proved before the magistrate that he had unloaded a quantity of coke on the footway betweeen the hours of 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. within the limits of the Traffic Regulation (Metropolis) Act, which provides as follows:—

Section 15: "Between the hours of ten o'clock in the morning and six o'clock in the evening no coal shall be loaded or unloaded on or across any footway within the special limits of this Act, and between the same hours and within the same limits no casks, whether empty or full (wine or spirits in cask excepted), shall be lowered or drawn up by means of ropes, chains, or other machinery passing across the footway or any part thereof. Any person doing any act in contravention of this section shall be liable for each offence to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings."

The magistrate convicted and fined the appellant, and stated this case for the opinion of the court, the question being whether the unloading of coke as distinguished from coal was an offence within the section.

Horace Avory, for the appellant.

T. E. Scrutton, for the respondent.

A. L. SMITH, J.—In this appeal the question is a very small one, and it turns upon the construction of section 15 of the Traffic Regulation (Metropolis) Act, 1867. Before considering that section I wish to refer to section 6, which provides that "no goods or other articles shall be allowed to rest on any footway or other part of a street within the general limits of this Act, or be otherwise allowed to cause obstruction or inconvenience to the passage of the public, for a longer time than may be absolutely necessary for loading or unloading such goods or other articles."

By that section it is attempted to prevent obstruction in a street by any kind of goods, but when we come to section 15 it is clear that obstruction by two kinds of goods, and two only, is prohibited. During the hours mentioned no coal is to be loaded or unloaded, and no casks are to be lowered or drawn up. Now coke is a product of coal which was perfectly well known when the Act was passed, and it would have been quite easy to specify it in the section. Why are we to stretch the section so as to include another article which is not specified in it? It is admitted by counsel for the respondent that another product of coal—cinders—is not included, and I am of opinion that the magistrate was wrong in holding that the section applies to coke. This may appear to be a narrow view, but as a matter of construction it is clear.

GRANTHAM, J.—I am of the same opinion. The Legislature has prohibited two specific things, and if it had intended to include any other articles it would have said so. Coke is not coal, but is a manufactured product, viz., coal out of which the gas has been forced.

Conviction quashed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Bedford, Monier-Williams, & Robinson.

Solicitors for the respondent, Wontner & Sons.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div. (Cave, J.) July 3.

In re PROCTER. (a.)

Costs—Solicitor—Small bankruptcy—Costs out of the estate—Lower scale—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 112 —Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 55.

On application by the trustee in the bankruptcy for leave to disclaim a lease, the landlord appeared and opposed the application, but leave was given to the trustee to disclaim, with costs both of the landlord and of the trustee out of the estate. The costs of the trustee's solicitor were allowed at £21, but an objection to this sum was taken by the Board of Trade, on the ground that, the assets of the bankrupt being under £300, the costs ought to be allowed on the lower scale, under rule 112 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1886.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by C. F. MORRELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that rule 112 applied, and that the solicitor was only entitled to three-fifths of the ordinary charges.

Reference by the taxing master on a review of the taxation of solicitor's bill of costs.

Application was made by the trustee in the bankruptcy under section 55 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, for leave to disclaim a lease.

The landlord appeared and opposed the application, but leave was given to the trustee to disclaim, the costs of the landlord and the trustee being allowed out of the estate.

The costs of the landlord were taxed by the county court registrar at £5 5s., and no objection was raised in respect of them, but a question was raised as to the costs of the solicitor for the trustee, which were allowed at £21.

The assets of the bankrupt were certified to be under £300, and a review of the taxation by a taxing master of the High Court was required by the Board of Trade, it being contended that, under such circumstances, the costs of the solicitor ought to be allowed on the lower scale, under rule 112 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, which provides that "where the estimated assets of the debtor do not exceed the sum of three hundred pounds, a lower scale of solicitor's costs shall be allowed in all proceedings under the Act in which costs are payable out of the estate, namely, three-fifths of the charges ordinarily allowed, disbursements being added."

The taxing master was of the contrary opinion, that rule 112 did not apply by reason of the fact that, although the costs were costs of proceedings under the Act, and were payable out of the estate, yet the court had a discretion to refuse to allow the trustee his costs out of the estate, although it might be a discretion which would only be exercised on very rare occasions.

At the request of the Board of Trade, and with the consent of all parties, the question was now referred to the bankruptcy judge for decision.

Muir Mackenzie, for the Board of Trade.—The proceeding here was clearly a proceeding under the Act. The trustee applied for leave to disclaim and get rid of the liability under a lease. The object of the trustee's application was to free the bankrupt and his estate and himself from liability. The costs are payable out of the estate, but the taxing master appears to have thought that rule 112 does not apply, inasmuch as the court has a discretion to refuse the trustee his costs out of the estate—as, for instance, if he had neglected his duty. The taxing master has really misapprehended the two previous decisions on this rule: Ex parte Board of Trade, In re Parfitt, 37 W. R. 751, 23 Q. B. D. 40; Ex parte Jaynes, In re Dowson, 36 W. R. 864, 21 Q. B. D. 417.

Stevenson, for the trustee.—Where an application comes before the judge in the form of an opposed motion, and he makes an order on the motion and gives costs, the judge having exercised his discretion, the costs are not payable under the Act, but are payable under the order. That is the case here, and rule 112 does not apply.

CAVE, J.—I am of opinion that the contention of the Board of Trade is the right one. The rule provides that where the estimated assets of the debtor do not exceed the sum of £300, a lower scale of solicitor's costs shall be allowed in all proceedings under the Act in which costs are payable out of the estate, namely, three-fifths of the ordinary charges. Now it seems to me that this case fulfils all these provisions. This was a proceeding under the Act, rendered necessary and contemplated by the Act. The costs of that proceeding would be payable out of the estate and the solicitor employed would look to the estate for his costs. The case of In re Dowson is not applicable, because it dealt with the costs of a third party. The case of In re Parfitt dealt with conveyancing costs, and not with costs contemplated by the scale of solicitors' costs which is set out by the rules. Here we have a case which comes entirely within the language of the rule. I have no doubt the rule was intended to apply to such a case as this, and the solicitor must be content with three-fifths.

Order accordingly.

Solicitor for the Board of Trade, The Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

Solicitors for the trustee, Clinton & Co.

Q. B. Div. (Cave and Charles, JJ.) May 27.

Ex parte POWELL.
In re POWELL. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Act of bankruptcy—Non-compliance with bankruptcy notice—Payment of judgment debt—Right of another creditor to present petition—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g).

The act of bankruptcy committed by a debtor by reason of his non-compliance with the requirements of a bankruptcy notice duly served on him under section 4, sub-section 1 (g), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, is not put an end to by payment of the judgment debt; but a bankruptcy petition founded on that act of bankruptcy may be presented by another creditor, although the debt of the creditor by whom the bankruptcy notice was served has been paid.

Ex parte Wier, In re Wier, 19 W. R. 1042, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 875, has no application to an act of bankruptcy committed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Appeal from a receiving order made against the debtor by the registrar of the Swindon County Court.

On the 29th of January, 1891, a bankruptcy notice was served upon the debtor by Messrs. Brown, Gould, & Co., judgment creditors, with the requirements of which the debtor did not comply, and on the 4th of March, 1891, a bankruptcy petition was presented against him by Messrs. Brown, Gould, & Co.

On the same day another petition was presented against the debtor by the respondents to the present appeal, founded on the act of bankruptcy committed by the debtor by reason of his non-compliance with the bankruptcy notice served on him by Messrs. Brown, Gould, & Co.

The debt of Messrs. Brown, Gould, & Co. was subsequently paid in full, and on the 13th of April, 1891, their petition was dismissed, but on the 20th of April, 1891, a receiving order was made against the debtor on the petition of the present respondents.

The debtor appealed.

Radcliffe, for the debtor.—The only ground of the appeal is that prior to the receiving order the debt in respect of which the bankruptcy notice was served had been extinguished by payment. The receiving order was made a week after the act of bankruptcy had been satisfied. It must be admitted that since the decision in Ex parte Dearle, In re Hastings, 33 W. R. 440, 14 Q. B. D. 184, any creditor can present a petition on a bankruptcy notice served by another creditor. But when the judgment debt is satisfied the act of bankruptcy committed by the failure to comply with the notice is gone, and no person can afterwards proceed upon it. The case comes within the decision in Ex parte Wier, In re Wier, 19 W. R. 1042, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 875, where it was laid down that the act of bankruptcy by non-payment on a debtor's summons under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, might be purged by payment before adjudication.

(a.) Reported by C. F. MORRELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

F. C. Willis, for the petitioning creditors.—No one could take advantage of a debtor's summons as an act of bankruptcy except the creditor who issued it. It was a personal act of bankruptcy. Any creditor can take advantage of a bankruptcy notice, and that makes all the difference.

CAVE, J.—I am of opinion that the contention of the respondents is correct, and that the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, has made such a difference in the position of a debtor who has committed an act of bankruptcy by the non-compliance with a bankruptcy notice as to make the rule laid down in Ex parte Wier inapplicable. For the first time the Act of 1883 has made this an act of bankruptcy available by any creditor, and, that being so, the moment the act of bankruptcy arises for any creditor to present a petition, how can it be that that act of bankruptcy alone, of all those specified in section 4 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, can be put an end to by the debtor going and paying the creditor issuing the summons? So long as that creditor who issued a judgment summons could alone found a petition upon it, the fact that he had received payment subsequent to the time limited in the summons was held to do away with the act of bankruptcy. The act of bankruptcy enured for the benefit of that creditor only, and that creditor having taken the money from the debtor it would be wrong to say that he could do that and yet preserve his right to make the man a bankrupt. But when any creditor can present a petition the matter stands on an entirely different footing.

CHARLES, J.—I am of the same opinion. I do not think that the case of Ex parte Wier has any application to an act of bankruptcy committed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. It has been decided under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, that where the act of bankruptcy is the failure to comply with the requirements of a bankruptcy notice that act of bankruptcy can be taken advantage of by any creditor. That makes all the difference between the act of bankruptcy now and the act of bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, by failing to comply with a debtor's summons.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, F. Ridley, for A. W. Boodle, Swindon.

Solicitors for the respondents, Hamlin, Grammer, & Hamlin, for C. Dunn, Leeds.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). March 5.

BANK OF ENGLAND v. VAGLIANO BROTHERS. (a.)

Bill of exchange—Banker—Forgery of name of payee—Negligence—Payee "a fictitious or non-existing person"—Knowledge of acceptor—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 7, sub-section 3.

A clerk in the service of the respondents forged numerous bills to a large amount, purporting to be drawn upon the respondents by one of their correspondents to the order of another, and he also forged letters of advice as to these bills. The respondents accepted these bills, payable at the appellants' bank, and the clerk then forged the indorsement of the person named as payee, and received payment in cash across the counter to himself.

Held, by Lord Halsbury, L.C., and Lords Watson, Herschell, Macnaghten, and Morris (Lords Bramwell and Field dissenting), that the payee was "a fictitious or non-existing person" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 3, of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, so as to make the bills payable to bearer, and that, consequently, the appellants were entitled to debit the respondents with the amount of the bills.

Also by Lord Halsbury, L.C., and by the Earl of Selborne and Lords Watson and Macnaghten (Lords Bramwell and Field dissenting), because of the conduct of the parties.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (37 W. R. 640, 23 Q. B. D. 243) reversed.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal (Cotton, Lindley, Bowen, Fry, and Lopes, L.JJ., Lord Esher, M.R., dissenting), affirming a judgment of Charles, J., in favour of the respondents, and reported 37 W. R. 640, 23 Q. B. D. 243. The facts are set out in the report in the court below. The arguments sufficiently appear in the judgments.

Sir R. Webster, A.G., and H. D. Greene, Q.C. (E. H. Pollard and R. M. Bray with them), for the appellants.

Sir Charles Russell, Q.C., and Finlay, Q.C. (Hollams with them), for the respondents.

The following cases were referred to:—Robarts v. Tucker, L. R. 16 Q. B. 560; Stone v. Freeland, 1 H. Bl. 316n; Bank of Ireland v. Evans, 3 W. R. 573, 5 H. L. Cas. 389, 408, 413; Swan v. North British Australasian Co., 11 W. R. 862, 2 H. & C. 175; Baxendale v. Bennett, 26 W. R. 899, 3 Q. B. D. 525; Arnold v. Cheque Bank, 24 W. R. 759, 1 C. P. D. 578; Young v. Grote, 4 Bing. 253; Halifax Union v. Wheelwright, 23 W. R. 704, L. R. 10 Ex. 183; Orr v. Union Bank of Scotland, 1 Macq. 513, 3 W. R. C. L. Dig. 143; Ireland v. Livingston, L. R. 5 H. L. 395; Gibson v. Hunter, 2 H. Bl. 288; Collis v. Emett, 1 H. Bl. 313; Gibson v. Minet, 1 H. Bl. 569, 589; Mead v. Young, 4 T. R. 28; Cooper v. Meyer, 10 B. & C. 468; London and South-Western Bank v. Wentworth, 28 W. R. 516, 5 Ex. D. 96; Bennett v. Farnell, 1 Camp. 130, 133n, 180c; Price v. Neale, 3 Burr. 1354; Phillips v. Im Thurn, 14 W. R. 653, 18 C. B. N. S. 400, L. R. 1 C. P. 463; Merchants of the Staple of England v. Bank of England, 21 Q. B. D. 160, 36 W. R. Dig. 78.

The House took time for consideration.

March 5.—Lord HALSBURY, L.C.—The simple question in this case is whether the plaintiffs' bankers have paid away the plaintiffs' money under such circumstances as enable the plaintiffs to refuse to acknowledge the payments as made on their behalf. Each of the parties is innocent of any wilful default. They are both free from any suspicion of bad faith; but the banker has paid away and placed to the debit of his customer a sum of £71,500, while the customer was not conscious of, and certainly never intended to authorize, the payment of that sum on his behalf.

(a.) Reported by CHARLES H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The authority to pay, which was relied upon by the bankers as justifying the payments, was written documents in the form of bills of exchange, and, though they were not really bills of exchange at all, it is important to bear in mind what a real bill of exchange would import to the mind of a person to whom it was sent for payment.

Now, apart from the particular machinery by which this transaction was effected, it will not be denied that a principal who has misled his agent into doing something on his behalf which the agent has honestly done, would not be entitled to claim against the agent in respect of the act so done; and, upon this branch of the case, the question is whether the agent was misled into doing the act by the default of the principal.

I will treat the transaction, for the sake of clearness, as if it were a single payment. Could it be doubted that if the two parties met, and by word of mouth the customer had said to his banker, "There is a bill coming due to-morrow of such and such an amount; it is drawn on me by a customer of mine, named Vucina, and will be presented for payment at your bank to-morrow," that such a statement was calculated to put the banker off his guard, and be likely to induce him to act as he did act. Does it make any difference that the words were not spoken, but upon its face the document, reaching the banker's hands by the act of the customer—in which phrase I include the course of Vagliano's business—said this as plainly as if the words had been spoken? Vucina, in fact, had not drawn any such bill. There was no transaction between Vagliano and Vucina such as the instrument in question purported to effect, and yet this was the written statement which, upon the face of the instrument, Vagliano made to the bank.

Further, by a separate and independent writing, Vagliano told the bank that such a bill of exchange for such an amount was becoming due, and would have to be paid out of his account. No such bill of exchange existed, although a false document corresponding in all particulars was accredited by Vagliano in writing his acceptance upon it.

In estimating the effect upon an agent's mind, it must of course be remembered that, though I have here for clearness spoken of it as a single transaction, it is a transaction repeated forty-three times, and spread over a considerable period. The false documents were paid, duly debited to the customer, and duly entered in his pass-book, and, so far as the banker could know or conjecture, brought to his knowledge on every occasion upon which the payment was made and the bills returned. Further, on each occasion when these false documents were, by what I have called the act of the customer, permitted to reach the bank for payment, they were accompanied with a considerable number of other genuine bills of exchange, many of them drawn by Vucina, and regularly entered in the notice of bills about to become due, together with the false documents in question.

It seems to me impossible to dispute that this was, in fact, a misleading of the bankers. I pass by for the moment the question whose default it was, for the purpose of considering the proposition which has found favour with one of your lordships, and which I will not dispute, that the carelessness of the customer, or neglect of the customer to take precautions unconnected with the act itself, cannot be put forward by the banker as justifying his own default. In order to make the cases of The Merchants of the Staple of England v. Bank of England, and Bank of Ireland v. Evans authorities in this case it would be necessary to assume that the plaintiffs in those cases had, by some voluntary act of their own, given credit and the appearance of genuineness to the particular powers of attorney which were forged in those cases, and, if they had, I very much doubt whether the decision would have been what it was; but no such fact appeared; all the parties, whose negligence was relied on had done, was to leave their seal carelessly in the custody of the person who abused his trust. These decisions, therefore, do not seem to me to touch this case.

But how can it be said in this case that the default is unconnected with the act? The very thing which the banker does is induced by the fault of the customer. Was not the customer bound to know the genuineness of Vucina's draft? Was not the customer bound to know whether there was any real transaction between himself and Vucina effected by the instrument in question? Was not the customer bound to know the contents of his own pass-book? Was not the customer bound to know the state of his account with Vucina? It certainly is very strange that it should be suggested that, without any responsibility on his part, he should be entitled to accredit forty-three documents to his bankers as genuine bills when he had the means of knowledge I have indicated that no one of them was a bill of exchange at all, or represented any transaction between Vucina and himself.

The bankers paid upon these documents, and they paid a person who was not entitled to receive the money. There was no person entitled to receive it. The fact that it reached their hands as representing a mercantile transaction in which somebody was to be paid was itself a misleading of them; and that it did reach their hands purporting to represent such a transaction arose from the mode in which Mr. Vagliano's business was conducted by those responsible for it.

I have designedly avoided calling these documents bills of exchange. They were nothing of the sort. But if they had got into the hands of an innocent owner for value without notice, Vagliano would undoubtedly have been responsible upon them, for he had given them a genuineness as against himself by accepting them.

Now, when it is insisted that the bankers are responsible, because they did not pay the person indicated as payee, one is induced to inquire whether Mr. Vagliano or any other merchant would have expected that any inquiry should be made as to the genuineness of Petridi's signature. Suppose they had been genuine signatures of Petridi, and the bills had been dishonoured while the bankers were making inquiries, would not Mr. Vagliano have had grave ground for complaint against the bankers who had allowed his credit to be thus disturbed? I think each of the parties to the transaction must be taken to have known the ordinary course of mercantile affairs, and it is manifest that no banker could hesitate to pay such bills as came to him, so accredited as they were by Mr. Vagliano's acceptance, without throwing the whole mercantile world into confusion.

I am not intending to throw any doubt upon the propriety of the decision in Robarts v. Tucker, nor am I prepared to assent to the proposition that it is a harsh decision. A customer tells his banker to pay a particular person; the banker pays someone else, and it would seem to follow as a perfectly just result that the banker should be called upon to make good the amount he has so erroneously paid. But what relations has such decision to a case where a thing which bears the form and semblance of a known commercial document, like a bill of exchange, gets, by the act of the customer, into the hands of the banker, where there is no real drawer, no real transaction between himself and the supposed drawer, and where, as a matter of fact, there is no person who, in the proper and ordinary sense of the word, is a payee at all?

It seems to me that if all these circumstances, acting upon and inducing the bankers to make the payments they did make, are acts which are the fault of the customer, it is the customer, and not the banker, who ought to bear the loss. I think, under these circumstances, the banker did what was usual and customary with bankers, and what both customer and banker knew to be usual and customary with bankers, as far as the payment, without inquiry as to the genuineness of the indorsement by Petridi & Co., was concerned. But I propose to deal separately with the alleged negligence of the bankers, or, at all events, the unusual course pursued by the bankers, in cashing these bills across the counter and paying to the person presenting the document for payment without inquiry.

I do not know what is the usual course among bankers, and I should doubt whether, in such a matter, it would be possible to affirm that any particular course was either usual or unusual, in the sense that there is some particular course to be pursued when circumstances occur necessarily giving rise to suspicion. I can well imagine that, on a person presenting himself, whose appearance and demeanour was calculated to raise a suspicion that he was not likely to be entrusted with a valuable document, for which he was to receive payment in cash, I should think it would be extremely probable that, whether the document were a cheque payable to bearer for a large amount, or a bill, the counter-clerk and banker alike would hesitate very much before making payment. However, I will assume the course pursued in this case to be somewhat unusual, and that this is proved by the bankers themselves, though the counter-clerk gives a different reason why the clerk called the attention of their immediate superior to the circumstances, and he, in his turn, called the attention of Mr. Vagliano's representative. In doing so, it appears to me to have relieved the bankers from any accusation of having hastily or carelessly paid these bills. What could the bankers know of the particular transactions of Messrs. Vagliano? But Mr. Vagliano, when it was communicated to him, or to his representative, would be surely the best person to judge whether there was anything calculated to give rise to suspicion in the facts to which I have referred.

It has been sought to minimize the effect of that communication to Mr. Vagliano's representative, first, by treating him as a clerk to whom such a communication ought not to have been made, and, secondly, by suggesting that Mr. Ziffo possibly indicated that he was a person not fit to be trusted, since he took a very strange view of what was or was not calculated to cause suspicion and enforce inquiry as to these bills. But what had the bankers to do with Mr. Ziffo's capacity for business? He was Mr. Vagliano's confidential clerk, duly accredited as such. After one or two of the bills had been presented and paid in the manner I have referred to, Mr. Disney thinks it right to call the attention of Mr. Ziffo to the fact, and Mr. Ziffo replies to the information that they are presented over the counter and invariably taken in bank notes: "I suppose if they are properly advised you must pay them." Here is information given of the very fact relied on to the confidential representative of Mr. Vagliano, and it is suggested to be negligence in the bank that, after receiving the answer I refer to, they continued to pay these bills when properly advised by Mr. Vagliano himself.

I must add here that I think that the witness truly explained his inadvertent use of the word "indorsed" and meant to say "advised." Now, it appears to me that whatever case might be suggested against the bank is completely answered by the bank having communicated these facts to a person occupying such a position in Mr. Vagliano's house, and that his answer was such as to allay any suspicion or uneasiness on the part of the bank.

I have not stopped to examine minutely the contrast between Mr. Ziffo's evidence and that of the bank official, Mr. Disney, because, if one comes to examine it carefully, there is no real contradiction. One witness is positive as to communications actually made, and the other only meets that positive assertion by alleging a want of memory of any such communication.

One other point has been made at your lordships' bar, but I think under circumstances which do not entitle it to consideration. It is said that the course of post ought to have been known to the bankers, and that the date of the indorsements ought of itself to have raised suspicion. Possibly if there was evidence sufficient to prove exactly what the facts are as to the course of post (and notwithstanding the evidence of one witness, I am not satisfied that we have the facts accurately as to the course of post), a serious doubt might arise, but it is enough to say for the purposes of this case that that point appears neither to have been pressed nor argued at a time when, by proper evidence, the matter could have been left beyond doubt, and the circumstances of excuse for not observing the dates, if such excuses existed, could have been properly determined. I can find no evidence that that point was really pressed. It is not noticed in any of the judgments, and though to my mind it is a singular argument coming from the mouth of Mr. Vagliano, whose suspicion one would have thought would have been aroused by the dates found on the documents afterwards appearing, it is enough for me to say that I decline to consider a topic which has been neither really argued nor properly fortified by evidence as a material circumstance to consider in this case.

I should be content to rest my judgment here and to express my opinion that for these reasons the judgment of the court below should be reversed, although I regret to say that on this branch of the case my view is at variance with that of all the learned judges who have hitherto treated this question.

I have hesitated long before I was able to acquiesce in the view of my noble friend Lord Herschell and that of the Master of the Rolls, that the same conclusion could be arrived at by a consideration of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882.

One difficulty I have had in the determination of that question is in applying to the instruments with which I have been dealing an enactment which deals with bills of exchange. For reasons I have already given, it seems to me difficult to treat them as bills of exchange at all; but as against the person now insisting on their possessing the quality of such instruments, and remembering that it was his act by which they were put into circulation in that character, it does not seem unreasonable that, applying the doctrine of estoppel to him, one may consider whether as against him they may not possess qualities which, in their inception, they did not possess.

The 7th section, upon two of the sub-sections of which this question turns, commences thus:—"(1) Where a bill is not payable to bearer, the payee must be named or otherwise indicated therein with reasonable certainty." And the third sub-section, "(3)

Where the payee is a fictitious or non-existing person, the bill may be treated as payable to bearer."

Now, in the first instance, before dealing with the application of these sub-sections to the facts in debate, I must say that I cannot acquiesce in the view which the majority of the Court of Appeal appear to have entertained, that they were at liberty to import into that third sub-section that it was a condition of its application that the acceptor should be aware that the payee was a fictitious or non-existing person.

It seems to me that construing the statute by adding to it words which are neither found therein nor for which authority could be found in the language of the statute itself, is to sin against one of the most familiar rules of construction, and I am wholly unable to adopt the view that where a statute is expressly said to codify the law you are at liberty to go outside the code so created, because before the existence of that code another law prevailed.

To return to the construction of the language of the two sub-sections, for I think both should be read together, it seems to me that what the Legislature was enacting was in substance this:—That were a bill was not payable to bearer the person to whom payment was intended to be made was to be named or otherwise indicated upon the face of the instrument with reasonable certainty, but where there was no real payee the bill might be treated as payable to bearer.

The language which the Legislature has employed to express this law has been subjected to very minute verbal criticism. If the substance of the matter is looked at, and it is remembered that what the Legislature was dealing with was what was to appear upon the face of the instrument, and contemplated the case of there being no one to whom payment could properly be made, no person on the face of the instrument having any rights under the bill, no person, therefore, capable of giving a discharge to the acceptor for having paid at the demand of the drawer, it would seem that the reason of the thing would apply equally to a real person whose name was forged as to a person who had no existence.

In truth, if strictly construed, the words "fictitious person" are a contradiction. One may pretend there is a person when there is not. One may assume a character which does not belong to one, but to satisfy the word "fictitious" as applicable to a person, is assuming in one part of the proposition what is denied in the other. Some of the characters in Sir Walter Scott's novels may be fictitious in the sense that no persons so named ever lived; but if real names are taken, and events and conduct and character attributed by the writer to those real names, are the characters less "fictitious" because persons of those names identified with a totally different history and different qualities did, in point of fact, exist at one time?

One singular result of treating the section in the way that the Court of Appeal has adopted, would be that one must dive into the mind of the hypothetical forger to determine whether the character be fictitious or not; and this may be done, though it is not necessary to find the forger's intention from the language or anything that appears upon the face of the instrument itself, but you may judge from previous commercial transactions of the party who was likely to be meant as giving plausibility to the forgery. But if it can be alleged (as it can be here) that the forger selected a name which would give plausibility to his forgery, and be likely to deceive those into whose hands his forged instrument should come, that is not the name of a fictitious person, although that person had no power to deal with the bill, and was not in any respect the real payee, any more than if the name had been selected of a person, who had never been heard of or existed before; whereas, if it is pure imagination, then it is the name of a fictitious person.

I have come to the conclusion that, however expressed, the real meaning of the sub-section is to imply the unreality of any person who is named upon the face of the instrument as the payee of the bill. The statute itself uses the phrase "payee." That cannot mean in truth the payee, because by the hypothesis there is no payee, and, dealing as the statute was, with the form of the instrument, and enacting that if a name which appeared as that of the payee on the face of the instrument was the name of a fictitious person the bill might be treated as payable to bearer, it expressed in popular words, though perhaps not very felicitously chosen, its meaning accordingly.

For these reasons I am of opinion that on this ground also, the judgment of the court below was wrong and ought to be reversed, and I so move your lordships.

Lord SELBORNE.—If the bills in question in this case had been genuine, really signed by Vucina in favour of C. Petridi & Co., and if the indorsements only had been forged, the case would have been governed by Robarts v. Tucker. But the signatures of Vucina were forged; the use of the name of C. Petridi & Co. as payees was part of the fiction: they were not in any true sense payees, and the bills were, nevertheless, accredited by the plaintiffs to the bank as genuine, and as coming forward, like other genuine bills of Vucina, for payment in due course, on days specified in the plaintiffs' letters of advice; and their payment as such was expressly directed by the plaintiffs. When I speak of the plaintiffs' letters of advice, I do not forget that the effect of acceptances payable upon the face of the bills at the Bank of England might, perhaps, have been the same, but in this case there were both, and I think it unnecessary to consider whether the addition of the one form of direction to the other made any difference. If it did not, the effect of the letters of advice cannot on that account be less. This state of things appears to me to raise a question which was not decided in Robarts v. Tucker, or in any other case cited at the bar. It is (as Robarts v. Tucker was) a question between the plaintiffs as principals and the bank as their agent, and not between any parties to the bills.

If the plaintiffs misled the bank upon a material point, however innocently, and although they were themselves deceived by the fraud which had been committed, I think that they, and not the bank, ought to bear the loss which has been the consequence. Here there was never any real holder of these bills, by whom they could have been indorsed, or any outstanding liability from which a discharge was necessary. Your lordships have to deal with the case of an agent, not claiming any title to or interest in the bills, but instructed by his principal to pay them. It is convenient to speak of them as bills, but, properly speaking, they had not (though they seemed to have, and were represented by the plaintiffs as having) that character; they were accepted as such; but there was no real drawer, and no real payee, and they were never negotiated. It is not (as I understand) disputed that there might, as between banker and customer, be circumstances which would be an answer to the primâ facie case that the authority was only to pay to the order of the person named as payee upon the bill, and that the banker can only charge the customer with payments made pursuant to that authority. Negligence on the customer's part might be one of those circumstances: the fact that there was no real payee might be another; and I think that a representation made directly to the banker by the customer upon a material point, untrue in fact (though believed by the person who made it to be true), and on which the banker acted by paying money which he would not otherwise have paid, ought also to be an answer to that primâ facie case. If the bank acted upon such a representation in good faith, and according to the ordinary course of business, and a loss has, in consequence, occurred which would not have happened if the representation had been true, I think that is a loss which the customer, and not the bank, ought to bear.

I should be of that opinion on general principles; and the application of those principles is fortified, to my mind, in this particular case by the circumstances under which the forgeries were committed, and the facts that the plaintiffs had large dealings with Vucina going on at the same time with the forgeries, in the course of which they accepted many of his genuine bills, all which were in like manner accredited to and made payable at the bank, and that there were documents in the plaintiffs' possession (the true and forged letters of advice from Vucina, and the forged bills themselves, when returned by the bank) from which, if attention had been paid to them, the fraud might have been discovered in an early stage.

I do not see how it can be open to dispute that it was material to the bank to know whether these were genuine or forged bills; or (subject to the consideration of some matters which I postpone) that, in paying the bills, as they did, without inquiry into the genuineness of the indorsements (which for the present I assume to have been regular upon the face of them), the bank acted in good faith, and according to the usual, and practically necessary, course of business; or that, if the bills had really been Vucina's, and if C. Petridi & Co. had been real payees, no loss would have been incurred. If it were the duty or the practice of bankers, without special reasons for suspicion, to refuse or delay payment of foreign bills appearing on their face to be regular, and regularly advised for payment by their customers, until they could ascertain by inquiry the genuineness of every foreign indorsement, it must continually happen that the bills would not be paid at the proper time and place, and bonâ fide holders might treat them as dishonoured. It was admitted that it is not in the ordinary course of business to make such inquiries, and I should say that business could not go on if it were so. No doubt there is, in the ordinary course of business, the possible risk which occurred in Robarts v. Tucker, of a genuine bill being stolen and presented for payment with a forged indorsement. Between that case and one like the present there is this very substantial difference, that the acceptor in that case has not in any way contributed to mislead the bankers, and when there is a real bonâ fide payee, the acceptor remains liable to him; but if, when there is no such payee, the person who signs as drawer indorses the bill with the name of a pretended payee, there is no outstanding liability from which a discharge is needed for the acceptor's protection. The risk of a genuine bill being stolen and presented with a forged indorsement is one which, being of rare occurrence, and distributed over a large amount of business, bankers may be willing to run. But they are entitled to judge for themselves what risks they will run, and the customer is not, in my opinion, entitled to tell the banker (in effect) that the risk is an ordinary one, and when it turns out to be otherwise to put upon him another risk, which, if the truth had been known, the banker with his eyes open would not have undertaken. When, as in this case, the customer accredits the bills as genuine and as coming forward in due course against him for payment on certain days, the banker must, I think, be considered to undertake the risk incident to bills of that description, and no more. If this would be true of a single bill, much more of a series of bills of large amount, all successively authenticated to the banker in like manner by the customer who orders them to be paid. The judgment under appeal puts upon the bank a risk which it never was called upon, and never agreed, to undertake.

It seems to me also clear (as a matter of fact, and without reference to the question under the Bills of Exchange Act) that the Constantinople firm of C. Petridi & Co. were never in any true sense payees of these bills, and their genuine indorsements would never have appeared upon them without an additional fraud. The suggestions at the bar, as to conceivable ways in which such indorsements might have been obtained, were, in my judgment, irrelevant to the real facts, with reference to which, and not to merely imaginable possibilities, this case ought to be determined. In Stone v. Freeland and Cooper v. Meyer a real firm, Butler & Co., and real person, Woodman, were named as payees, but the courts did not hold that enough to make the firm or the person so named a real payee.

If the question were merely one of legal estoppel against the acceptor, it may be true that the estoppel would be only against denying the genuineness of the drawer's signature; or, if the acceptor knew that there was no real payee, against insisting that the bill must receive an indorsement, which he knew to be impossible. But there are authorities, relevant as far as general principles are concerned, which, even as between parties to a negotiable instrument, seem to me to go beyond legal estoppel. I cannot but think it an extension of that doctrine to hold (as was done in Cooper v. Meyer) that when the bill is payable to the drawer's order, the acceptor (because he is supposed to know the drawer's signature) is bound by the subseqent indorsement of the person who forged the signature as well as by that original signature. And I am not convinced that estoppel is a sufficient explanation of the cases in which the drawer of a cheque has been held bound by fraudulent alterations, for which the state of the paper afforded space. The drawer was ignorant of and could hardly be held bound to anticipate the subsequent fraud. But, if it were universally true that the liability of an acceptor, to a bonâ fide holder of a bill, in all such cases depends upon legal estoppel, I do not think it would follow that the discharge of a banker, or other agent employed by the acceptor to pay the bill, must depend, under similar circumstances, upon that principle only.

If in the present case the plaintiffs, instead of making their acceptances payable at the Bank of England, had directed (in the same terms) a managing clerk in their own office, ignorant of the fraud, to pay those acceptances, and to take, for that purpose, the necessary money from their cash box, and if the clerk so authorized had paid the bills, exactly as the Bank of England did (not, indeed, to Glyka himself, but to someone acting for him, and presenting them in any manner not irregular), I cannot doubt that the clerk, so acting in good faith, would have been exonerated. A banker undertakes to do what is in the proper course of a banker's business, and so far differs from an agent who is not a banker; but beyond this I see no principle for putting him in a worse position than any other agent.

In Bennett v. Farnell Lord Ellenborough held that when the payee was fictitious, and the acceptor did not know it, the bill was neither to order nor to bearer, but was completely void. If, in such a case, the acceptor had directed his bankers to pay the bill, and the bankers had paid it in good faith upon an indorsement regular upon its face, though fictitious in fact, the bankers would have been, in my judgment, entitled to credit in account for what they had so paid. Whatever might have been, before the Bills of Exchange Act of 1882, the materiality of the acceptor's knowledge or ignorance on such a point as between himself and a bonâ fide holder of the bill, I should not have thought it material as between him and his bankers paying the bill under such circumstances. I have come to this conclusion without resting my opinion upon the statute of 1882. Assuming the present case not to be expressly ruled by that statute, it is also (in my judgment) not ruled by any former authority. And I cannot but think that the statute, so far as it does rule certain other cases in pari materiâ and not well distinguished from this in principle, is as proper to be taken into account as any of the authorities which preceded it, as to the acceptor's knowledge or ignorance where there is not a real payee.

But it was insisted that in paying these bills as they did the bank deviated from the proper course of business, and ought to be held affected with notice that the indorsements were fraudulent. The first point relied upon for that purpose was that the bills, drawn as they were for large sums, were all presented and paid across the counter, and not through any bankers. This was admitted to be "unusual" in the evidence for the bank; but it was not, as I read the evidence, either admitted or otherwise proved that it was irregular or sufficient in itself to excite a suspicion that there was something wrong, although it was unusual in the sense of not often happening. No authority was produced to show that it was irregular according to the law merchant; and if not, and if the payments were bonâ fide made, without any actual suspicion on the part of the officers of the bank, I cannot think it enough to defeat their right to charge the plaintiffs with those payments, that they did not take a precaution not required by the law merchant, and on which they could not have insisted without the risk of the bills being treated by bonâ fide holders as dishonoured. In Robarts v. Tucker payment through a banker was no protection to the defendant.

Some of these bills were in fact referred by the counter-clerks of the bank, before payment, to Mr. Disney, the principal in the private drawing office of the bank; not (as I understand the evidence) because of any suspicion, but because they had received general instructions that any cheques or bills of large amount should be so referred. Mr. Disney (the truth of whose evidence I see no reason to doubt) thought that if the bill was advised (as it was) the counter-clerk must pay it; and Mr. Ziffo, the plaintiffs' outdoor manager, to whom (on his coming to the bank on other business in June, 1887) Mr. Disney mentioned the fact that such bills had been presented across the counter and paid in bank notes, expressed the same opinion. This happened when not more than four of the bills, amounting altogether to £3,000, had been presented and paid. When from time to time the plaintiffs' pass-book was sent to them, the bills then paid and debited in it against the plaintiffs were returned with it; and they remained from thenceforth in the plaintiffs' possession. It was apparent upon the face of them that all those bills had been paid across the counter; but no objection was taken by the plaintiffs on that or any other ground; and similar bills to a continually increasing, and ultimately very large amount, were afterwards from time to time advised and came forward and were paid in like manner. I cannot hold that these circumstances are sufficient to deprive the bank of any right which they would otherwise have a right to charge to payments to the plaintiffs' account.

The other point urged at your lordships' bar (but not apparently before either of the courts below) was that according to the statement of Mr. Kurz, the plaintiffs' deputy-manager, in cross-examination, the course of post between London and Constantinople was four days; and 19 out of the 43 forged bills paid by the bank purported to be indorsed in Constantinople on the third day before the date of acceptance in London. No question was put on that subject to any other witness; and of the dates appearing on the bills the plaintiffs also had notice when they were returned. One of these, of which the indorsement was on the third day before acceptance, was the fifth in the whole series. I think it would not be right in this state of the evidence, and upon a point which, though open upon the plaintiffs' pleading (in their reply), was for some reason not pressed on the courts below, to treat the bank as having had notice that the indorsements were not regular.

The judgments in the courts below, of the weight of which (as well as of the opinions agreeing with them, which I know some of your lordships to entertain) I am fully sensible, seem to have been addressed to two questions only—that of the proper construction and effect of section 7, sub-section 3, of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, and that of negligence on the plaintiffs' part. As to the Bills of Exchange Act, I am not myself satisfied that Charles, J., and the majority of the judges in the Court of Appeal were wrong in holding that the words of the statute, "where the payee is a fictitious or non-existing person," do not extend to the case of a real person falsely represented as payee upon a forged bill, though in principle the cases seem to me much the same. The difficulty to my mind arises out of the fact that the Legislature has here described "a person" as "fictitious or non-existing" instead of saying "where the payee is fictitious or non-existing," and it has been increased, rather than removed, by reference to other parts of the statute, particularly sections 5 (sub-section 2), 24, 41 (sub-section 1) 46 (sub-section 2), 50 (sub-section 2), and 54 (sub-section 2).

I cannot, however, agree with the opinion that, in the cases which do fall within sub-section 3 of section 7, knowledge on the part of the acceptor that the payee is a fictitious or non-existing person is still necessary. Such a qualification of the express words of the statute cannot properly, in my judgment, be implied from the earlier authorities, which treated knowledge as necessary. Those authorities were, no doubt, within the view of the Legislature; and all reference to the necessity of knowledge being here omitted, I think the omission must be taken to have been deliberate and intentional, and that there is no sound principle on which what is so omitted can be supplied by construction. I think it right to add that, in point of principle, it seems to me neither unjust nor unreasonable that the rights and liabilities of third parties should, in such a case, depend upon the facts, rather than upon an inquiry into the acceptor's state of mind. I am glad that the majority of your lordships have seen your way, with the Master of the Rolls, to put a construction upon section 7, sub-section 3, of the Act of 1882 which makes its operation co-extensive with its principle.

As to the other point, my opinion does not rest upon mere negligence, but on what seems to me higher ground. Upon that ground I find myself compelled, notwithstanding my sincere respect for the opinions from which I differ, to give my voice in the appellants' favour. The amount in controversy is large; the question is one of much importance both to the parties and to bankers and their customers generally; and it is not, in my judgment, covered by any previous authority. The case of Robarts v. Tucker is, no doubt, law; but I am not for extending it, as it seems to me to be extended by the order under appeal.

Lord WATSON.—The bank and Vagliano Brothers appear to me to have been equally innocent in this sense, that they entertained no suspicion that the forged documents which have given rise to this action were other than genuine bills of exchange; and also that nothing wittingly done, or omitted to be done, by them, in the conduct of their respective businesses as bankers and financiers, can reasonably be regarded as the proximate occasion of Glyka's forgeries, or of the success which attended them. Which of these innocent parties must bear the loss resulting from Glyka's frauds is the only question to be determined in this appeal.

It seems to have been assumed by all the learned judges in the courts below that, in making payment of the bills in question on behalf of the acceptors, the bank was under the same legal obligation to ascertain the identity of the payee which was held to attach to the defendants in the case of Robarts v. Tucker. That assumption, which is really the basis of the judgments appealed from, does not appear to me to be well founded.

The decision of the Queen's Bench in Robarts v. Tucker has, ever since its date, been accepted in mercantile practice as determining the obligations incumbent upon bankers who agree to retire acceptances on account of their customers. It casts upon them the whole duty of ascertaining the identity of the person to whom they make payment with the payee whose name is upon the bill. They may pay in good faith to the wrong person, in circumstances by which the acceptor himself, or men of ordinary prudence, might have been misled; but they cannot take credit for such a payment in any question with the acceptor. It has been said by one of the learned judges that the rule is a harsh one, and it is possible that in some instances it may operate harshly; but it appears to me to be settled beyond dispute, and I see no reason for suggesting any doubt, that it puts a reasonable construction upon the contract constituted by the agreement of the banker to pay his customers' acceptances when they fall due. In the absence of any special stipulations it construes the arrangement so constituted as importing that, on the one hand, the customer is to furnish or repay to the banker the funds necessary to meet his obligations as acceptor, and that, on the other hand, the banker undertakes to apply the money provided by the customer, or advanced on his account, so as to extinguish the liability created by his acceptance. Accordingly, no payment made by the banker which leaves the liability of the acceptor undischarged can be debited to the latter.

The ratio of the judgment in Robarts v. Tucker does not carry the liability of the banker beyond this point, that his undertaking to retire bills, genuine in their inception, on behalf of acceptors who, by signing in that character, became immediately indebted to the payees, implies an obligation on his part to discharge their debt, which he can only do by making payment to the proper creditor. It would obviously require a considerable extension of the principle in order to make it apply to documents purporting to be bills of exchange, in which the drawer's signature is a forgery, the payee a person who is not intended to be a holder, and the genuine signature of the acceptor has been procured by fraud. His signing such a document creates no legal obligation against the acceptor; although it is possible that he may be estopped from pleading his non-liability if, and when, the document has come into the hands of a bonâ fide holder for value. I venture to doubt whether the payee, whose name was fraudulently inserted, could ever occupy that position, because the occurrence of his own name in the original tenour of the bill would be sufficient notice to him that something was wrong, and called for inquiry. At the time when Glyka's bills were presented for payment they did not raise, and never had raised, any liability against Vagliano Brothers, although the latter informed the bank that they were liable and willing to pay; and, when the bills had been paid by the bank and returned to them, there remained no debt due by Vagliano Brothers which would have been the consequence of the bank's making an erroneous payment of a genuine bill.

The risk of error attending the payment of bills supposed to be genuine, but which are wholly counterfeit with the exception of the drawee's signature, is materially greater than the risk attending the payment of honest bills. In the latter case the danger of imposition can only arise from the document of debt having been stolen, or fraudulently obtained from the true owner; whereas, in the former, the document, never having been in the possession of a real owner, will almost, as a matter of certainty, be used for the purpose of deceiving the acceptor, or the bank acting as his agent. In the ordinary course of business it is very difficult for a banker, who has no reason for suspecting fraud, to make an exhaustive inquiry, in the case of each bill, as to the identity of the person by whom it is presented, without exposing himself to claims of damage. But experience has shown that the number of genuine bills which get into dishonest hands, and are erroneously paid, is comparatively insignificant, and does not materially affect profits derived from the business of retiring bills on account of the acceptor.

Again, it is well nigh impossible that a regular system of appropriating genuine bills, in all of which the drawee, payee, and acceptor are the same, and of obtaining payment by means of forged indorsations, could be carried on for any length of time without discovery. If the series of documents forged by Glyka had been genuine drafts by Vucina in favour of Petridi & Co., it is hardly conceivable that even the ingenuity of Glyka would have enabled him to get possession of no less than forty-three of these bills, and to obtain payment of their contents at intervals extending over a period of eight months. In that case it is probable, if not certain, that detection would have followed at an early stage of his frauds; because the real payee would have discovered the loss of each bill as it fell due, and would have taken measures to stop payment.

It appears to me to be beyond dispute that the bank paid Glyka's spurious bills under the belief that they were genuine commercial drafts, and that their payment was attended with no greater risk of error than is incidental to the cashing of genuine bills. It would be ridiculous to suggest that the bank would have dealt as they did with these bills had it not been for the existence of that erroneous belief. The very fact that no payee complained of having lost a bill payable at their office, or of their having made payment to the wrong person, was well calculated to assure the bank that they had made, and were making, payment of all Vagliano Brothers' acceptances to the proper creditors.

It is, in my opinion, unnecessary to consider what would have been the precise extent of the implied obligation of the bank to Vagliano Brothers, with reference to these forged bills, if the latter had been unconnected with the belief upon which the bank acted; because that belief was induced and warranted by their representations. Their acceptances, if genuine, were in themselves distinct assurances, upon which the bank was entitled to rely, that each bill bearing their signature was a real draft upon them by their correspondent Vucina, and the notes sent by them to the bank from time to time directing payment of the bills were so many renewals of the same representation, strengthened by the further assurance that their acceptances were genuine.

Throughout these transactions the bank acted in good faith as the agents of Vagliano Brothers; and the errors into which they were betrayed were mainly, if not wholly, attributable to their having treated the bills as genuine, in reliance upon the representations of their principals, which were untrue. I think that, in these circumstances, Vagliano Brothers cannot be permitted to cast upon the bank liability for errors arising from their own representations. These representations were, no doubt, made in the honest belief that they were true; but that circumstance cannot, in my opinion, avail Vagliano Brothers in the present question with their agents.

These considerations are sufficient for the disposal of this appeal; but on considering the opinions which have already been expressed, and are yet to be delivered by your lordships, I think it right to state my own opinion with regard to the construction of section 7 (3) of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882. Upon that point I concur in the reasoning of my noble and learned friend Lord Herschell. I think that the language of the sub-section, taken in its ordinary significance, imports that a bill may be treated as payable to bearer in all cases where the person designated as payee on the face of it is either non-existing, or, being in existence, has not, and never was intended to have, any right to its contents. The enactment has reference to real bills only, and has no direct application to these documents of Glyka's manufacture, which were not bills in their inception and never acquired the force of bills by virtue of estoppel. But the fact that the payees were fictitious within the meaning of the statute affords a good answer to Vagliano Brothers' contention, that the bank was bound to deal with these documents on the same footing as if they had been real bills, and ought not to have paid except upon genuine indorsations by Petridi & Co.

For these reasons I concur in the judgment which has been moved by the Lord Chancellor.

Lord BRAMWELL.—The plaintiffs are merchants and agents, or bankers, for foreign traders. They kept a banking account with the defendants. That is to say, they, the plaintiffs, paid to their credit with the defendants' money—technically lent it, and doubtless delivered to them other assets, drew cheques on them, and addressed accepted bills to them for payment. The plaintiffs claim of the defendants a large balance. The defendants admit the credit side of the account, but say they have paid bills accepted by the plaintiffs addressed to them, the defendants. It is immaterial, but this is not technically a set off, for the defendants never could have maintained an action against the plaintiffs in respect of these payments. The plaintiffs never owed the bank anything. I say this is immaterial, but it is as well to be technical. Set off or not, there can be no doubt but that the defendants have, as they allege, paid bills accepted by the plaintiffs, and addressed payable at the defendants, equal to the amount claimed; but they have paid them to persons who could not have enforced payment of them from the plaintiffs. They were bills on which the plaintiffs were not liable to any holder unless he claimed under Petridi's indorsement, and which, if presented to them, they need not, and possibly would not, have paid. The drawing and indorsements on them were forgeries, or fictitious. It is for the defendants to establish that they have a right to charge the plaintiffs with the amount of these bills.

The first ground on which they claim this right is that the plaintiffs by their conduct, wilful, careless, or unskilful, or all, enabled the fraud to be committed as to the whole or part (the part after the first one or two)—in effect, that the plaintiffs caused the defendants to pay these bills. I think it is necessary for the defendants to show that the plaintiffs caused them to pay these bills as they did. It is not enough to show that they gave occasion to their doing so—that different conduct would have prevented the fraud and the payment by the defendants.

I think the result of the authorities, Robarts v. Tucker, Young v. Grote, Bank of Ireland v. Trustees of Evans' Charities, Merchants of the Staple of England v. Bank of England, is, that the conduct of the bank's customer, to enable the bank to charge the customer, must be conduct directly causing the payment.

Now there is no doubt that there were many ways in which the plaintiffs might have detected the forgeries. The forged letters which advised the forged bills omitted to advise some which were genuine; yet the latter were accepted by the plaintiffs. The letters of the plaintiffs to Vucina did not mention the forged bills. The plaintiffs signed a letter to Vucina, in which the balance against him was in blank; that balance seems to have appeared in different amounts in the plaintiffs' books at different times. Then the forged bills were all indorsed on the part accepted, unlike the genuine bills. The bills after payment, had they been examined by the plaintiffs, would have shown that they had not been paid through a banker. The indorsements would have been known to the plaintiffs' clerks and to the plaintiffs to bear impossible dates. It would have been seen that Pasqua appeared to leave the bills for acceptance, and yet not to be the holder for payment. Maratis was a fictitious name, and would not be known to the plaintiffs. Vucina's account became very large, the balance against him unusually large, but no notice was taken; and what was much pressed was that Glyka was enabled to steal, and did steal, the forged bills after their acceptance. It was not the duty of anyone exclusively, apparently, to give out bills accepted to those who called for them. I suppose, as that call might be made at any time in the day, any clerk might go to the leather case, take out the bill, and give it out. It was kept in the room where Glyka sat. Whether this was negligence I cannot say. I really do not know. No witness said it was; it may be unusual. I say sincerely I do not know. I cannot of my own knowledge or reasoning say it was, and there is no evidence. All these things, put together, make it wonderful that the fraud could be practised—most wonderful that it could be practised to the extent it was without earlier discovery; but do not, in my opinion, give the defendants a right to charge the plaintiffs with the amounts paid for these bills as payment caused by them.

A great deal has been made of the advice notes the plaintiffs sent to the defendants of bills becoming due, with a request to the defendants to pay them. In my judgment these advice notes in no way help the defendants. They mean nothing more than the very acceptances themselves meant. The bills were accepted, payable at the defendants'; but to whom? To those who could give a discharge for them, and were entitled to enforce payment. That is all the advice notes mean. Suppose a genuine bill really drawn by Vucina, and really payable to Petridi, and suppose a forgery of Petridi's name, can it be suggested that the advice note would enable the defendants to charge the plaintiffs with that bill if they paid it? Certainly not. With all respect, it is a mistake to suppose that by that, or by the very acceptance itself, any more or other representation is made by the plaintiffs to the defendants than that they, the plaintiffs, are estopped to anyone interested to deny that Vucina drew the bill. The plaintiffs are not estopped from saying that they are not liable to pay the bill unless it is indorsed by Petridi. I am afraid, though, that that memorandum operates strongly on some opinions.

The other ground on which the defendants claim to charge the plaintiffs with the amount of these bills is that Petridi & Co., the payees, were fictitious persons within the meaning of the Bills of Exchange Act, s. 7, sub-section 3, and that the defendants therefore might pay them to a de facto bearer. I differ on both points. It must be borne in mind that the Bills of Exchange Act is "an Act to codify the law relating to bills of exchange," not to alter or amend it, and by section 97 the rules of common law, including the law merchant, "save in so far as they are inconsistent with the express provisions of this Act, shall continue to apply to bills of exchange."

Then, were Petridi & Co. fictitious or non-existing persons? There was a firm of that name, a firm as identifiable as N. M. Rothschild & Co., Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., as the Bank of England itself would be identifiable if their names appeared as payees of a bill of exchange; and to my mind that shows they were not fictitious or non-existing persons. It is asked, What if the payee were John Smith? Well, if there were nothing to identify a particular John Smith as payee when all "the surrounding circumstances" were looked at, it may be that he might be treated as a non-existent person. But what if it was shown that the bill was delivered to a particular John Smith, in payment of a debt due to him from the drawer, could any holder of it treat it as payable to bearer, Smith's name being forged as indorser? Certainly not; but then it is said that that is not the case here, that the bill was not delivered to Petridi & Co., nor intended to be so; that, in the intention of the makers of the bill, Petridi was a sham, and so fictitious or non-existent; that Petridi & Co. are not fictitious nor non-existent, that they exist in the flesh, yet they are fictitious quâ payees, constructively fictitious; that if Vucina had drawn the bill, Petridi was real and existent; but inasmuch as Glyka did not mean Petridi to have the bill, he was non-existent. This beats me. They are at the same time real and unreal, they are that which is said to be an impossibility, being and not being at the same time. The bill means one thing or another, according to the intent of the drawer, that the drawee has, or has not, a right to Petridi's indorsement, according as that intent is one thing or another. Because the argument would be the same if Vucina had really drawn the bills, but not intended Petridi to have them; a possibility, if Vucina will forgive me, that if Glyka had intended to commit his fraud through the innocent agency of Petridi, Petridi would be real and not fictitious If the argument is good it would show that a bonâ fide holder of these bills not claiming through Petridi might have enforced payment from the plaintiffs. It is said that such a payment, i.e., to himself, is according to the intention of the drawer. So it is of the drawer de facto, but not of him who, by the bill itself, the drawee has a right to suppose is the drawer. The plaintiffs are estopped from denying that Vucina is the drawer, but they are not estopped from denying that Vucina meant that Petridi and his assigns should receive the amount of the bill, and that it should not be paid unless indorsed by Petridi.

This argument, as I have said, makes the effect of a bill depend, not on the meaning of the writing, but on the intent of the maker. A bill payable to the Bank of England is payable to a fictitious person if the drawer intends to forge their name and give it to another person. A payee is real or fictitious, at the option of the holder, within the Act. But it was shown that a bill drawn like these might get into the hands of Petridi & Co., though not so intended, who might take it for value and be entitled to maintain an action against the plaintiffs. Would Petridi be fictitious then? It may be asked, What difference does it make to the plaintiffs that there is a C. Petridi & Co., when, if the payee had been actually fictitious or unreal, and the name was put on the back of the bill, it might be treated as payable to bearer? The answer is obvious. If the payee is a known person the drawee can well believe that the drawing is genuine; he knows he cannot be made to pay without that person's indorsement. He knows that before presentment for acceptance the bill has been in ordinary course, or at all events will be, in the hands of a responsible person, if a good name is used. His holding and indorsement are a guarantee that the bill is in right hands. Take this very case. Glyka could not have got Petridi's indorsement. I do not mean could not in point of law, but could not practically. Without that the plaintiffs were not bound to pay the bill. I have no doubt that Glyka chose Petridi's name to avoid suspicion. If it had been a strange name it might have attracted attention and caused some inquiry.

An argument is used, which, with all submission, I think very feeble. It is said that the statute says "fictitious or non-existing," and that fictitious is needless on the plaintiffs' construction; I do not agree. But what is the value of such an argument? Nothing; unless there is no other. A prudent draftsman does not accurately examine whether a word will be superfluous, he makes sure by using it.

A word on the case of Cooper v. Meyer. It is somewhat remarkable. The question was important; the judgment is singularly short, and nothing is said by Parke, J. I think the decision right. Lord Tenterden says, when the drawer is a real person his indorsement may be disputed; but if there is no such person, and (Bayley, J., also says) if the acceptor accepts without knowing there is such a person as the supposed drawer the acceptor undertakes to pay to the signature of the person who actually drew the bills. Further, I should say that, as the bills were accepted for the accommodation of Darby, with no knowledge of any such person as the drawer, the acceptor authorized the indorsement as he authorized the drawing by Darby. The court did not say that no indorsement was necessary, or that anyone but Darby could have indorsed. This case does not help the defendants.

I say, then, that Petridi & Co. were not fictitious or non-existent, and that the bill could not be treated as payable to bearer. But, supposing it could, by whom could it be so treated? By the holder in due course; by the person who could maintain an action; not by a man who stole it; not by a man who could maintain no action on it. The enactment is for the benefit of the holder—the honest holder who is embarrassed by the difficulties of there being no actual existing payee. Section 5, sub-section 2, says, that when drawer and drawee are the same person, or the drawee fictitious, or a person not having capacity to contract, the holder may treat the instrument as a bill or a promissory note; surely that means a holder for value. Suppose A. draws on a fictitious person, indorses it to B. for his (B.'s) accommodation, who negotiates it, and has to take it up. B. could not say, "the statute says, I may treat this as a promissory note." The answer would be, "you are not a holder for value." Now in this case the money was always paid by the defendants to Glyka or Glyka's agents. Glyka had no right to "treat" the bill in any way. It was in his possession by a theft. He clearly stole it after it was accepted.

The enactment, I say, is for the benefit of the holder, not of the acceptor; it gives rights against him. The plaintiffs could not, even if Petridi is considered as fictitious, treat these bills as payable to bearer. How could they? How can an acceptor treat a bill as payable to bearer? But if he cannot, if the section does not apply to him, neither does it apply to his agent for payment, his banker at whose house it is made payable. How can it be said that the plaintiffs have given a mandate to the defendants to pay these bills without Petridi's indorsement, to pay them to a person who had no right to receive the money, who could not have compelled the plaintiffs to pay them? These bills, as the acceptances were not "payable at the bank, and not elsewhere," might have been presented to the plaintiffs. Had they been, the plaintiffs could have refused payment, perhaps would. No one could have maintained an action against the plaintiffs on these bills. How can it be right that the defendants should have paid them? If a clerk of the plaintiffs had paid this bill I agree he would not be liable to his employers, unless his suspicions had been excited. But the duty of a clerk is different from that of a banker. The defendants have deprived the plaintiffs of this right to refuse payment by electing to pay. Let it not be supposed I find any fault with them; I do not in the least; but so it is.

I am of opinion that this case is governed by Robarts v. Tucker. I own to a prejudice in favour of that case. I do not agree with the notion that a banker is entitled to make inquiries as to whether he should pay as there suggested. He must honour or dishonour the bill on presentment. The case was decided on no such ground, but on this, that the customer's mandate is to pay only to such person or persons as can give a discharge of the instrument. I am afraid, however, that a dislike of that case has a good deal to do with the opinions unfavourable to the plaintiffs. Lord Esher says that is a harsh case. I have heard able arguments on both sides. On the one side, that the banker sees the person who presents the instrument. On the other, that the banker's customer knows the parties to whom he gives his acceptance or cheque. There are two remarks to be made. One is that the banker can bargain with his customer, if he likes (I do not mean by Act of Parliament, but he can make his stipulation with his customer), that he will not be liable in such cases as the present. The other is that bankers do not make such a bargain, yet they and banking, I am glad to say, flourish. I have said nothing of the defendants paying this enormous amount over the counter to strangers. I have no doubt, as a matter of knowledge and of reasoning, that this was most unusual. There is, besides, cogent evidence that it was. The paying cashier inquired of his principal if the bill should be paid when first presented. The principal, according to his own account, thought it a thing to mention to the plaintiffs' clerk when the instances had been few. I have no doubt (especially when the cases multiplied) instead of a gossiping intimation, not enough to reach Ziffo's mind (as Charles, J., finds), that for the protection of themselves there ought to have been a formal communication to the plaintiffs. If Mr. Disney was satisfied with what he said Ziffo said to him, he is a very strange person. The thing is absurd. "I suppose you must pay if they have been advised." How could the advice that the bills would be presented for payment remove the suspiciousness of the presentment when it took place? True, the plaintiffs might have seen that the bills had been paid over the counter, but they trust to the defendants having paid properly. But I have not referred to this as a ground on which the defendants should fail. I have no doubt there was gross carelessness, but a carelessness to the bank's own hurt, a carelessness of precautions for their own good.

If, however, on some ground which I cannot see, the whole conduct of the parties is to be looked at, if it is to be said that the bank may charge Vagliano with payments they need not have made, then I think that must, at least, be limited to those payments which were reasonably, rightfully, and carefully made, and not to such as those in question.

I rely, also, on and agree with the judgments of the judges who have decided in favour of the plaintiffs; also on that of the Master of the Rolls, except that part which holds that C. Petridi & Co. were fictitious. This is my opinion, and I am glad to think it is also that of my noble and learned friend, Lord Field. I am sorry that it is not shared in by any other noble and learned lord who heard the case. We are probably wrong, but—and I say it, I am sure I need not protest, with the most sincere respect for those who do not agree with me, for I know of no others more deserving of respect—it is some comfort to me to think that the head-note of our opinion may be expressed very shortly, and in the most abstract form, namely, "a banker cannot charge his customer with the amount of a bill paid to a person who had no right of action against the customer, the acceptor." But I think the head-note which will represent the decision of your lordships must be in the most concrete form possible, and should limit itself to stating the facts and saying that on them it was held that the judgment should be for the appellants. I think the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be affirmed.

Lord HERSCHELL.—I propose to deal, at the outset, with the question of the construction of the Bills of Exchange Act, which gave rise to a difference of opinion in the court below.

The facts material to this part of the case I take to be these. The bills in question purported to be drawn by Vucina, but were, in fact, entirely the production of Glyka, a clerk in the service of Vagliano Brothers, the respondents. He fraudulently procured the necessary forms to be printed, and filled them up, inserting the name of Vucina as drawer, and of C. Petridi & Co. as payees. A firm of C. Petridi & Co. carries on business at Constantinople, and had been the payee of some genuine bills previously drawn by Vucina upon Vagliano Brothers. I think there can be no doubt that this fact suggested to Glyka the insertion of the name of C. Petridi & Co., but I do not believe that he made the choice with the idea that it would assist his fraud. I entertain no doubt, under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence, that Vagliano Brothers would equally have accepted the bills if any other name had been inserted, and that Glyka knew this. It was, of course, never intended by Glyka that Petridi & Co. should be the persons to whom the bill should be paid. The name was inserted merely to make the bills complete in form. The bills were accepted by Vagliano Brothers, payable at the Bank of England, who were requested by Vagliano Brothers to pay them at maturity. They were presented for payment with indorsements to all appearance regular, these having been written by Glyka, and were paid to the persons presenting them at maturity.

The conclusion at which the majority of the Court of Appeal arrived with reference to the construction of the sub-section of the Bills of Exchange Act with which your lordships have to deal is thus stated:—"The word 'fictitious' must in each case be interpreted with due regard to the person against whom the bill is sought to be enforced. If the drawer is the person against whom the bill is to be treated as a bill payable to bearer, the term 'fictitious' may be satisfied if it is fictitious as regards himself, or in other words, fictitious to his knowledge. If the obligations of the acceptor are in question, and the acceptor is the person against whom the bill is to be so treated, 'fictitious' must mean fictitious as regards the acceptor and to his knowledge. Such an interpretation is based on good sense and sound commercial principle."

The conclusion thus expressed was founded upon an examination of the state of the law at the time the Bills of Exchange Act was passed. The prior authorities were subjected by the learned judges who concurred in this conclusion to an elaborate review, with the result that it was established to their satisfaction that a bill made payable to a fictitious person, or his order, was, as against the acceptor, in effect, a bill payable to bearer only when the acceptor was aware of the circumstance that the payee was a fictitious person; and, further, that his liability in that case depended upon an application of the law of estoppel. It appeared to those learned judges that, if the exception was to be further extended it would rest upon no principle, and that they might well pause before holding that section 7, sub-section 3, of the statute was "intended, not merely to codify the existing law, but to alter it, and to introduce so remarkable and unintelligible a change."

With sincere respect for the learned judges who have taken this view, I cannot bring myself to think that this is the proper way to deal with such a statute as the Bills of Exchange Act, which was intended to be a code of the law relating to negotiable instruments. I think the proper course is, in the first instance, to examine the language of the statute, and to ask what is its natural meaning, uninfluenced by any considerations derived by the previous state of the law, and not to start with inquiring how the law previously stood, and then, assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view.

If a statute intended to embody in a code a particular branch of the law is to be treated in this fashion, it appears to me that its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which it was enacted will be frustrated. The purpose of such a statute surely was that, on any point specifically dealt with by it, the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used, instead of, as before, by roaming over a vast number of authorities in order to discover what the law was—extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions, dependent upon a knowledge of the exact effect even of an obsolete proceeding, such as a demurrer to evidence. I am, of course, far from asserting that resort may never be had to the previous state of the law for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the provisions of the code. If, for example, a provision be of doubtful import, such resort would be perfectly legitimate. Or, again, if in a code of the law of negotiable instruments words be found which have previously acquired a technical meaning, or been used in a sense other than their ordinary one, in relation to such instruments, the same interpretation might well be put upon them in the code. I give these as examples merely; they, of course, do not exhaust the category. What, however, I am venturing to insist upon is that the first step taken should be to interpret the language of the statute, and that an appeal to earlier decisions can only be justified on some special ground.

One further remark I have to make before I proceed to consider the language of the statute. The Bills of Exchange Act was certainly not intended to be merely a code of the existing law. It is not open to question that it was intended to alter, and did alter, it in certain respects. And I do not think that it is to be presumed that any particular provision was intended to be a statement of the existing law rather than a substituted enactment.

Turning now to the words of the sub-section, I confess they appear to me to be free from ambiguity. "Where the payee is a fictitious or non-existent person" means, surely, according to ordinary canons of construction, in every case where this can, as a matter of fact, be predicated of the payee.

I can find no warrant in the statute itself for inserting any limitation or condition. I am putting aside for the present the question by whom a bill answering the description of the sub-section may be treated as payable to bearer; and I am accepting, too, for the moment, the meaning attributed by the majority of the Court of Appeal to the word "fictitious"—viz., a creation of the imagination, confining myself to the question in what cases a bill, purporting on the face of it to be payable to order, may be treated as payable to bearer. I find it impossible, without doing violence to the language of the statute, to give any other answer than this: In all cases in which the payee is a fictitious or non-existent person. The majority of the Court of Appeal read the section thus: Where the payee is a fictitious or non-existent person, the bill may, as against any party who had knowledge of the fact, be treated as a bill payable to bearer. It seems to me that this is to add to the words of the statute, and to insert a limitation which is not to be found in it or indicated by it. It is said that when the acceptor is the person against whom the bill is to be treated as payable to bearer, "'fictitious' must mean fictitious as regards the acceptor, and to his knowledge." With all respect, I am unable to see why it must mean this. I confess I cannot altogether follow the meaning of the words fictitious "as regards" the acceptor. I have a difficulty in seeing how a payee, who is, in fact, a "fictitious" person in the sense in which that word is being used, can be otherwise than fictitious as regards all the world — how such a payee can be "fictitious" as regards one person and not another. The truth is, the words, "as regards" the acceptor, are treated as equivalent to the words "to the knowledge of" the acceptor. But I do not think these expressions are synonymous. It seems to me that to import into the statute after the words "fictitious person" the words "as regards" the acceptor or drawer, as the case may be, and then to interpret those words as meaning "to the knowledge of," only tends to obscure the fact that the condition that the payee must be fictitious to the knowledge of the person sought to be charged as upon a bill payable to bearer is being introduced into the enactment.

For the reasons I have given I find myself compelled to the conclusion, notwithstanding my respect for those who have expressed a contrary view, that, in order to establish the right to treat a bill as payable to bearer, it is enough to prove that the payee is in fact a fictitious person, and that it is not necessary, if it be sought to charge the acceptor, to prove in addition that he was cognisant of the fictitious character of the payee.

If the conclusion which I have indicated as being, in my opinion, the sound one involved some absurdity or led to some manifestly unjust result, I might, perhaps, even at the risk of straining the language used, strive to put some other interpretation upon it. But I cannot see that this is so, or that the interpretation I have adopted does any violence to good sense, or is otherwise than in accordance with sound commercial principle. I will assume that as the law stood at the time the Bills of Exchange Act was passed, a bill drawn to the order of a fictitious payee could have been treated as a bill payable to bearer only as against a party who knew that the payee was fictitious. This decision even was arrived at little more than a century ago, and was dissented from by distinguished judges, and it is obvious, from the observations of Lord Ellenborough, in Bennett v. Farnell, that, by some eminent lawyers, at least, it was regarded rather as a departure from strict principle, which ought not to be further extended, than as an embodiment of sound commercial principle.

But is it impossible to take any step beyond this without violating sound principle and working injustice? Let me draw attention, for a moment, to the relative position and rights of the drawer and acceptor of a bill of exchange. A drawee who accepts a bill does so either because he has in his hands moneys of the drawer, or expects to have them before the bill falls due, or because he is willing to give the credit of his name to the drawer, and to make him an advance by payment of his draft. It is immaterial to whom the drawer directs him to make payment; that is a matter for the choice of the drawer alone. The acceptor is only concerned to see that he makes the payment as directed, so as to be able to charge the drawer. It is, in truth, only with the drawer that the acceptor deals; it is at his instance that he accepts; it is on his behalf that he pays; and it is to him that he looks either for the funds to pay with, or for reimbursement if he holds no funds of the drawer at the time of payment.

In the ordinary case, where the payee designated in the bill is a real person intended by the drawer to receive payment, either by himself or by some transferee, the acceptor can only charge the drawer if he pays the person so designated or someone deriving title through him. If payment be made to any other person, the drawer's liability on the bill is not discharged by payment; he will or may remain liable to the real payee, or those claiming under him, and the acceptor, having paid otherwise than according to the directions of the drawer, cannot justify the use of his funds in making the payment, or claim to be reimbursed by him. But now, suppose the drawer inserts as payee the name of a fictitious person, requests the drawee to accept a bill so drawn, indorses the payee's name, and puts the bill into circulation. He certainly intended it to obtain currency and to be paid at maturity, and he as certainly did not intend it to be paid only to the payee named, or someone deriving title through him. Nor, as it seems to me, can it reasonably be said that he intended to direct the drawee to pay such person and such person only.

What, then, is the position of a lawful holder of a bill so drawn? I do not understand it to be doubted that even before the Bills of Exchange Act such a holder could enforce payment of the bill against the drawer, for he not merely knew that the payee designated was a fictitious person, but was himself the author of the fiction. As against the drawer, then, such a bill could be treated as payable to bearer. But, if it cannot be so treated as against the acceptor, the holder, who, it may be, bought or discounted it on the faith of the acceptance, relying on the credit of the acceptor, and unwilling to trust to that of the drawer alone, is deprived of that upon which he relied, of the liability which he regarded as his security for payment. The holder in such a case suffers wrong. Would any injustice result if the bill could, as against the acceptor also, be treated as payable to bearer? The drawer must be taken to have intended the bill to be paid by the acceptor at maturity, but to whom? Not to the fictitious payee, or someone claiming through him. Why not, then, to the bearer, who can hold the drawer liable upon the bill, and treat it as payable to him? And, if it were the law that the acceptor was bound, in such a case, to pay the bearer, who would suffer? Not the drawer, for payment would have been made to a person who could compel him to make payment, and he could have no ground for complaint if the acceptor used his funds in thus discharging his liability on the bill, or, in case he had not provided such funds, if he were held liable, to re-imburse the acceptor. And how would the acceptor suffer in such a case? It was his object in accepting the bill to render himself liable to make payment to the person intended by the drawer to receive it, either out of moneys provided by him, or looking to him for re-imbursement. His position under such circumstances would be precisely what it would have been if he had made payment to a real person designated as payee, or to those claiming under him. And it might, I think, fairly be said that he was making the payment in accordance with the intention of the drawer.

It may be that the right of the holder to treat such a bill, as against an acceptor ignorant of the fictitious character of the payee, as a bill payable to bearer, could not be established merely by an appeal to the law of estoppel, and that such estoppel would exist only against the drawer who knew that the payee was a fictitious person. I will assume that this was the law prior to the recent statute. But why should not the Legislature have intervened with a positive enactment imposing this liability upon the acceptor, an enactment which, it seems to me, would wrong no one, and would prevent a holder for value from suffering wrong? Estoppel is not the only sound principle upon which a law can be based. The law of estoppel was not thought to afford sufficient protection to those dealing with the apparent owner of goods. The Legislature deemed it necessary to intervene, and the Factors Acts were passed, each of which added something to the protection of persons so dealing. Why, then, should it be thought improbable that the Legislature should have created in the holder of a bill, drawn payable to a fictitious person, a new right against the acceptor? If I am correct in thinking that this added right would obviate and not entail injustice, that it would make the law more reasonable, and bring it more into conformity with the course of commercial transactions, I can see no reason for doubting that the Legislature so intended, if this be the plain, natural meaning of the words they have used, or for endeavouring so to construe the language as to find in it no more than a statement of the previous law.

I have dwelt at some length upon this point because it appeared to me important to show that the words of the enactment might have their natural effect given to them without leading to results either unjust or commercially inconvenient. But I desired also to elucidate the principle upon which the enactment was, in my opinion, based; because this is not without its bearing upon the next question to be considered, and to which I will now pass. It is, to my mind, one of greater difficulty.

Even assuming, it is said, that where the payee is a "fictitious" person the bill may be treated as against the acceptor as a bill payable to bearer, the word "fictitious" is only applicable to a creature of the imagination, having no real existence, whilst in the present case "C. Petridi & Co." was the name of a firm having a real existence, so that the payee here cannot be termed a fictitious person. But are the words "where the payee is a fictitious person" incapable of legitimate application in any other case than that suggested? The first observation I have to make is, that, if so, there was no necessity for the introduction of the word "fictitious" in the enactment; the word "non-existent" would have sufficed. It was argued that whilst a fictitious person is one who has never existed, a non-existent person is one who has existed but whose existence has ceased. But even if this be admitted, the word "non-existent" would have sufficed, for it can hardly be doubted that it is employed as suitably in reference to that which has never existed, as to that which, having existed, exists no longer.

Without, however, dwelling too much on this point, which may perhaps have a historical explanation, let me call attention to the inconvenient complexity and strange and unmeaning distinctions to which, as it seems to me, the construction adopted by the Court of Appeal would give rise. If, for example, a drawer inserts after the words, "Pay to the order of," a name which he invents, himself indorses that name, and puts the bill into circulation, it is within the terms of the statute, and may be treated as a bill payable to bearer. But if he inserts the first name that occurs to him, though he never intends a bearer of that name to be the payee, or that title shall only be made through him, but himself indorses this bill and puts it into circulation just as he did the other, this bill, as I understand the court below, stands in a different position. The case is not within the statute, and if the bill can be treated, even as against the drawer, as a bill payable to bearer, this does not depend upon the words of the enactment, but must result from the rules of the common law, which, in so far as they are not inconsistent with the express provisions of the Act, are by section 97 (2) still to apply to bills of exchange.

It follows that, according to the view of the majority of the Court of Appeal, the Legislature has dealt by express enactment with one case of estoppel, that is to say, where the payee is a "fictitious person" in the sense which they attribute to those words, but has left the analogous case, where, though the payee was not fictitious in that sense the name was inserted as a mere pretence, and without any intention that payment should be made to the person designated, undealt with, and the rights and liabilities upon the bill to be ascertained by an appeal to the rules of the common law; certainly a strange proceeding in a code of this description, and one for which it would be difficult to find a satisfactory explanation.

But this is not all. If I am right in thinking that in the case of a payee who is a fictitious person (whatever be the meaning of that expression) a bill may, as against the acceptor, be treated by a lawful holder as payable to bearer, whether the acceptor knew of the fiction or not, why should this right and liability differ according as the name inserted as payee be a creature of the imagination or correspond to that of a real person, the drawer in neither case intending a person so designated to receive payment, and in each case himself indorsing the bill in the name of the nominal payee before putting it into circulation? I am at a loss for any reason why this distinction should exist. It is true that there is this difference between the two cases, that in the one an indorsement by the named payee is physically impossible, whilst in the other it is not. But I do not think this difference affords a sound basis for a distinction between the respective rights and liabilities of the drawer, acceptor, and holder. It seems to me that it would in each case be reasonable, and on the same grounds, that the acceptor should be liable to the holder of the bill, indemnifying himself out of the funds of the drawer, or obtaining reimbursement from him.

It must be admitted, of course, that if the language of the statute is not reasonably capable of any other intrepretation than that adopted by the majority of the Court of Appeal, if it will not allow of a construction which would cover the case we have been considering, then one must submit to the conclusion that the Legislature has left the law in this respect in an unsatisfactory position, and full of distinctions devoid of any sound principle. But are we compelled to this conclusion? Do the words "where the payee is a fictitious person," apply only where the payee named never had a real existence? I take it to be clear that by the word "payee" must be understood the payee named on the face of the bill; for of course by the hypothesis there is no intention that payment should be made to any such person. Where, then, the payee named is so named by way of pretence only, without the intention that he shall be the person to receive payment, is it doing violence to language to say that the payee is a fictitious person? I think not. I do not think that the word "fictitious" is exclusively used to qualify that which has no real existence. When we speak of a fictitious entry in a book of accounts we do not mean that the entry has no real existence, but only that it purports to be that which it is not, that it is an entry made for the purpose of pretending that the transaction took place which is represented by it.

In his report of the case of Stone v. Freeland the learned reporter speaks of their having been in that case "a fictitious indorsement." The facts were that a bill had been drawn payable to Butler & Co., and indorsed in that name. There was a house, Butler & Co., with whom Cox, the drawer, had dealings; but the bill had never been in their hands, and appeared to have been indorsed by Cox. Now, in what sense was the word "fictitious" here used? Not surely to convey the idea that the indorsement had no real existence, and was a mere creature of the imagination, but that it was put forward as being that which it was not.

These seem to me to be instances (and other illustrations might be given) of an analogous use of the word "fictitious" to that which, I think, may be attributed to it in the statute. Turning to the interpretation of the word "fictitious" in Dr. Johnson's Dictionary, I find amongst the meanings given are "counterfeit," "feigned." It seems to me, then, that where the name inserted as that of the payee is so inserted by way of pretence only, it may, without impropriety, be said that the payee is a feigned or pretended, or, in other words, a fictitious person. Stress was laid upon the fact that the words of the statute are, "where the payee is a fictitious person," and not "where the payee is fictitious." There is not, to my mind, any substantial difference in the meaning of the two phrases. And I cannot think that the Legislature intended the rights and liabilities arising upon mercantile instruments to depend upon nice distinctions such as this.

For the reasons with which I have troubled your lordships at some length, I have arrived at the conclusion that whenever the name inserted as that of the payee is so inserted by way of pretence merely, without any intention that payment shall only be made in conformity therewith, the payee is a fictitious person within the meaning of the statute, whether the name be that of an existing person, or of one who has no existence, and that the bill may, in each case, be treated by a lawful holder as payable to bearer.

I have hitherto been considering the case of a bill drawn by the person whose name is attached to it as drawer, whilst the bills which have given rise to this these contentions on behalf of the respondents can be maintained.

Before the Act of 1882, the law seems to have been, as laid down by Lord Ellenborough in Bennett v. Farnell, that "a bill of exchange made payable to a fictitious person or his order is neither in effect payable to the order of the drawer nor to bearer unless it can be shown that the circumstance of the payee being a fictitious person was known to the acceptor." The Act of 1882, s. 7 (3), enacts that "where the payee is a fictitious or non-existing person the bill may be treated as payable to bearer." As a statement of law before the Act that would have been incomplete and inaccurate. The omission of the qualification required to make it complete and accurate as the law then stood seems to show that the object of the enactment was to do away with that qualification altogether. The section appears to me to have effected a change in the law in the direction of the more complete negotiability of bills of exchange—a change in accordance, I think, with the tendency of modern views and one in favour of holders in due course, and not, so far as I can see, likely to lead to any hardship or injustice.

Then it was said that the proper meaning of "fictitious" is "imaginary." I do not think so. I think the proper meaning of the word is "feigned" or "counterfeit." It seems to me that the "C. Petridi & Co." named as payees on these pretended bills were, strictly speaking, fictitious persons. When the bills came before Vagliano for acceptance they were fictitious from beginning to end. The drawer was fictitious, the payee was fictitious, the person indicated as agent for presentation was fictitious. One and all they were feigned or counterfeit persons, put forward as real persons, each in a several and distinct capacity, whereas in truth they were mere make-believes for the persons whose names appeared on the instrument. They were not, I think, the less fictitious because there were in existence real persons for whom these names were intended to pass muster.

In the result, therefore, I think that on both grounds the bank is entitled to succeed. Nor is that conclusion altogether to be regretted. An opposite conclusion would, I think, go a long way to encourage mischievous negligence on the part of persons called upon to accept bills of exchange. To an acceptor it would be a matter of indifference whether the drawer's signature were genuine or not. If it were genuine the transaction would be completed in regular course. If it were not genuine the loss would fall, not on the acceptor whose negligence had led to it, but on the banker, who could have no means of detecting the forgery, and must have been thrown off his guard by the carelessness of his employer.

Lord MORRIS.—I entirely agree in the conclusion arrived at by my noble and learned friend (Lord Herschell), viz., that whenever the name inserted as that of the payee is inserted without any intention that payment shall only be made in conformity therewith, the payee becomes a fictitious person within the meaning of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 7, sub-section 3, and that the bill may be treated by a legal holder as payable to bearer; and having had the advantage of reading the noble and learned lord's judgment in print, I concur in the reasoning by which that conclusion is arrived at.

That conclusion appears to me not only to embrace the bills which are the subject of this litigation, but I am of opinion they are à fortiori, and necessarily, within the statute as bills payable to bearer. The bills were regular in form, with Vucina, of Odessa, as drawer, Petridi, of Constantinople, named as payee, and Vagliano as drawee. Vagliano accepts the bills; that acceptance is the only real action of the three parties named in the bills. Vucina drew none of the bills, and knew nothing whatever about them; Petridi had no knowledge of, or any connection of any kind with them; Vucina, though a known existing person, had no reality in regard to them; the paper writings only became bills as against Vagliano, who, by his acceptance, is estopped—in the language used in the statute, is precluded—from denying they were bills as against the bank, who paid them on the faith of his acceptance, and also upon his express requisition to do so. If Vucina was an unreal person Petridi must be also an unreal person, and therefore a fictitious person in regard to the bills. The drawer can alone designate the payee; but there was, in fact, no drawer; Vucina, the alleged drawer, could not and did not name any payee; Glyka, the forger, who wrote the documents in the form of bills of exchange, was not a drawer; he forges the name of Vucina as drawer; that cannot constitute Glyka himself a drawer. Vucina cannot become the alter ego of Glyka because Glyka forged his name, nor can Glyka be the alter ego of Vucina, who never knew of or heard of Glyka's existence; the only person who could call into existence a payee had no legal existence. There never was, in fact, a real bill of exchange. Though the acceptor, Vagliano, is bound to know the drawer and guarantee his existence and handwriting, and is precluded from denying against the holder that it is a bill of exchange, only to the extent of the estoppel is the document a bill of exchange. In the case of a real drawer that the payee is a fictitious person (unless it is obvious on the face of the bill) must be proved by the holder; but in the case of an unreal drawer, as a fact, the unreality, and therefore fictitiousness, of the person named as payee follows necessarily.

I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be reversed.

Lord FIELD.—The question in the case between the appellants, the Bank of England, and their customer, a foreign banker and merchant, shortly stated, is whether the appellants are justified in debiting the respondent's account with various payments made by them, amounting in the whole to the sum of £71,500. The sums so paid were the amounts of a series of documents purporting to be bills of exchange, and to have been drawn upon the respondent by one of his correspondents at Odessa, named Vucina, and to be payable to the order of "C. Petridi & Co."

The acceptances by the respondent of these supposed drafts were genuine, although obtained from him by a fraud, to which he was no party; but the drawings purporting to be by Vucina were forgeries by one of the respondent's clerks, named Glyka, who having, after acceptance, also forged indorsements of the name of the firm of the alleged payees, obtained payment of the amounts from the appellants, at whose bank the respondent had made the acceptances payable.

Besides making the acceptances so payable, the respondent had, previous to their falling due, advised the appellants of his having so accepted by letters, in the following terms:—

"From Vagliano Brothers to the Cashiers of the Bank of England.

"19, Old Broad-street, London, E.C.,
"17th February, 1887.

"The undernoted bills have been accepted by us and made payable with you, which please pay at maturity and debit our account.

"Yours truly,
"VAGLIANO BROTHERS.

"No. 97,326, drawn by G. Vucina, Odessa, 4th February, due 18th instant, £600.

"No. 332, drawn by D. P. Pulaco, Piraius, 29th January, due 18th instant, £200."

The second of these two bills was an ordinary genuine bill, in no way connected with the present question. The first was also the first forgery by Glyka; and, as it fell due in the course of the then current month, and had been accepted subsequent to the general monthly advice, it was the subject of a special advice.

The second forged draft (for £700) fell due on the 7th of March, and was included in the usual monthly advice, which was in the following form:—

"Vagliano Brothers.

"List for March enclosed.

"19, Old Broad-street, London, E.C.

"28th February, 1887.

"The Cashiers of the Bank of England.

"Gentlemen,

"Herewith we beg to hand you our list of acceptances falling due next month and made payable with you, which be good enough to pay at maturity and debit our account.

"Yours truly,

"VAGLIANO BROTHERS."

Enclosed with the letter was a list of bills, describing them by the date when drawn, the number, the drawer's name and residence, the date when due, and the amount. Similar letters were subsequently regularly sent by the respondents to the appellants, in which the acceptances making up the residue of the £71,500 were advised.

The transactions between Vucina and the respondent are very large, representing at times over a million sterling in the course of a year; and, amongst other drafts by Vucina, the respondent had, in the years 1886 and 1887, before the commencement of, and in one instance contemporaneously with, the transactions now in question, accepted genuine drafts of Vucina, sixteen or seventeen in number, payable to the order of a firm of C. Petridi & Co., carrying on business in Constantinople, and with whom Vucina had numerous transactions. Indeed, if Glyka is to be believed, there had been a direct communication between the respondent and C. Petridi & Co. in reference probably to some of these genuine drafts, all of which represented genuine transactions between Vucina and C. Petridi & Co., and the indorsements upon which the appellants had paid them were all genuine and in order. There cannot, I think, indeed be much doubt but that Glyka, having obtained possession of some of the genuine business letters of Vucina, and of genuine acceptances and indorsements, made use of them to fabricate his forgeries, probably also thinking that, the names being familiar to the respondent's clerks, no inquiry would be made.

There were, of course, no transactions of any kind in reference to which those bills could be supposed by anybody to have come into existence or be used; but that Glyka intended to make use of the actual names of existing persons, and existing to the knowledge of the respondent or his clerks, to facilitate his fraud, I entertain no doubt. It is equally clear that Glyka had no intention whatever that the acceptances should ever come to the knowledge either of the alleged drawers or payees. He doubtlessly expected to be able, as the result of his Stock Exchange speculations, to retire them before maturity, and conceal their existence from the respondent.

Under these circumstances the appellants, firstly, contended that the payees named in the draft were "fictitious persons" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 3, of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, and that the bills were, therefore, according to their tenour and effect in law, bills payable to bearer, so that, whatever might have been the original limits of the authority under which the appellants had acted in undertaking the making of the payments complained of, it was competent to them, now that the actual facts had been discovered, to show and rely upon them as justifying their right to debit the respondent with the amount.

I will deal with that contention first. That the terms of the original mandate as between the appellants and respondent were limited to payment to the actual indorsees of the payees named in the instruments is, I think, clear, and was not, if I followed the argument of the appellants correctly, seriously disputed. At the times of acceptance and payment neither party entertained any suspicion that C. Petridi & Co. were other than what they appeared to be—genuine payees, and Vucina a genuine drawer. The respondent, therefore, had the right to assume that, by making the payment to the order of the payees, he would acquire a discharge to that amount in his accounts with the assumed drawer, Vucina.

On the other hand, it appears from the evidence that the bank on presentation of the acceptances did no more than refer to the advices and indorsements in order to satisfy themselves that the bills were in order. In other words, by accepting the duty of paying the acceptances at maturity they intentionally undertook the risk which the law merchant has been held, under those circumstances, to impose upon bankers in the case of a genuine acceptance (Robarts v. Tucker), a liability the existence of which I understood the appellants did not deny, but they endeavoured to distinguish that case from the present by a circumstance which did not exist in that case, viz., that the respondent in this case had by the letters of advice untruly, although innocently, represented the drawing as genuine, whereas, it being a forgery, the respondents in paying the amount would acquire no valid discharge against any valid drawer.

Assuming, however, that the letters of advice amount to such a representation, it does not appear to me that the appellants in making the payments complained of relied in any way upon it, nor that the representation goes any further than the acceptance itself, which in the case of Robarts v. Tucker was held insufficient to vary the duty of the banker.

The sole question in this case appears to me to be whether in making the payments to Glyka the bankers have complied with the direction of their customer. That direction is found in the letters of advice and the acceptances, and I do not see that the terms of the latter differ from the former. The question, therefore, upon the first point seems to me to be reduced to this:—Whether, as alleged by the appellants, the payees were "non-existing or fictitious persons" within the 3rd sub-section, and, if so, whether, as against an acceptor, no party to, and ignorant of, the fiction, the bills might be treated as payable to bearer so as to justify the payments to Glyka.

Upon this point the appellants argued that, as in fact there was no person in existence capable of giving the discharge contemplated by the acceptor, or of making a valid title by indorsement, they were under no obligation to make any inquiries as to the named payee's indorsement or require it, but were justified, as against the respondent, in payment to bearer, that being in law the tenour and effect of the bill.

In support of this proposition they cited various cases decided in the courts of common law for the purpose of showing that where the names in one case even of known and existing persons had been inserted as payees fictitiously, and without any intent that they should be actual payees, the courts had treated the bills as payable to bearer. Those cases have been fully discussed and dealt with in the courts below, and it will, I think, appear that in all of them the persons against whom the bills were so treated had been parties to the putting forth of the bills, either with knowledge of the fictitious insertion, or with authority to make the instrument (as when accepted in blank) a negotiable instrument for the payment of money to somebody, which a holder in due course must of necessity have the right to enforce against somebody, so that the parties to their emission could not be heard to say that the bills were not payable at all for want of an indorsement by a payee who was never intended to have the power to, and could not make any valid indorsement.

The case nearest to the present in its facts is that of Cooper v. Meyer. There the persons named as payees were known and existing persons, although their names were fictitiously inserted by the drawer as payees without any intention that they should have anything to do with the bills. But the point decided in that case simply was that the acceptor, for whom the holder had discounted the bill, having accepted, for the accommodation of the drawer who had been guilty of this fiction, evidence that the handwriting of the indorsement was the same as that of the drawing was sufficient as against the acceptor, who was precluded from denying the drawing, and who, it was said, had given credit to the drawer's handwriting.

Upon the authority of these cases, and what was said to be the true construction of the statute, it was contended that the fraudulent intention of Glyka in inserting C. Petridi & Co. as payees, although unknown to the acceptor, had, as against him, converted an acceptance which was in terms payable to a named payee, "or order," into a liability to pay any bearer. But I fail to see how, upon principle, the intention of a drawer can alter the terms of a bill in which there is a named and ascertainable payee. All it can do is, where more than one person fulfils the description of the payee in the bill, to say which was the person intended (Mead v. Young), and I, therefore, have come to the conclusion, which has been arrived at by the noble and learned lord (Lord Bramwell), that the payees in the present case were not "fictitious or non-existent persons," within the meaning of the statute, so as to entitle the appellants to treat the respondents' acceptances as payable to Glyka, or any other bearer.

It was not denied that the firm of C. Petridi & Co., who were so named as payees, were existing persons carrying on business at Constantinople; that they were known to be such to Vucina and others; and that the respondent had been in commercial relations with them by paying bills to their genuine indorsements. They are, however, said to be "fictitious" persons because Glyka intended so to deal with the bills that the fact that their names appeared upon them should remain concealed. Now, what he intended was to obtain the amount of the bills by fraudulently inserting a genuine name as the payee, relying upon his being able, in his position in the respondents' counting-house, to prevent the discovery of the forgery. But I cannot see how that can render actual existing persons fictitious within the meaning of the statute. If he had made Rothschild, of Vienna, or Hirsch, of Constantinople, payees, that would have been as fraudulent, but would not have made them fictitious persons.

In this view it is unnecessary to consider whether, if the payees had been fictitious persons, within the meaning of the statute, the bills might be treated, as against the respondent, who was ignorant of the fiction, as payable to bearer.

But the appellants argued, secondly, that, even if the payments in question could not be justified in themselves, the conduct of the respondent precluded him from complaining of them. They urged that his representation in the letter of advice that the bills were genuine commercial instruments, his instructions to honour them at maturity, coupled with such a lax system of business as enabled a man in the position of Glyka to concoct and carry into effect his extensive frauds, the omission to examine the forged indorsements on the bills when periodically returned by the appellants, the non-observance of the omissions in the forged letters, which ought to have been noticed and so excited inquiry, and the amount of the forged acceptances, £6,000 in June, £19,000 in July, and over £15,000 and £16,000 in August and September, which ought also to have excited attention, amounted to conduct without which the loss would not have happened, and which so far conduced to the loss as to render the alleged rule applicable that where a loss has to fall upon one of two innocent parties, it ought to be held to fall upon the party conducing to it.

The appellants' case in this respect is, I think, a strong one, and deserving of great consideration, and, as I look upon their position as one of considerable hardship (for in any view of the case the forgeries by which they were deceived had been concocted and carried out by the respondents' servant, and, as I think, without such care and supervision on the respondents' part as I should like to have seen), I should have been well satisfied if, consistently with what I conceive to be the law, I could have held in their favour.

No doubt in one case, Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T.R. 70, Ashhurst, J., stated, as a broad general principle that whenever one of two innocent parties must suffer by the act of a third person, "he who has enabled such person to occasion the loss must sustain it."

But more recent decisions, and one of this House, of great importance, have either shown that this proposition is not to be understood in all its generality or cannot be supported; and this was very clearly pointed out in two cases which were not, I think, cited in argument (Arnold v. The Cheque Bank and Arnold v. The City Bank, 1 C. P. D. 568) by the judges constituting the Common Pleas Division, who, in a very careful judgment, reviewed all the authorities. It was an action by the drawer to recover the proceeds of a bill which had been received by the defendants upon a forged indorsement, and negligence affording facilities for the fraud was set up, and evidence in support of it tendered at the trial, but rejected by the Lord Chief Justice. There were several acts of alleged negligence relied upon, some of them of a similar character to some of those relied upon in the present case. In delivering the considered judgment of the court, consisting of the Lord Chief Justice and the now Lord Justice Lindley, and Archibald, J., the Lord Chief Justice said on the second and third points, "It was contended by the defendant that there was evidence of negligence in the custody and transmission of the draft by the plaintiffs, which afforded facilities for the forgery and fraud by which the defendants were induced to receive it, and that the evidence which was rejected would have shown an almost invariable custom for merchants in America remitting bills to correspondents in England to send another independent letter of advice either by the same or a subsequent mail, and that there were opportunities of sending such a letter by other vessels leaving on the same day as The Celtic, or on subsequent days which would have arrived in time to have enabled Messrs. Williams & Co., the indorsees, whose indorsement had been forged, in the event of their not having received the draft in due course, to have communicated with Smith, Payne, & Smith, either by letter or telegram, to have stopped payment. We are of opinion, however, that there was no evidence of negligence which could operate by way of estoppel to the plaintiffs. Reliance was placed by the defendants on the case of Young v. Grote. That case, no doubt, must be considered as well decided, but various opinions have been expressed as to the real ground of the decision. But we have only to look at the case itself to see that it really proceeded on the authority of the extract from Pothier cited in the judgment of Best, L.C.J., which makes the inability to recover depend upon the fault of the drawer of the cheque in the mode of drawing it, and is entirely consistent with the rule laid down and explained on fuller consideration in subsequent cases—viz., negligence, in order to estop, must be negligence in the transaction itself: see per Blackburn, J., in Swan v. North British Australasian Co.; indeed, in a later case, Bank of Ireland v. Evans' Charities, this is stated by Parke, B., himself to be the true ground of decision. The rule, which is expressed by Ashurst, J., in Lickbarrow v. Mason: 'We may lay it down as a broad, general principle that, whenever one of two innocent parties suffers by the act of a third person, he who has enabled one person to occasion the loss must sustain it,' was, though not expressly referred to, observed and acted on in Young v. Grote, and it has received illustration and explanation in subsequent cases on the subject, which show that the words enabling a person to occasion the loss' must be understood to mean by some act, conduct, or default in the very transaction in question: see Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Ex. 654. The correct rule seems to us to be that which is thus stated by Blackburn, J., in his judgment in Swan v. North British Australasian Co., where, referring to the judgment of Wilde, B., below, he says 'that he omits to qualify the rule (he had stated) by saying that the neglect must be in the transaction itself, and be the proximate cause of leading the party into that mistake; and also must be the neglect of some duty that is owing to the person led into that belief, or, what comes to the same thing, to the general public of whom that person is one, and not merely neglect of what would be prudent in respect to the party himself, or even of some duty owing to third persons with whom those seeking to set up the estoppel are not privy.' In the case of the Bank of Ireland v. Evans' Charities it was expressly held both that the negligence, in order to operate as an estoppel, must be negligence 'in or immediately connected with the transfer itself,' and, further, that it must also be 'the proximate cause of the loss.'"

The principle thus enunciated seems to me to be sound, and, applying it to the present case, I am unable to say that the conclusions arrived at by the learned judge who tried the cause and all the judges of the Court of Appeal are wrong, and I am of opinion, therefore, that both grounds urged by the appellants fail, and that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be affirmed.

Indeed, as has been observed by Lord Bramwell, in any view of this part of the case I cannot see how this objection can avail in respect of the earlier bills, which, up to the 14th of May, amounted to £3,000, and up to the 27th of June £6,000 more. Nothing is alleged to have been done or omitted, at all events at the first date, which could preclude the respondent from complaining of the prior payments.

Taking the view which I do of this case, it is unnecessary for me to advert to the alleged negligence of the bank in continuing to pay such large sums in cash over the counter, and not through a bank, further than to say that there is nothing in the evidence relating to the matter (which is very much in conflict), which, in my judgment, relieved the bank from their responsibility in respect of the payments complained of.

Judgment appealed from reversed, with costs here and below.

Solicitor for the appellants, Freshfield.

Solicitors for the respondents, Hollams, Son, & Coward.

Court of Appeal

From Q. B. Div. July 6.

TAWES v. KNOWLES. (a.)

Easement—Grant of adjoining tenements—Right of way—Unity of possession—Mortgage of servient tenement without reservation of right of way—Implied reservation—Reconveyance—Determination of right of way.

The owner of two adjoining tenements possessed a right of way from one tenement through the other. The right of way was not a way of necessity. Previous to the grant of these tenements to two respective grantees, the grantor had conveyed the servient tenement by way of mortgage without any reservation of the right of way. Subsequently, by will, the grantor devised the two tenements to the predecessors in title of the respective plaintiff and defendant. The defendant's predecessor paid off the mortgage, and took a reconveyance of all the interest of the mortgagee, and blocked up the passage creating the right of way.

Held, in an action to secure the original right of way, that, the plaintiff and defendant being both volunteers under the will, the plaintiff had no equity to deprive the defendant of what the defendant's predecessor had obtained by the reconveyance, which was not a mere release of a charge, but an estate larger than what the defendant's predecessor had acquired under the will of the testatrix.

Decision of the Queen's Bench Division (ante, p. 512) affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of a divisional court (A. L. Smith and Grantham, JJ.).

The facts sufficiently appear from the judgment of the court below (ante, p. 512).

Warrington, for the appellant, the plaintiff, contended that he was entitled to the right of way under the devise to him of 49, Churchway, as a continuous and apparent easement: Pyer v. Carter, 5 W. R. 371, 1 H. & N. 916; Brown v. Alabaster, 36 W. R. 155, 37 Ch. D. 490; Thomas v. Owen, 36 W. R. 440, 20 Q. B. D. 225. He could not claim the right of way as against the mortgagee, but he could as against everybody else, unless the mortgagee had foreclosed or sold the property: Wheeldon v. Burrows, 27 W. R. 165, 28 ibid. 196, 12 Ch. D. 31. The defendant did not derive her title through the mortgagee; she was the devisee of the mortgagor. In equity the mortgagor had an estate in the mortgaged property, not merely a right to redeem, and the testatrix by her will gave the plaintiff all she had power to give, including the right of way. The reconveyance did not put the defendant in the position of a purchaser for value of the legal estate; it was merely a release of the security, placing the parties in the same position as if the mortgage had never existed.

Baker, for the defendant, was not called upon.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

plied—the reasonable price—you cannot sue him upon the bond as bond, and Coke says if you sue him upon the bond as bond and try to bind him by the seal and nothing else, you cannot do it. But, he says, If the bond is a single bond—i.e., with nothing extra but the reasonable price for the things which have been supplied, and those things are necessaries, then you can sue him, and you can sue him on the bond.

Well, how sensible that is! If there was no bond you certainly could sue him for the price. Why should the law say, because it is a bond (which you are to consider in precisely the same way as you would if there were no bond) you cannot sue him. That would be the very height and essence of foolish technicality, and even in Coke's technical days it was disregarded at once, and there is his authority for saying so. Now what is the next case? You have what we all know to be a most valuable criticism and explanation of Coke next to his own—Hargrave's Notes—always considered by lawyers as of the utmost value, and he explains exactly, and in more modern language, what the distinction is. He is a great authority.

Now has this principle been acted upon? There is the case of Ayliffe v. Archdale, Cro. Eliz. 920, which is distinctly to the point. We find the case of Russel v. Lee, 1 Levinz's Rep. 86, relying upon this passage of Coke's. In these we have a strong judicial declaration of what the law was. Then we have, in Keane v. Boycott, 2 Hy. Bl. 512, the same passage cited with approval—a judicial declaration, therefore, that it is the law. Later on Bayley, J., in Baylis v. Dineley, 3 M. & S. 477, recognizes the law distinctly as laid down by Coke and gives it his approval; perhaps the decision on the point was not necessary, but it is a dictum of approval from Bayley, J., who is of the highest authority. Again, we find an elaborate exposition of the law by Martin, B., in Cooper v. Simmons, 10 W. R. 271, 7 H. & N. 719, giving there the authorities, relying upon Coke upon Littleton, 172a, and laying down the law positively, that the fact that an infant is sued upon a bond does not prevent you from recovering if the bond is a single bond, and you do not intend to rely upon it as a bond to the extent that you cannot inquire into the consideration or into the reasonableness of it.

Therefore, to my mind, it comes to this: that you can sue an infant upon a deed for necessaries; but when you do so you must treat the case as against an infant really as if there was no deed. That is how it seems to me to work out. You must treat it as if there were no deed. Therefore, you must see whether the things were supplied, in respect of which the money is sued for. You must consider what they were. You must consider whether they were necessaries subject to the ordinary definition of necessaries, and you must consider whether the price which is claimed in respect of them is reasonable. You must do everything which you would have to do if there were no deed, and which you must do although there is a deed, and although in all other cases of deed you would not have to do it.

Now, that being so, the next thing to consider is, what are necessaries? Food and clothing are always spoken of as necessaries under given circumstances—that is, if the infant cannot get them in any other way. Is education to be considered a necessary? Take it without authority, and say to oneself, Is education in trade, the education to a business in this commercial country of England, this working country of England, a necessary? Before, what I should call, literary education was thought as much of by citizens, education to a trade, to the means of earning a boy's own livelihood when he came to man's estate, and for the purpose of making him a useful citizen to his country by carrying on trade, must have been always thought of the greatest importance; and one would have expected to hear that to teach a boy a trade or a profession was always considered within the class of necessaries in England. Here, again, we have the authority of Coke in the very passage upon which he relied for the other point. He states there that education in trade—mind not education in classics, or education in poetry, or even a literary education—he does not speak of that education, he is talking as a lawyer and a man of business, and what he says is that to educate a young man in England to a trade by which he can earn his livelihood and do good to his country is a class of thing which may be a necessary. Therefore, here you come to it. That it is "a class of thing which may be a necessary." What would make it a necessary? If the boy could get, I suppose, the education which is wanted without going to the plaintiff for the sort of thing that is wanted, it may not be a necessary. Then you must look at the boy's condition in life. If we were to propose to put a young duke or marquis, or this or that person of leisure, to learn the trade of a shoemaker, we should say that must be a fancy and a luxury; he could not want it for a livelihood. But if you took a lad in a lower class of life, you would say that such an education was very good and very necessary. You would have to consider the boy's position in life in each case. Then if you come to something more than shoemaking, to what may be considered a higher trade, such as that of an auctioneer, valuer, and farmer, which this young man was apprenticed to learn, he is in a class of life which makes it reasonable that he should earn his livelihood by those three trades, or one of them; and, therefore, so far, it is reasonably necessary for him.

But that is not enough. The person who sues him has got to show that he supplied him with necessaries. Therefore, he has not only to show that he agreed to supply him with an education which may be a necessary if a jury think so; he must show that he did so supply him. Then he must go on to show that the price which he desires to charge is reasonable, and if it were not reasonable he could not recover it. But if he makes out all this, then he has brought himself within all the conditions which would entitle him to recover if there were no deed; and, according to the authorities I have cited, he is not prevented from suing, and suing upon the bond, if it is a single bond, and if it complies with these conditions. That is what the plaintiff has done here.

Well, those questions which go to show whether what he has supplied and what he professed to supply were necessary for the young man; whether he in fact supplied them; and whether the price which he charged in the bond, and which he proposes to charge now, were reasonable, are all questions of fact to be left to the jury. If they were properly left to the jury, and it cannot be said that the jury have answered them wrongly, then the plaintiff has made out his case.

It is said that the judge misdirected the jury here. In what did the misdirection consist? Mr. Gould complains that there was not a sufficient direction. That is a most difficult point to make out when you ask for a new trial. On that ground it has been often said, and particularly by Martin, B., that non-direction is not misdirection, unless it goes to the length of making what the judge has directed a misdirection. How can that be said in this case? We have read the questions which the judge left here. They seem to be questions which develop every point of the case, and, therefore, the only objection can be that the summing up was too short. I do not think that is a fault in a summing up. It is clear it deals with every point and deals with them clearly, but it has not, Mr. Gould says, sufficiently developed them. Well, a development which is a development by length very often mystifies people instead of keeping their minds clear. I can see no fault with the direction in this case.

Upon the facts as found, therefore, this verdict is a right verdict, properly procured by a right summing up; the verdict is for the plaintiff, and this appeal must be dismissed.

FRY, L.J.—This is an action upon an indenture of apprenticeship by which the defendant, an infant, contracted to serve his master for four years, and further, on attaining majority, to pay the sum of £300 as well as the sum of £200 which should be paid to the master for teaching the infant the trade of a farmer, valuer, and auctioneer.

Now one point raised upon this is the question whether or not this indenture was a reasonable and proper one, and the jury found that the arrangement was a necessary one for the defendant if he wished to learn the trades of auctioneer, valuer, and farmer, which apparently he did; and they found, further, that the deed of apprenticeship was a proper arrangement for the defendant to have entered into.

Now is there anything in the case which ought to lead us to say that the verdict was arrived at without evidence or against the weight of evidence? On the contrary, it seems to me to be a most reasonable and proper finding. The deed of apprenticeship has nothing remarkable about it, with one exception—i.e., the contract of the infant to pay part of the money, which is certainly an unusual circumstance. One usually finds that the father and friends of the infant pay it at once. But the circumstances of the present case are rather peculiar. There is an infant who is in expectation of receiving some £4,000 on attaining his majority—a small sum of money which I am afraid has led to his being idle during his apprenticeship—and his mother was not in a condition in which to find the whole of his premium. Nevertheless she was extremely desirous that he should be apprenticed to the plaintiff, who appears to have been a person who would advance his interests in life. I can find nothing in the apprenticeship deed which is objectionable. It is quite true it is unusual for a master to sue an infant upon a contract to pay any portion of the premium. That is because, as I have already observed, it is unusual for such a contract to be entered into.

Now the next question is this: Assume the deed to be a reasonable and proper one, can an action be maintained on a covenant to pay for it by the person who has done the service against the infant? The point seems to me really to turn entirely upon the passage in Coke upon Littleton which the Master of the Rolls has read. Coke having laid down the general proposition of the inability of an infant to bind himself, says there are some exceptions. "As an infant may bind himself to pay for his necessary meat, drinke, apparell, necessary physicke, and such other necessaries, and likewise for his good teaching or instruction, whereby he may profit himself afterwards; but if he binde himself in an obligation or other writing with a penalty for the payment of any of these, that obligation shall not bind him."

Now, in the first place, I desire to express my opinion that, with regard to teaching and instructions, although it includes the teaching and instruction of a trade or business, it is not necessarily confined to instruction in trade. I should be sorry for it to be supposed that a literary or scientific education, which might lead him to occupy a position of great respectability or emolument in any of the learned professions, may not come within the language of Coke. It would be a case then of "teaching or instruction whereby he might profit afterwards." The interests of the State as well as those of the individual require him to receive an education of a kind whereby he may profit.

I would next observe that the very language of Coke implies that it is upon a single covenant that an infant might be made responsible. It is quite true he does not say so in express words. Now that it was true that an infant might be sued upon a bond without a penalty is maintained by Hargrave's comment which has been alluded to. That comment is based upon distinct authorities, one in the reign of Charles I., and the other in the reign of Charles II. The first is Pickering v. Gunning, Palmer, 528, in which, referring to an earlier case in the reign of James I., Whittingham v. Hill, Cro. 16 Jac. I. 494, it was determined that a bond taken for necessaries of an infant was good. In Charles II.'s reign the same proposition was the basis of a judgment of the court in the case of Russell v. Lee, which was a case of a single bill, that is to say, upon an obligation without a penalty, and there it was held to be good. It is quite true that that was an action for necessaries and not for education, but it was already clear that education, whether it be or be not strictly a necessary, as likely to lead to the future profit of an infant, comes within the same rule of law. In fact, I think it must be admitted to be a necessary now after Pickering v. Gunning. That action was one against an infant for diet, lodging, washing, clothing, and schooling, and one of the judges declined to find with regard to schooling "quâ a necessary," to which another of the judges, Doddridge, J., replied in a somewhat quaint mixture of Norman French and Latin:—"Et coment schooling n'est necessary en primier degree al son esse, est en second al son bene esse, car est pur son profit. Car omne quod est utile est aliquande necessarium." Therefore there is no doubt at all that education is a necessary.

Those are the older authorities. As the Master of the Rolls has pointed out, there are also other cases, all of which insist upon the old law as being the present law. Therefore there seems to me to be no doubt whatever that upon a single bond or covenant an infant might bind himself to pay for his schooling and education, provided that the transaction is a reasonable one.

Now the only authority which can be presented in any way as creating any doubt with regard to this conclusion is the case of Gylbert v. Fletcher. That case is one which shows that, under an indenture of apprenticeship by which the apprentice covenanted to serve his master, on the covenant to serve, the master cannot sue. I ought to add that there is a subsequent decision in equity which shows that the same rule applies, and that no relief can be obtained in equity. Now the reason for this decision is not to be found in the decision itself. I have a strong suspicion that the case rests upon two facts, the one that by common law the master has got considerable powers of correction, and in a certain sense the custody of his apprentice, and therefore it is thought the enforcing of the obligation to serve might prejudice his right with regard to a negligent apprentice, and, secondly, that, by very early statutes power was given to justices of the peace to deal with recalcitrant apprentices, and it seems to me that it was thought to be better to leave to the master this power either of domestic correction or of haling the offender before the justices, rather than of suing upon his covenant. That case is, however, an exception to the general rule that an infant may be sued for a covenant to teach or instruct an apprentice when it is for his benefit, and does not affect the law as to the liability of an infant on a covenant to pay for his education.

It is said that the master did not do his duty in transferring the latter portion of the infant's time or services from the businesses of valuing and auctioneering to that of farming. I can see nothing whatever in the observation. It seems to me that this was a wise and reasonable thing when he found that the apprentice disliked auctioneering and valuing, and I think that the defendant is the only person who could blame himself in not having derived more benefit from these indentures than he did. On the other points I entirely agree with the Master of the Rolls.

LOPES, L.J.—I do not propose to cite the different authorities which have been mentioned. I shall be content with saying that a careful investigation of those authorities appears to me to establish this—namely, that an infant can be sued on his single bond—by which I mean a bond without a penalty—for necessaries, provided it is shown that what is sued for is a necessary, and the charge made for it is a reasonable charge. I believe that to be the result of the authorities, and I am satisfied with stating the law in that form.

The authorities also establish this: that education may in certain circumstances be a necessary. Whether it is a necessary will always be a question for a jury; and whether the particular kind of education is a necessary will also be a question for a jury. In determining whether it is a necessary, and in determining whether the particular kind of education is a necessary, the station of life, the means of the person in question, and all the circumstances of the case will have to be considered.

Now, that being so, I will apply the law as I understand it to the present case. It being clear that the infant can be sued upon his covenant in this case, the first question that had to be considered was this: whether the particular education which was provided for by this deed was a necessary? The jury had evidence before them with regard to the means of the young man, his position in life, and what was desired for him, and what it would be reasonable for him to do; and having that evidence before them (there is evidence both ways) they came to the conclusion, as I think they were fully justified in doing, that this particular education—viz., the education which would enable him to be a valuer, auctioneer, and farmer—was necessary for him. A great deal was said by Mr. Gould in regard to this triple kind of education, these three kinds of lines which he was to follow—auctioneering, valuing, and farming. I can see nothing unreasonable in that he would learn all those different things, and it would be for him in after life to determine which of them it would be most advantageous for him to follow. It was said by Mr. Gould that the auctioneering and valuing were relinquished and the farming was taken to, and that was a breach of the agreement by the master. I cannot agree with him at all in that. It seems to me a most reasonable thing. If this young man thought he had learned enough of the auctioneering and valuing, or did not care to follow those particular pursuits and preferred farming, it seemed to me to be a most reasonable thing on the part of the master to transfer the youth to the farming branch.

Another question that the jury had to consider—where again there was evidence both ways—was whether the amount of the premium that was to be paid was a reasonable one, and they came to the conclusion that it was. I think they were fully justified in that conclusion. There was evidence upon which they might so find. So far from thinking any conclusion they arrived at on this matter, or with regard to the necessity of the particular education in question, unreasonable, I do not hesitate to say that if I had been on the jury I should have formed the same opinion that they did.

The only one other observation which I desire to make is that the decision in this case does not in any way militate with the decisions which have been brought to our notice with respect to a breach of contract on the part of the apprentice to serve, such as Gylbert v. Fletcher and other cases. In my opinion there was no fault to be found with the direction of the judge, and there was evidence upon which the jury were justified in finding as they did. I think, therefore, this motion should be dismissed.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—I do not mean at all to differ from what Fry, L.J., has said about the education. It is not merely education for a trade. I did not mean to exclude all other education.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Torr & Co., for Andrew & Trotter, Lincoln.

Solicitors for the respondent, Page & Scorer, Lincoln.

From Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. March 24.

MICHELL v. MICHELL. (a.)

Married woman—Restraint on anticipation—Restitution of conjugal rights—Settlement of wife's property for husband's benefit—Jurisdiction—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68), s. 3.

The court has no jurisdiction under section 3 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, to order a settlement to be made on the husband of property of the wife which is subject to a restraint against anticipation.

Swift v. Swift, 15 P. D. 118, [1891] P. 129, 38 W. R. Dig. 86, explained.

Norris v. Norris, 6 W. R. 640, 27 L. J. P. & M. 72, approved.

Appeal from Jeune, J.

The husband, the present respondent, had obtained a decree against his wife, the present appellant, for a restitution of conjugal rights, and the wife had refused to obey this decree.

The husband then applied, under section 3 of 47 & 48 Vict. c. 68, for a settlement of the wife's separate property for the benefit of himself.

Prior to her marriage with the present respondent, the whole of the wife's property was settled on trust to pay the income to the wife for her separate use without power of anticipation, and after her death on trust, as to part of the capital, for the children of the wife by a former husband, and as to the rest of the capital on trust for the children of the second marriage, and, in default of such children, on trust for the children of the first marriage.

Jeune, J., overruled an objection taken on behalf of the wife that the court had no jurisdiction to deal with the wife's property which was subject to a restraint against anticipation, and he directed a settlement to be made under which a portion of the wife's income was to be paid to the husband.

The wife appealed.

Inderwick, Q.C., Bankes, and Lewis Thomas, for the appellant.—There is no power to interfere with existing marriage settlements except in cases where the marriage is put an end to: Norris v. Norris, 6 W. R. 640, 27 L. J. P. & M. 72; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 45; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5; 47 & 48 Vict. c. 68, s. 3. A married woman cannot by any conduct on her part put an end to the fetter against anticipation: Hyde v. Hyde, 36 W. R. 708, 13 P. D. 166; In re Glanvill, 34 W. R. 309, 31 Ch. D. 532; In re Andrews, 34 W. R. 62, 30 Ch. D. 159; In re Keane, 19 W. R. 1025, L. R. 12 Eq. 115. In Swift v. Swift, 15 P. D. 118, [1891] P. 129, 38 W. R. Dig. 86, the final order did not necessarily interfere with property subject to a restraint on anticipation.

(a.) Reported by M. J. BLAKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Bayford, Q.C., and Vesey Fitzgerald, for the respondent.—There is nothing in Swift v. Swift to show that the order was confined to property not subject to a restraint against anticipation.

They also cited Seatle v. Seatle, 30 L. J. P. & M. 216, 9 W. R. Div. Dig. 18.

LINDLEY, L.J.—The appeal must be allowed. The question is an important one in consequence of the frequency of clauses against anticipation inserted in marriage settlements. The history of the legislation on the subject makes it, to my mind, impossible to uphold the decision of Jeune, J.

There are three Acts of Parliament which we have to consider. The first is the Act of 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), which applies, not only to divorces, but to judicial separations in which the wife continues to be a wife; and section 45 enacts: [The Lord Justice read the section, and continued:—] That section was judicially considered in Norris v. Norris, and, as I understand that decision, it was this, that the court could not, under that section, alter an existing marriage settlement, and could not deprive a wife of the protection enjoyed by her under a clause restraining her from anticipation. It is quite obvious that you do alter the settlement if you strike out that clause, or if you override it, or do anything whatever which frees the married woman from the fetter which is imposed by that clause. This being the interpretation put on the language of the section, and the power of the court being fettered, and, as the Legislature thought, unduly fettered, the power of the court was enlarged, in 1859, by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, and enlarged by terms which, it is agreed on all hands, enables the court, in cases falling within section 5 of that Act, to override clauses against anticipation. But observe that that enlarged power is only given where a wife ceases to be a wife—viz., after a final decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage; and when, therefore, according to the ordinary doctrines of the Court of Chancery, she would be free from the restraint against anticipating her income.

Now we come to the third Act, the 47 & 48 Vict. c. 68, which is the Act we have to deal with here. This Act applies where there has been an order for restitution of conjugal rights—i.e., where the wife does not cease to be a wife, but, on the contrary, remains as much a wife as ever; and in that case it is very curious to observe that the Legislature has adopted, not the wider language of the Act of 1859, but the narrow language of the Act of 1857.

We cannot, consistently with the ordinary principles which guide us in interpreting Acts of Parliament, hold that this Act does more than was done under the first Act. We cannot say that, having regard to the history of this legislation, the court has power to vary the settlement in this sense—namely, to strike out of it that clause which restrains the wife from anticipation, or to make her make a settlement which is inconsistent with the continued existence of that clause.

When we come to the authorities they will be found, subject to what I shall say as to Swift v. Swift, to be perfectly consistent with that view. Seatle v. Seatle is certainly not inconsistent with it, because in that case I cannot find that there was any clause restraining anticipation; and it is quite obvious, to my mind, that when a married woman has a life income which she can do what she likes with, and can assign and incumber, the court has power to make her resettle that, and make her do what it wishes. Seatle v. Seatle, therefore, does not throw any light on the question. Swift v. Swift does, and I cannot understand Swift v. Swift except in one way. I think that when Butt, J., made the first order in that case he was under the impression, as his language shows, that if the wife had the income, it did not much matter whether it was under a fetter or not; but when we pursue that case to see what was done, we find that finally nothing was done inconsistent with the view which I now take, because in Swift v. Swift the wife had two incomes: she had an income of £300 a year, which she was free to do what she liked with during her life; she had also an income of £500 a year, as to which she was restrained from anticipation. The final order was that she should make a settlement of something under £300 a year—an order which could be complied with consistently with the existence of the clause restraining her from anticipation. So that when we come to look at Swift v. Swift from first to last we do not find that any order was there made which was inconsistent with the view which I have been compelled to take of this Act of Parliament. It does not appear that Jeune, J., was acquainted with the final order in Swift v. Swift. His observations are based on the judgment of Butt, J., in the early part of that litigation—the subsequent order throws a great deal of light upon it.

I can, therefore, find no case which is really inconsistent with the view I am expressing; but, on the other hand, there are cases which are consistent with that view, and which I do not think are consistent with any other view. I mean the decisions in the sequestration case of Hyde v. Hyde and In re Glanvill, which go the whole length of saying that the court had no power, except, indeed, under the Conveyancing Act, which does not apply here, to do anything to deprive the wife of the protection which is thrown around her by clauses of this description. The appeal must be allowed.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. We must recollect that after the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85 had been passed, which contained a section in pari materia, and in very similar language to this, the case of Norris v. Norris was decided, by which the court refused to alter the marriage settlement, and said that language like that gave the court no power to alter it; and, further, that by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61 power was given to the court expressly to do that, in a limited class of cases only, where nullity or dissolution of marriage had been decreed. When, therefore, we find the third Act of Parliament, 47 & 48 Vict. c. 68, going back to the language of the first Act, when dealing with a class of cases which are not cases of nullity or dissolution of marriage, but where the marital tie still exists, it would be doing violence to all the rules of construction to suppose that we ought to place upon the language of the last Act any other construction than that which was placed upon the same language by the court in Norris v. Norris.

That such was, in fact, the construction placed by Norris v. Norris upon the first Act seems plain when we refer to the case, and especially by the light which was shed upon it by the note in the report (27 L. J. P. & M., at p. 73), which cites Tourle v. Tourle, a case decided before Lord Campbell in the Appeal Court on the 13th of May, 1858, in which Lord Campbell again says: "The point has been considered, and the court are of opinion they have no power to alter marriage settlements." That is, therefore, the way in which the law stands upon the Act of Parliament alone. But I think, besides that, there is every reason for supposing that the Act of Parliament may have been designedly intended to do something short of enabling the separate property of a married woman, where there was a fetter upon anticipation, being brought within the purview of that section. It is contrary to the principles of this court, and of any court in this kingdom which deals with a woman's property (unless the statute has expressly given them power), that a woman should be enabled by her own conduct to discharge herself from the fetter imposed by the restraint upon anticipation of her income. That has been pointed out in case after case—as, for example, in In re Glanvill, and in the Court of Appeal in Hyde v. Hyde, where the court refused to allow a sequestration to issue although a married woman was in contempt.

As to the other authorities cited—viz., Seatle v. Seatle and Swift v. Swift—very clear observations have been made upon them by my learned brother, and I say nothing more.

KAY, L.J.—It seems to me that the legislation in matrimonial cases is not only perfectly consistent in all the three Acts which have been cited, but that it is very reasonable, and evidently very carefully and cautiously worded.

The first Act applies either to a case of dissolution of marriage or to a case of judicial separation, and in either case it gave power to the court to make a settlement for the benefit of the husband and children, where the wife was in fault, of property of the wife. But it did not refer in any way to marriage settlements or to altering marriage settlements.

Then came the case of Norris v. Norris, where the language of the judges is very shortly reported, but which was a case in which, having decreed dissolution of marriage, Lord Campbell, then presiding in the Matrimonial Court, after consideration, declared that "as regards marriage settlements we think we have no power to deal with them in any way." We have not got the facts of that case before us very completely, but it is obvious from the language, that what the court was asked to do was in some way to interfere with the marriage settlement. Therefore, I have come to the conclusion that it was a case in which the wife was under the marriage settlement restrained from anticipation, and the court was asked, notwithstanding that restraint, to deal with the interest which she had under the marriage settlement. That very probably is so. But whether that was so or not, then came the second Act, the Act of 1859, which did not apply to a case where the vinculum of matrimony remained, but where it was broken; and it provided that where there was an absolute dissolution of marriage, the court in that case, and in that case only, might deal with the marriage settlement and alter it for the benefit of the former husband and children.

Then came the third Act, which does not deal at all with the case of dissolution of marriage, but deals with a case in which there has been an order for restitution of conjugal rights, or where there is an application for restitution of conjugal rights by the husband, and there the court is empowered, not to interfere with the marriage settlement, but, adopting the language of the first Act, it is empowered to make a settlement out of the property of the wife.

Therefore, it seems to me, as I have said, that the Legislature has very carefully limited the power of interfering with marriage settlements to the sole case where a dissolution of marriage has been decreed. Accordingly, in this present case, there having been no dissolution of marriage, but it being a case of decree for restitution of conjugal rights, the court has no power whatever to interfere with the marriage settlement.

I have no doubt, from the language of Jeune, J., that he felt the difficulty, and only thought that he was bound by the decision of Swift v. Swift; but whether the original language of Butt, J., meant that he had power to interfere with the marriage settlement or not, it is clear that the final order made in that case by Hannen, P., was one which did not, or need not, interfere in any way with the marriage settlement, because the only amount directed to be settled might have been supplied out of funds to which the wife was entitled, and in respect of which there was no restraint upon anticipation at all. Hannen, P., determined that all the court would do under the Act of 1884 was to direct a settlement to be made, and he directed a settlement to be made of so much of the wife's income. Now that settlement could perfectly have been made without in the least degree interfering with the income as to which the married woman was restrained from anticipation. It is impossible, therefore, to treat Swift v. Swift as being a decision that the court had, under the Act of 1884, any power to alter a marriage settlement by settling that part of the wife's property as to which she is restrained from anticipation. If it did so decide, I confess, from my view of this Act, I should be entirely unable to agree with it.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Ingram, Harrison, & Ingram.

Solicitors for the respondent, Day & Cather.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. North, J. — June 25.

In re CRAWSHAY.
WALKER v. CRAWSHAY. (a.)

Settlement—Forfeiture—Life interest—Proviso for cesser on alienation—Agreement to settle—Settlement pursuant thereto.

By an agreement for a settlement made in contemplation of marriage, C. agreed that, after the marriage should have been solemnized, a settlement should be executed, whereby any moneys and property which he should receive and be entitled to under the will of his mother, should be settled in trust for his wife for life, then for himself for life, then for the children of the marriage. The marriage took place, and a settlement was subsequently executed pursuant to the agreement. The mother, having under her father's will a power to appoint a sum of money among her children, appointed by will a part thereof, to be held upon trust for C. for his life, subject to a proviso for the cesser of his life interest if he should at any time assign, charge, or otherwise dispose of it, or attempt so to do.

Held, that the agreement and settlement did not apply to the life interest of C., which he was incapable of assigning, and that the forfeiture intended to be avoided had not taken place.

(a.) Reported by ARTHUR LAWRENCE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Originating summons.

The question to be determined was whether the defendant Codrington Fraser Crawshay had, by virtue of an agreement made in contemplation of his marriage, or the settlement made in pursuance of it, so assigned or otherwise dealt with his interest in a sum of £15,000 New Consols as to cause a forfeiture of all interest therein, under a proviso in his mother's will.

By his will, dated the 21st of October, 1865, William Crawshay bequeathed the sum of £150,000 £3 per Cent. Consolidated Annuities to trustees upon trust to pay the dividends to his daughter, Jessy Crawshay, during her life for her sole and separate use, and after her decease upon trust, as to the capital, for such child or children of his said daughter Jesse as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of such appointment, upon trust for all and every the children of his said daughter, in equal shares.

The testator also bequeathed a further sum of £10,000 to his said daughter Jesse, to be paid to the trustees of the above-mentioned legacy, upon the same trusts as the above-mentioned legacy.

William Crawshay died on the 4th of August, 1867.

By an agreement for a settlement dated the 28th of September, 1881, and made between Codrington Fraser Crawshay of the first part, Emily Howard Cartland of the second part, and George Howard Cartland and John Howard Cartland of the third part, after reciting that a marriage was intended shortly to be solemnized between Codrington Fraser Crawshay and Emily Howard Cartland, and that C. F. Crawshay was entitled on the death of his mother, Jessee (sic) Crawshay, under a settlement made upon her marriage, to a sum of £5,000 or thereabouts, and might also become possessed of or entitled to other property and moneys under her will, it was witnessed that it was mutually declared and agreed between the parties thereto that when conveniently might be after the solemnization of the intended marriage, or immediately upon a request in writing being made after the solemnization of the intended marriage, an indenture of settlement should be made and executed whereby the said sum of £5,000, "and any further moneys and property which the said Codrington Fraser Crawshay should receive and be entitled to under the will of his said mother Jessee Crawshay as aforesaid," should be conveyed, surrendered, settled, assigned, and assured upon trust for Emily Howard Cartland for her life for her separate use, and after her decease for Codrington Fraser Crawshay for his life, and after his decease for the children of the intended marriage

The marriage between Codrington Fraser Crawshay and Emily Howard Cartland took place on the 29th of September, 1881.

By her will, dated the 29th of January, 1885, Jessy Crawshay appointed that "the principal sum of £15,000 Consolidated Annuities, part of the said trust fund"—which represented the said sums of £150,000 £3 per Cent. Consolidated Annuities and £10,000 over which she had the power of appointment under her father's will as set forth above, should be held upon trust that the trustees or trustee thereof should, subject to a proviso thereinafter contained, pay the dividends and annual income thereof to her son Codrington Fraser Crawshay during his life, and after his death upon trust for his children, as he should by deed or will or codicil appoint, and in default of appointment, upon trust for all or any of his children who, being a son or sons, should attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being a daughter or daughters, should attain that age or marry, such children, if more than one, to take in equal shares as tenant in common. Then there followed a proviso to this effect: "Provided and I appoint and declare that if my said son Codrington Fraser Crawshay shall at any time or times assign, charge, or otherwise dispose of in the way of anticipation the annual income hereinbefore directed to be paid to him during his life, or any part thereof, or by any deed or writing attempt so to do, or shall become bankrupt, or shall have done or committed, or shall hereafter do or commit, any act or thing, or suffer or become subject to any process or circumstances, whether voluntary or involuntary on his part, by reason or in consequence of which the said annual income, if belonging to him absolutely, or any part thereof, would become legally payable to any other person or persons, then and in either of the said cases his life interest shall cease as if he were dead, the subsequent trusts herein declared of the said principal sum of £15,000 being accelerated, and the said annual income during the remainder of his life, if there shall be no one absolutely entitled to the principal from which the same shall be derived, being paid to or applied for the benefit of the person or persons for the time being presumptively entitled to such principal, according to their respective interests therein."

On the 9th of October, 1885, a settlement was executed in pursuance of the agreement of the 28th of September, 1881.

Jessy Crawshay died on the 17th of July, 1889, and her will was proved in the principal registry on the 7th of August following.

The plaintiffs were the present trustees of a sum of £15,000 New Consols (representing the sum of £15,000 £3 per Cent. Consolidated Annuities).

The defendants were the said Codrington Fraser Crawshay and the two (infant) children of the marriage.

G. Murray, for the plaintiffs.

Bramwell Davis, for Codrington Fraser Crawshay.—(1) The money in question does not come to Mr. Crawshay under his mother's will at all, but under his grandfather's, and so it is not caught by the agreement or settlement. (2) Assuming it does come to him under his mother's will, the agreement does not include life interests. (3) Even if it would include life interests, at any rate it does not include one which was to cease on any attempt to assign it.

He cited Brooks v. Keith, 9 W. R. 565, 1 Dr. & Sm. 462 (see p. 466); In re Allnutt, Pott v. Brassey, 31 W. R. 469, 22 Ch. D. 275; Davidson's Prec. Conv., 3rd. ed., vol. 3, pt. 1, p. 200 n.; Coventry v. Coventry, 11 W. R. 868, 32 Beav. 612; Ewart v. Ewart, 1 W. R. 466, 11 Hare, 276; White v. Briggs, 22 Beav. 176; Scholfield v. Spooner, 32 W. R. 910, 26 Ch. D. 94.

Reginald Winslow, for the infant defendants.—The property is not within the covenant. (See judgment of Cotton, L.J., in Scholfield v. Spooner; Hurst v. Hurst, 21 Ch. D., per Fry, J., at p. 286; Vaizey on Settlements, I., 254.)

NORTH, J.—The first point taken in this case was that the covenant in the agreement for a settlement does not include the £15,000 in question, or the life interest in it, on the ground that it was not money received to which the husband was entitled under his mother's will; it being said it was only in exercise of a power contained in her will, the power being to say how the money coming under another will (that of the grandfather) was to go. But it was an exercise by her of a special power, and if she had not exercised that special power by her will this £15,000 would not have gone this way at all; it would have passed in default of appointment and been outside the case. It is not the case of the mother exercising a general power, but it is a special power; and in my opinion it is clear it came under her will, because, if she had not made such a will, the £15,000 would never have come in this channel at all.

Then two other points are taken. It is said that the terms of the agreement for settlement are not such as to include life interests; and, secondly, that, even if they would, at any rate they do not include a life interest which can only continue till the covenant comes into play and then cease to exist, and therefore nothing can pass under it. I do not think it necessary to deal with the first of those two questions, because, assuming that a life interest would pass under such an agreement, I do not think that a life interest that is killed by the agreement at its birth does pass at all. The proper thing to do is, I think, first of all, to look at the agreement for a settlement and see what that says. It is an agreement for a settlement made upon a marriage. It recites the marriage is intended, and then it recites that the husband is entitled to certain property, and may become possessed of other property and money under the will of his mother. Then the agreement is that he will, upon a certain request, execute a settlement. "In consideration of the intended marriage and for making some provision for his intended wife and the issue of the marriage, it is agreed that he will upon request execute a settlement whereby any moneys and property which he shall receive and be entitled to under the will of his mother shall be settled upon certain trusts, being for his wife for life, first remainder to him for life, afterwards to the children of the marriage, with remainders over."

In my opinion, that is intended to secure for the persons to be benefited under the settlement some things that they would not have but for the existence of it; in other words, it is intended to make a settlement upon them, and I do not think that its intention, or that its scope, is to do anything more than secure for them anything that came under it—anything that legitimately comes within its terms. But the contention is, that the effect of executing it is, not only not to give the wife and children anything under the agreement, but actually to destroy the interests of the husband in another fund, which the wife and other persons interested under the agreement for a settlement cannot get in any way by virtue of that agreement. I do not think that is the scope and object of the agreement at all. The agreement is to secure what can be secured for the parties interested, but not to affect interests outside the agreement, or prejudice them when the so prejudicing them will do no good whatever to the persons interested under the agreement in question. In my opinion, therefore, it is intended to give and secure to the beneficiaries under the settlement whatever they can get, but when it has done that its object is at an end, and it is not intended to destroy or divert an interest which cannot be diverted of the beneficiaries under the intended settlement. In my opinion, therefore, the settlement does not apply to the interest of the husband which he is incapable of assigning, and I think it would be clear in principle, though I am glad to find two of the cases cited in my opinion point to the same direction, and particularly that Chitty, J., took the same view in In re Allnutt, Holt v. Brassey, and I am glad to have his concurrence expressed there in the view that I take.

Then we come to the will itself, and it is said we must look at the will and see if the interest has come to an end. The will provides that Mr. Crawshay is to have the interest of the £15,000 for his life, subject to these words at the end:—"If my son shall at any time or times assign, charge, or otherwise dispose of." Perhaps it is wrong to say it was given to him for life, because the direction is to pay the dividends and annual income to my son during his life, and after his death upon trust for the children, subject to this proviso which follows, which is:—"That if my son shall at any time assign, charge, or otherwise dispose of in the way of anticipation the annual income hereinbefore directed to be paid to him during his life, or any part thereof, or by any deed or writing attempt so to do, or become bankrupt, or commit anything whereby by reason or in consequence of which the annual income, if belonging to him absolutely, or any part thereof, would become legally payable to any other person or persons, then and in either of the said cases his life interest shall cease as if he was dead, the subsequent trusts being accelerated."

What is the meaning of that? It is this. She intends he shall take the interest of the fund in question in such a way that it shall not be capable of alienation at all. It is not her desire that it shall be forfeited in a particular event; it is that it shall be secured to him in a particular event, and, in order to secure it to him, the object is that he is to be incapacitated from doing anything by which, if he takes an absolute interest during his life, there will be any portion of his life in which some person who is not an object of the trust created by her will will be receiving the income. That really is the object to which this clause of forfeiture, as it is called, is addressed. It is to confine the fund to the persons whom the testatrix intends to be the recipients of it, and to prevent any outsider ever becoming entitled in any way to the fund. Well, that will be accomplished if it is so construed as to prevent the agreement to do what he could not do being fatal to the gift, and, in my opinion, the true construction is that, inasmuch as nothing has been done by which the right to receive the income of this fund can be forfeited, the forfeiture which she intends to avoid has not taken place.

Under the circumstances I am of opinion that the interest the son takes in the income of £15,000 is not divested or put an end to by the execution of this.

Solicitors, A. R. & H. Steele.

Chan. Div.
Kekewich, J. } June 5, 6, 8.

GRIGG v. NATIONAL GUARDIAN ASSURANCE CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Bill of sale—Registration—Pledge—Delivery order—Parol contract—Document essential to the transaction—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), ss. 3, 4—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 3, 8, 9.

The plaintiff, as owner of goods in a warehouse, subject to a charge of £100, agreed verbally with the defendants for a loan of £250 on the security of the goods. He also gave them a promissory note for £255 and a written agreement for payment of further interest. The £100 was paid off and the inventory of the goods handed to the defendants, the balance being paid to the plaintiff. The warehousemen refusing to transfer the goods till their charges were paid, the plaintiff gave the defendants an order on the warehousemen for the delivery of the goods on payment of their charges. The defendants paid the charges, and the goods were transferred into their names in the warehouse books, the plaintiff giving them a promissory note for the amount of the charges and a written agreement for further interest.

(a.) Reported by H. C. ROPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the transaction was one of pledge, and was not affected by the Bills of Sale Acts.

Motion.

This was a motion to restrain the defendants from selling certain furniture and effects, the property of the plaintiff, and for an account. The question was whether the transaction amounted to the giving by the plaintiff of a bill of sale which ought to have been in statutory form and registered.

In May, 1890, the plaintiff was the owner of these goods, which were warehoused at Messrs. Taylor & Sons' Repository, subject to a charge of £100 and interest in favour of Messrs. Attenborough. On the 11th or 12th of that month he applied to the defendant company for a loan of £250 for fourteen days on the security of the goods, and this was agreed to on condition that the goods were transferred into the name of the secretary of the company, Mr. T. J. Bourne. The plaintiff also gave the defendants a promissory note for £255 payable fourteen days after date, and an agreement for payment of interest in case of default. Part of the £250 was paid to Messrs. Attenborough, who thereupon gave the inventory of the goods to the defendants.

Messrs. Taylor & Sons refused to transfer the goods until their charges were paid, and the plaintiff gave the defendants an order addressed to Messrs. Taylor & Sons as follows: "Deliver to Mr. Thomas James Bourne or his order all property warehoused with you in my name on payment of your charges."

The defendants paid these charges and the goods were transferred in the warehouse books into the name of their secretary. The plaintiff then gave the defendants a promissory note for £30 15s., payable fourteen days after date, for the warehousing charges, and an agreement for payment of further interest in case of default. Both promissory notes, both agreements, and the delivery order were dated, and the £250 lent on, the 12th of May, 1890.

The plaintiff did not make the necessary payments, and after some correspondence the goods were in the beginning of May, 1891, removed by the defendants' orders from Taylor & Sons' warehouse to an auctioneer's premises for immediate sale.

Minton Senhouse, for the motion.—The agreement was, in fact, for a bill of sale, and ought to have been in writing in the statutory form and registered. The only document here is the delivery order, which is not in proper form and cannot be registered. The bill of sale is therefore void. The transaction was not one of pledge. Possession of the goods was not at once transferred by the delivery order, it was only to be transferred on the occurrence of a future event. The delivery order is essential to their title, and the contract was not complete without it: Bills of Sale Act, 1878, ss. 3, 4; Bills of Sale Act, 1882, ss. 3, 8, 9; Ex parte Close, 33 W. R. 228, 14 Q. B. D. 386; Ex parte Parsons, 34 W. R. 329, 16 Q. B. D. 532; Ex parte Hubbard, 35 W. R. 2, 17 Q. B. D. 690; In re Cunningham & Co., 33 W. R. 387, 28 Ch. D. 682; Mills v. Charlesworth, 39 W. R. 1, 25 Q. B. D. 421.

Warmington, Q.C., and Dundas Gardiner, for the defendants.—The transaction was a parol agreement for a pledge, and the Bills of Sale Acts do not apply. The delivery order was not an assurance, and was not a necessary part of our title. Possession passed to us at the first, subject to the charges of Attenborough and Taylor & Sons, although the custody of the goods remained the same. We obtained the delivery order to satisfy Taylor & Sons, but our title was complete without it. The transaction was a "transfer of goods in the ordinary course of business" within section 4 of the Act of 1878. That section also excepts "orders for the delivery of goods": Reed on the Bills of Sale Acts, 8th ed., p. 41; Hilton v. Tucker, 36 W. R. 762, 39 Ch. D. 669; Newlove v. Shrewsbury, 36 W. R. 835, 21 Q. B. D. 41; North Central Wagon Co. v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Co., 35 W. R. 443, 35 Ch. D. 191.

Minton Senhouse replied.

KEKEWICH, J.—The question for decision in this case is whether a charge in favour of the defendants on the plaintiff's goods is avoided by the Bills of Sale Acts. That is not the question apparently raised by the notice of motion, and no one reading the affidavit in support of the motion would suppose that it was the question intended to be raised on the motion. Mr. Senhouse, however, who has argued the case with tact and ability, has seen that this is the point which calls for decision. The circumstances are peculiar in this sense, that they are more or less distinguishable from every reported case, but yet they are such as must often have occurred and are likely to occur again. There is no necessity to recapitulate them, and I will therefore at once endeavour to apply to the facts the settled law. The following propositions I take to be established by the cases cited, but I must not be taken to consider that any one case establishes these propositions, nor, if I mention one case as an authority for a proposition, must it be taken that that is the only authority, as the cases overlap one another. First, the Bills of Sale Acts strike not at transactions, but at documents: North Central Wagon Co. v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Co. Secondly, if there be a document, it must be expressed in statutory form unless it fall within the statutory exceptions; it is no answer to say that it cannot be so expressed: Ex parte Parsons, In re Townsend. Thirdly, the Acts have no application to a pledge as distinguished from an assurance: Ex parte Hubbard, In re Hardwick, in which case Ex parte Close is quoted with approval. Fourthly, delivery, which is essential to a pledge, may be effected without a physical change of possession: Mills v. Charlesworth. Fifthly, the Acts have no application where the right to possession can be proved by parol evidence without reference to documents: Newlove v. Shrewsbury. Sixthly, if the right can be so proved, the co-existence of a document recording the transaction but not expressed in statutory form does not vitiate the transaction: Mills v. Charlesworth. It follows, to my mind, from these propositions that there is no document here which comes within the mischief of the Bills of Sale Acts. The delivery order is the only document, and it does not purport to contain the contract between the parties. So far as the goods were concerned the contract is by parol only. The agreements for payment of interest refer to payment of money, not to the security of the goods. The delivery order was the means of changing possession.

The owner had not personal possession of the goods, so he signed the delivery order as an authority to hand over possession to the pledgee. Handing over to the pledgee and holding on behalf of the pledgee are equivalent. When the delivery order had effected that, it had done all that was necessary. It is merely a record of the transaction completed and is therefore, not within the Bills of Sale Acts. It is said that unless that order had been signed the transaction would not have been completed, and being therefore an professional man. He was justified in doing, but what [illegible] was not to do. Under these circumstances, in a matter of professional life and death, this case is tried, and it is tried until nine o'clock at night, in the absence of witnesses, in the absence of counsel, in the absence of prosecuting counsel, and the only reason given was that that was the mode to preserve order in the court. All I can say is, that it placed the applicant in an immense disadvantage. Convictions followed, then the sentence is gone through, and as a matter of course, there is an application by the law officers, and without opposition the name of the applicant was removed from the roll. Twelve years have passed since then, and twice has application been made to replace this gentleman on the roll, on which applications the circumstances under which the conviction took place were not brought pointedly before the court. There is also a body of testimony which is most striking and is most favourable to the applicant, and no doubt is cast upon his present character as vouched to by his townsmen. We have, therefore, a man who has been for twelve years of his life, no doubt, before us, a body of evidence very strongly marked, that during the whole of that time he has conducted himself perfectly irreproachably. We have the fact that one important circumstance was never presented to the judge and jury, was never presented to the court, either in 1883 or in 1886 [illegible], and we have, further, that all the circumstances of the case are brought to our notice for the first time. Under all these circumstances, it is not conceivable that this court should allow this gentleman to be once replaced upon the rolls. I quite agree that this court ought not to be hastily asked, and that the court ought to be careful to guard the character of those who clothes with exceptional powers and responsibilities. If I thought there was not a strong case here for the reversal of this sentence, I would [illegible] it. I do not see that the applicant [illegible] blame, but, taking all these things together, I think his application should be granted, but on [illegible] by the applicant of all the costs of the application, as under two reasons, the Law Society [illegible] in bringing the matter before the court.

I [illegible] am of the same opinion. The [illegible] to [illegible] that the applicant was guilty of gross [illegible], and I think he maintains that was not [illegible] was the attempt to administer, not only that there was no criminality, but that the applicant was entirely innocent of anything wrong. Certainly, [illegible] with impaired confidence upon the [illegible] and I do not think that the [illegible] in 1883 that the accusation had [illegible] opportunity of being tested. He had [illegible] to [illegible], and, up to 1883, had not [illegible] to attempt to interfere with the verdict of the jury. The [illegible] to my reasons, in my mind, a very serious misgiving as to whether the accusation had [illegible], and we ought to give effect to that misgiving. I have not the slightest doubt that if our procedure permitted an application for a new trial in a criminal case, there would have been ample ground for the interference of the court in this case, thinking that a new trial should be had. I venture to repeat what I said in 1886, that the court has the power, even where it is proved, clearly that there has been a miscarriage against the accused, and, where the statement of a jury, based on good evidence has been offered, to restore a person to the position of confidence which he had previously in the community. A period of twelve years has gone since then, during which time the applicant has been able to satisfy us that he has been a good citizen, and I agree that e ought to be restored to the rolls on the terms of aying the costs of this application.

Application to restore to the rolls granted, on payment f the costs of the application.

Solicitor for the applicant, W. C. Clennell.

Solicitor for the Incorporated Law Society, E. W. Villiamson.

Court of Appeal

From Q. B. Div. June 16; July 21.

PELTON BROTHERS v. HARRISON. (a.)

Married woman—Separate estate—Restraint on alienation—Death of husband—Liability of widow for debts incurred during coverture—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-sections 2, 4.

A woman possessed of separate estate subject to a restraint on anticipation incurred a debt while under coverture. After the death of her husband judgment was recovered against her, and was limited to such of her separate property as was not subject to the restraint on anticipation. There being insufficient property to satisfy this judgment, application was made to appoint a receiver of the property which had been subject to the restraint.

Held, that the removal of the restraint by the death of the husband did not make such property liable.

Beckett v. Tasker, 19 Q. B. D. 7, 35 W. R. Dig. 96, affirmed.

Appeal from a judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (Denman and Wright, JJ.).

The following statement of facts is taken from the written judgment of the court:—

"A married woman incurred a pecuniary liability. At the time of incurring it she had separate property, as to some of which she was restrained from anticipation, but as to the rest, which was of substantial value, she was not. Her husband died in June, 1890. After his death she was sued upon the obligation contracted during the coverture, and judgment was obtained against her, which was drawn up in the form settled in Scott v. Morley, 36 W. R. 67, 20 Q. B. D. 120, at p. 132:—"It is adjudged that the plaintiff do recover £ and costs (to be taxed) against the defendant, such sum and costs to be paid out of her separate property as hereinafter mentioned, and not otherwise. And it is ordered that execution hereon be limited to the separate property of the defendant not subject to any restraint on anticipation, unless, by reason of section 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the property shall be liable to execution notwithstanding such restriction."

Execution was issued against her property, which had been separate during the coverture, and as to which she was not restrained from anticipation, but she had incumbered it so that only about £16 was recovered. The execution creditor then obtained ex parte an order for a receiver of the property of the married woman as to which, during the coverture, she had been restrained from anticipation.

This order was discharged by Lawrance, J., and an application to a divisional court to reverse his decision was dismissed, with costs.

The execution creditor appealed.

(a.) Reported by A. P. PERCEVAL KEEP, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

June 16.—Horne Payne, Q.C., and Gregson, in support of the appeal.

Butcher, contrà.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 20.—KAY, L.J. [after stating the facts, as above set out, continued:—] The question is whether under this judgment the property which the married woman was restrained from anticipating can be affected. The shortest answer is that the judgment expressly directs that there shall be no execution against such property, and, in my opinion, it is as completely excepted from the consequences of the judgment as if it had been specifically mentioned in it and stated to be excepted, because the married woman was restrained from anticipating it.

But we are invited to hold that this is not the meaning of that form of judgment, and that by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, it was intended to make liable property which could not be affected during the coverture by reason of the restraint on anticipation, if by her surviving her husband it becomes freed from that restraint.

In order to construe an Act of Parliament it was laid down long ago in Heydon's case, 3 Rep. 7b, that one of the most material things to consider is the state of the law before the Act, and the defect in that law which the Act was intended to remedy.

In 1880 the attention of the profession and the public had been called to the law with relation to the pecuniary obligations of married women by a decision of the Court of Appeal in Pike v. Fitzgibbon, 29 W. R. 551, 17 Ch. D. 454. It was there held, reversing the judgment of Malins, V.C., that the engagements of a married woman could only be enforced against so much of the separate estate to which she was entitled, free from any restraint on anticipation, at the time when the engagements were entered into, as might remain at the time when judgment was given against her; and that they could not be enforced against free separate estate to which she became entitled after the time of the engagements, nor against separate estate to which she was entitled at the time of the engagements, but which she was restrained from anticipating. In short, it was held in that case that only the property which at the time of the engagements sued on she could have assigned or charged by writing under her hand could be made liable under a judgment against her.

In that state of the law the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, was passed. It relates to married women, and to married women only. It does not relate to a woman who is not actually under coverture. It provides (section 1, sub-section 2) that a married woman shall be capable of entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of her separate property, and of suing and being sued either in contract or in tort, or otherwise in all respects as if she were a feme sole, and her husband need not be joined, and any damages or costs recovered against her in any such action or proceeding shall be payable out of her separate property, and not otherwise. By sub-section 4, "Every contract entered into by a married woman with respect to and to bind her separate property shall bind not only the separate property which she is possessed of or entitled to at the date of the contract, but also all separate property which she may hereafter acquire."

The property sought to be affected in this case was not acquired after the date of the engagement sued on, it was hers at that time, and it could not have been made liable during the coverture by reason of the restraint on anticipation.

The form of the judgment in Scott v. Morley recognizes what has never been disputed, that the statute makes no difference in this respect, but that property as to which she is restrained from anticipation, whether possessed by her at the time of the engagement or acquired afterwards, could not be made liable by any process: Harrison v. Harrison, 36 W. R. 748, 13 P. D. 180.

But it is argued that when the husband died this property was still separate property, and that by the death of the husband the restraint on anticipation was gone, and it may therefore be treated as separate property acquired upon the death of the husband.

The answer to this argument is, that there is no such thing as separate property of an unmarried woman. Separate property means property held separately from the husband. The ordinary words of settlement are in trust for the wife "for her sole and separate use, independently of her husband and of his debts, control, and engagements," and the words "separate use" or "separate property" are merely a short mode of expressing the effect of that provision.

By section 2 of the Act all property of a woman who marries after the date of it becomes upon her marriage her separate property. Therefore, if this argument were to prevail, it would follow that any property whatever acquired by a woman after the death of her husband since this Act would be her separate property, because it would become so if she should marry again; and, indeed, that the property of every unmarried woman is separate property because it will become so on her marriage. That is precisely the effect in equity of a trust for the separate use of a woman. Such a trust is completely inoperative while she is discovert, but it becomes effective the moment she marries, and continues so during any coverture or any number of successive covertures.

It may be argued that if this is so, it follows that the separate property of a married woman which might, during the coverture, be made liable for her engagements, as it ceases to be separate property upon her husband's death, could not be made liable after that event. In my opinion that does not follow. Such property, if according to the language of the Act the contract of the married woman did "bind" it during the coverture, could not become free from the possible obligation by its ceasing to be separate property on the death of her husband. It was property which the creditor could have attached during the coverture. His right or power of attaching it did not cease because it was no longer separate property.

This was so held when the wife died before the husband and her free separate property devolved upon him. Judgment was given against him as her representative in the form settled in Scott v. Morley, partly because of the language of the Act that her contract bound that property, but also by reason of section 23, which imposed upon her representative in respect of her separate estate the same liabilities as she would have had if living: Surman v. Wharton, ante, p. 416, [1891] 1 Q. B. 491. The argument, however, was mainly founded on the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Jay v. Robinson, 38 W. R. 550, 25 Q. B. D. 467. A woman was divorced. After the divorce she became entitled to a chose in action. She married again in 1889. Without any settlement under section 2 of the Act that chose in action would have become her separate property upon her second marriage. But by a deed of settlement in contemplation of that second marriage that chose in action was settled in trust to pay the income thereof during the joint lives of the husband and wife to the wife for her separate use without power of anticipation. Subsequently the chose in action was reduced into possession by the payment of £5,000 to the trustees of the new settlement. A judgment had been recovered against her during her former coverture substantially in the form in Scott v. Morley, and the Court of Appeal, giving a liberal construction to section 1, sub-section 4, of the Act of 1882, held that "separate property which she may thereafter acquire," included separate property acquired upon a subsequent coverture, and a receiver was therefore appointed in respect of this £5,000.

There were two questions of difficulty in that case—(1) Whether the obligation of the married woman contracted during the former coverture is a debt contracted before marriage within the meaning of sections 13 and 19, or whether those words refer only to debts properly so called—that is, debts contracted by an unmarried woman; and (2) whether "separate property which she may thereafter acquire" includes separate property acquired during a second or other subsequent coverture. The Court of Appeal decided both these questions in favour of the creditor.

But that case did not decide that the £5,000 dealt with in it could have been attached under the judgment if she had not married again.

It is argued that unless it could, the law on this subject is in a very anomalous condition. But if it be so, that is a matter rather for the consideration of the Legislature than of this court.

If the argument in this case were to prevail, I do not see how to avoid the conclusion that all property acquired by a woman after the death of her husband, whether settled to her separate use or not, could be made liable under a judgment obtained against her before the death of her husband under this section 1, sub-section 4, of the statute, which does not profess to make liable anything except the "separate property" which a married woman may thereafter acquire. In my opinion the mischief which this section of the Act was intended to remedy was that pointed out by the decision in Pike v. Fitzgibbon, where it was held that separate property acquired during coverture after the date of the engagement sued on could not be reached under a judgment against the married woman. It was intended to make such after-acquired separate property liable to execution, but not any property acquired by her when not under coverture, nor any property, though separate property, as to which during coverture she was restrained from anticipation. It does not enable a married woman who has no separate property at the time to bind herself by a contract or engagement: Palliser v. Gurney, 35 W. R. 760, 19 Q. B. D. 519, approved in Stogdon v. Lee, ante, p. 467, [1891] 1 Q. B. 661. Nor does it enable her if she has separate property to bind herself except in respect of that separate property and any other which she may thereafter acquire. The point was decided in the same way in Beckett v. Tasker, 19 Q. B. D. 7.

The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

LOPES, L.J., concurred in this judgment.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Child, for Streeter, Croydon.

Solicitors for the defendant, Mear & Fowler.

From Q. B. Div. July 3.

MOUL AND ANOTHER v. GROENINGS. (a.)

Copyright—Musical composition—Foreign copyright—Protection in United Kingdom—"Subsisting and valuable rights or interests arising from or in connection with" the prior "lawful production" of foreign compositions in the United Kingdom—International Copyright Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 33), ss. 6, 11—Order in Council of the 6th of December, 1887.

A bandmaster who has purchased and lawfully produced in England, by means of his band, a piece of music by a foreign composer, before the date of the Order in Council making the International Copyright Act, 1886, applicable to England, has acquired a subsisting and valuable right or interest in the production within the meaning of the proviso in section 6 of that Act, and cannot be restrained by the proprietors of the foreign composition from the further production of it.

Appeal from the decision of the Queen's Bench Division, affirming the judgment of the Brighton County Court.

The plaintiff, Mayeur, for whom the plaintiff Moul was the English representative and agent, was a French subject, and in the year 1877 composed and first produced in Paris a piece of music called "The Caprice Polka," which was duly registered in France and obtained the protection of the Copyright Acts in that country. He did not protect it in this country.

In March, 1887, an English publisher named Lafleur printed and published this polka in England.

The defendant, a bandmaster at Brighton, purchased a copy of this polka from Lafleur for five shillings, in order that it might be performed by his band, and thereupon instructed his band to play it, before the 2nd of December, 1887; and it was subsequently played by his band on the pier at Brighton both before and after that date.

On the 2nd of December, 1887, the Order in Council by which the International Copyright Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 33), became applied, amongst others, to French subjects came into force.

The 6th section of the International Copyright Act, 1886, provides as follows:

"Where an Order in Council is made under the International Copyright Acts with respect to any foreign country, the author and publisher of any literary or artistic work first produced before the date at which such order comes into operation shall be entitled to the same rights and remedies as if the said Acts and this Act and the said order had applied to the said foreign country at the date of the said production. Provided that, where any person has, before the date of the publication of an Order in Council produced any work in the United Kingdom, nothing in this section shall diminish or prejudice any rights or interests arising from or in connection with such production which are subsisting and valuable at the said date."

By the 11th section of the same Act it is provided that "the expression 'produced' means, as the case requires, published or made, or performed or represented, and the expression 'production' is to be construed accordingly."

The plaintiffs brought an action in the Brighton County Court claiming damages for the infringement of Mayeur's sole right of performance, and for an injunction.

The county court judge found for the defendant.

The plaintiffs appealed to the Divisional Court (A. L. Smith and Grantham, JJ.), who affirmed the decision of the county court judge.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Asquith, Q.C., Rose Innes, and Roskill, for the plaintiffs.—The object of this Act being to assist foreign composers, the construction most favourable to them should be put upon this proviso to section 6. There was no evidence of value in their right or interest to support the finding of the county court judge.

Cutler, Q.C., and Megone, for the defendant, were not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J., after stating the facts and reading section 6 of the Act, said: We have to construe this section and see what protection, if any, is afforded to the defendant in this case. The meaning of the word "produced" in section 6 is explained in section 11, where it is defined to mean "published or made, or performed or represented, as the case requires." The defendant's case is that on the 2nd of December, 1887, the date when this statute came into force, this piece of music had been lawfully produced in England, and that he had a right or interest in this production which was subsisting and valuable. On this question the county court judge has found, although not without great doubt, that this right or interest was a valuable right or interest within the meaning of section 6 of the Act; and unless it can be said there is no evidence to support that finding, this court is bound by it. The Divisional Court have not thought that finding wrong; but we are now asked to go further than this and say that, upon the evidence, this finding was wrong, and that this is not a valuable right or interest. I put, in the argument, the case of the bandmaster's selling the goodwill of his business, including the right to perform this particular piece of music. Can I say that there is no value attached to this right?

Then it is to be noticed that the proviso in this section 6 is peculiarly worded. The expression used is "any person," and again, "any rights or interests," so that it does not say that the right or interest must belong to the person producing the piece in England. As to this I agree with the observations of Smith, J., who says: "If all the bandsmen in the kingdom and all others are to be prevented from playing this polka, it might well be that Lafleur's 'interest' in his unsold copies, if such there be, would be seriously affected, and it seems to me that this would also prevent this action from succeeding, if it were proved that Lafleur was in such a position on the 2nd of December, 1887." I am by no means certain that in construing this section Lafleur's position can be left out of account. This appeal fails.

FRY and LOPES, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Mann & Taylor.

Solicitors for the respondent, Thomas & Hick.

(a.) Reported by H. M. CHARTERS MACPHERSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

From Q. B. Div. June 25.

THOMAS v. SEARLES. (a.)

Bill of sale—Validity—"True owner" of chattels—Successive assignments of same chattels—Consideration not truly stated—Undisclosed trust or condition—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 10, sub-section 3—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 3, 5.

H., being already indebted to T. on earlier securities, including a bill of sale over certain goods, and desiring to obtain a further advance, executed a bill of sale to T. upon the same goods, on the understanding that he should afterwards pay T. the amount due to him on the then subsisting securities, and this amount was paid.

An execution creditor of H. contended that the bill of sale was invalid.

Held, that the bill of sale was good.

Appeal from the judgment of A. L. Smith, J., in favour of the plaintiff upon an interpleader issue.

On the 26th of January, 1889, the plaintiff, who had for several years had money transactions with one Captain Hampden, advanced him the sum of £290 upon a bill of sale of his furniture and effects under the following circumstances.

At the date of the advance, Captain Hampden was indebted to the plaintiff upon a bill of sale given in March, 1888, upon the same goods, in a sum of more than £150; he was also indebted to the plaintiff in other sums on certain promissory notes, and he desired a further advance of £50. Accordingly, it was arranged that a bill of sale should be given upon the goods for £290, and that this sum should be advanced to Captain Hampden upon the understanding that he should afterwards pay to the plaintiff the amount due to him on the then subsisting securities, which was fixed at £235.

Accordingly after the execution of the bill, the amount of £290 was paid to Captain Hampden by two cheques for £240 and £50, which were duly honoured, and two or three days later the sum of £235 was paid to the plaintiff by Captain Hampden.

In June, 1889, an execution was levied at the suit of the defendants upon the same goods. An interpleader summons was taken out by the sheriff, and an issue directed to be tried between the claimant and the execution creditors.

The defendants contended that the bill of sale was a sham and a fraud upon the creditors of Captain Hampden, and that the consideration was, under these circumstances, not truly stated.

A. L. Smith, J., held that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed upon the issue.

The defendants appealed.

Horace Kent, for the appellants.—This bill of sale is void as against the creditors upon three grounds. First, Captain Hampden was not the true owner within section 5 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, when he executed the bill of sale on the 26th of January, 1889. The previous bill of March, 1888, over the same goods was still subsisting, and there cannot be two true owners of the same goods at once. The effect of the billl of sale is at once to pass the whole property in the goods to the grantee: see Ex parte Stanford, 34 W. R. 507, 17 Q. B. D. 259. Secondly, the consideration is not truly stated, for the true bargain between the parties has not been set out as is required by the Act. Thirdly, this money was subject to a trust or condition as to the repayment of £235, and by sub-section 3 of section 10 of the Act of 1878, this trust not being disclosed in the bill of sale, it is void.

H. Reed (Jelf, Q.C., with him) was not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J., after stating the facts, said:—Three points have been raised by this appeal. I will deal first with the two last, as they are the more easily disposed of.

It has been argued that the consideration for the bill of sale is not truly stated. The bill is expressed to be in consideration of the sum of £290 "now paid." The question the court has to consider is whether this sum was in fact and truth and substance, and not merely in form, paid or not. Two cheques were unquestionably paid to Captain Hampden for that amount; but it is said that, because there was some agreement as to the subsequent application of the money, that sum was not the true consideration for the bill. In my opinion that agreement has nothing to do with this matter, and this point fails.

The next point is, that this bill was subject to some undisclosed trust, which brings it within the prohibition in sub-section 3 of section 10 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. That sub-section provides as follows:—"If the bill of sale is made or given subject to any defeasance, or condition, or declaration of trust not contained in the body thereof, such defeasance, condition, or declaration shall be deemed to be part of the bill, and shall be written on the same paper or parchment therewith before the registration, and shall be truly set forth in the copy filed under this Act therewith, and as part thereof, otherwise the registration shall be void." It was said that there was here an agreement at the time the £290 was paid that a sum of £235 should be repaid by the borrower to the lender, that being the amount agreed to be due on certain previous securities by the borrower to the lender. The first question which arises on that argument is, Is there a trust? The promise of repayment creates no trust whatever; it simply creates a debt, and if Captain Hampden had become a bankrupt after the bill had been given and before the repayment, the lender's only remedy would have been to prove as a creditor in the bankruptcy. That being so, the question as to whether a trust attaching to the money was a trust attaching to the bill of sale, within the meaning of that section of the Act, does not arise; though I think, as far as I can see, that it is not within it, and that the section means that the bill of sale must be subject to some trust—that the holder must be subject to some trust in order to come within the prohibition. That point, therefore, also fails.

The first point raised on behalf of the appellants is of some importance. It has been contended that it is impossible to have two valid bills of sale, except as against the grantor, in respect of the same chattels. That is a startling proposition, because, if that were so, the facilities for raising money by bills of sale would be enormously curtailed. But there is no principle or authority for such a proposition. By section 3 of the Act of 1882, so far as the two Acts are consistent, they are to be read together, and it is quite obvious that the Act of 1878 contemplates successive bills of sale on the same goods, because in section 10 of that Act there is a provision as to their priority. That section, therefore, remains in force unless there is something in the later Act inconsistent with it. Is this the case? For this, section 5 is relied on. That section avoids a bill of sale, except as against the grantor, "in respect of any personal chattels specifically described in the schedule thereto, of which the grantor was not the true owner at ie time of the execution of the bill of sale." ; has been contended for the appellants that ie moment a man has given a bill of sale over his oods he ceases to be the "true owner" of them, nd cannot give a second in respect of them. But is nat so? When a man gives a bill of sale over his oods by way of security only, he still has the equity f redemption in them. Why should he not avail imself of that equitable interest for the purpose of iving security for further advances? It would be oing a great deal too far to stretch the language of ection 5 of the Act of 1882 so as to repeal the Act of 878, and make that impossible. I am not prepared o hold now for the first time that this section has the ffect which has been contended for. This point also ails, and the appeal must be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by H. M. CHARTERS MACPHERSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

FRY and LOPES, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, S. S. Seal.

Solicitors for the respondent, Cooper & Sons.

From Q. B. Div. June 5.

TOMKINSON v. BALKIS CONSOLIDATED CO. (a.)

Company—Transfer of shares by person having no title —Certificate issued to transferee—Sale of shares by transferee—Denial by company of transferee's title—Estoppel—Representation contained in certificate—Measure of damages.

P., being the owner of certain shares in the defendant company, executed a blank transfer thereof, and, having procured a certification from the secretary of the company, deposited the transfer so certified with the plaintiffs as security for an advance of £250. P. then sold the same shares to M. and B., and they were registered as owners. Subsequently the plaintiffs, having executed their transfer, sent it to the company for registration, and received a certificate in the usual form. They then contracted to sell the shares on the Stock Exchange, the market price being £426, and, having repaid themselves the sum owing to them from P., handed over to him the balance of the purchase-money. The company refused to recognize the plaintiffs' purchasers, on the ground that the plaintiffs never had a good title to the shares. The plaintiffs, being bound to carry out their contract with their purchasers, bought other shares, the market price then being £717.

Held, that the company, having given the plaintiffs a certificate, were estopped from denying the plaintiffs' title; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the company the sum of £717.

Appeal by the defendants from a judgment of Pollock, B., at the trial of an action without a jury.

The action was brought by a firm of stockbrokers against the Balkis Consolidated Co. under the following circumstances.

In December, 1888, the defendant company had issued the whole of their authorized share capital, and one Powter was the registered owner of 1,000 shares. Powter was indebted to the plaintiffs on a running account, and being desirous of obtaining from them a further advance, which would make his debt amount to £250, he proposed to secure the repayment of that sum by an assignment of his shares. He accordingly executed a blank transfer thereof, specifying the numbers, and at his request the secretary of the company certified the transfer—that is, he wrote and signed a certification on the face of it, stating that the original certificate in respect of the shares had been lodged with the company. The transfer, so certified, was handed by Powter to the plaintiffs, who thereupon advanced him the agreed sum.

In January, 1889, Powter sold the same shares to Maitland and Balfour, and their names were entered on the register of the company, and a certificate in respect of the said shares was given to them.

In May, 1889, the plaintiffs inserted their own names on the blank transfer deed given to them as transferees, executed it, and sent it to the company's office to be registered. On the 1st of July the company issued and sent to the plaintiffs a certificate, signed by two of the directors, countersigned by the secretary, and sealed with the company's seal, stating that the plaintiffs were the registered proprietors of the said 1,000 shares.

In August, the sum of £193 14s. 6d. being still due to the plaintiffs, they, having obtained the permission of Powter, proceeded to sell the shares in the usual manner on the Stock Exchange. In due course they executed deeds of transfer in favour of various purchasers, and forwarded the same, together with their certificate, to the company's office. The secretary, having certified the transfers, returned them to the plaintiffs, who then handed them to the purchasers, and received from them in exchange the contract price—viz., £426 17s. 6d. This sum the plaintiffs dealt with as follows:—They repaid themselves the £193 14s. 6d. still due as above mentioned, and further applied £123 3s. in payment of other debts due to them from Powter, and paid over to him the balance of £110.

In October the plaintiffs heard that the company refused to recognize their purchasers, on the ground that the plaintiffs themselves never had any title to the shares.

The plaintiffs, being bound to supply their purchasers with shares, went into the market and bought another thousand shares, for which they had to pay £717 10s.

The plaintiffs sought to recover this sum, or, in the alternative, damages.

Pollock, B., was of opinion that, on the authority of In re Bahia and San Francisco Railway Co., 16 W. R. 862, L. R. 3 Q. B. 584, the defendants were estopped from denying the plaintiffs' title by reason of their having given them a certificate, and ordered judgment to be entered for the plaintiffs for the full amount claimed.

The company appealed.

Finlay, Q.C., and Buckley, Q.C. (Sutton with them), for the appellants.—The giving of the certificate to the plaintiffs does not estop the company from denying the plaintiffs' title. In the Bahia case the claim was by the transferee of the persons who had held the certificate, which was treated as creating an estoppel. The present case is more analogous to Simm v. Anglo-American Telegraph Co., 28 W. R. 290, 5 Q. B. D. 188. The judgment of Bramwell, L.J., in that case is strongly in favour of the company; it shows that they are not, by the mere giving of the certificate to the plaintiffs, estopped from saying that the supposed transfer to the plaintiffs was a sham transfer. The plaintiffs did not enter into the contract to sell the shares on the strength of any representation contained in the certificate. They acted on the faith of a worthless transfer, which they themselves sent to the company to be registered. If the plaintiffs say they were induced to part with their money to Powter by the certification, it has been held in Bishop v. Balkis Consolidated Co., ante, p. 99, 25 Q. B. D. 512, that such certification does not operate as an estoppel on the company. If there is any estoppel at all, it can only be to the extent of the plaintiffs' interest in the shares, which was £193 14s. 6d. The plaintiffs are really seeking to obtain, and have obtained, damages for misrepresentation, but Derry v. Peek, 38 W. R. 33, 14 App. Cas. 337, shows that liability to such damages must be confined to cases where there is fraud. See also British Mutual Banking Co. v. Charnwood Forest Railway Co., 35 W. R. 590, 18 Q. B. D. 714. If the court should hold that damages proper are recoverable, the measure of them should be the amount by which the plaintiffs are out of pocket—i.e., the difference between £717 10s. and £426 17s. 6d.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Reid, Q.C. (Hollams with him), for the respondents.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—This is an action against a company for refusing to register the transferees of certain shares which the plaintiffs bought and afterwards contracted to sell, the consequence of such refusal being that the plaintiffs were obliged, in order to carry out their contract with their transferees, to go into the market and procure other shares. The company say that the shares which the plaintiffs purported to transfer were not their shares, that they never had a good title to them, because their supposed transferor had previously sold them to some one else. The plaintiffs reply to this: You are estopped from denying that the shares were ours, for you gave us a document of title; you gave us the certificate in order to enable us to sell. Now what is the representation which such a document must always be taken to carry with it? I think that the purchaser of shares who has obtained a certificate is in this position, he can say to the company: I could not tell whether I had a right to be registered without reference to you; I sent you certain documents given to me by my transferor, and asked you to look at them and at the register, and then to say whether I was entitled to be registered; and by giving me a certificate you represented that I was so entitled, and was in a position to sell.

This is in accordance with what was said by Cockburn, C.J., in the case of In re Bahia and San Francisco Railway Co.—viz., that a certificate is "a declaration by the company to all the world that the person in whose name the certificate is made out, and to whom it is given, is a shareholder in the company, and it is given by the company with the intention that it shall be so used by the person to whom it is given, and acted upon in the sale and transfer of shares." The meaning of that is that the object of a certificate is to enable a man to sell, and with that I entirely agree.

I am of opinion that the company by giving this certificate made a representation that the plaintiffs were entitled to these shares, which representation was intended to be acted upon in a certain way, and that the plaintiffs acted in the way intended when they proceeded to sell the shares. They are entitled to say to the company, "We sold these shares because you gave us this certificate." The company, therefore, are estopped from denying that the plaintiffs were entitled to these shares.

We were referred to the case of Bishop v. Balkis Consolidated Co., in which it was held that a company is not estopped by a certification; but a certificate is an entirely different thing from a certification; and in considering what the effect of a certificate is, the Bahia case is very material. We were also referred to the case of Derry v. Peek, which is always cited now whenever a case of misrepresentation arises. But I am of opinion that that case has nothing to do with the doctrine of estoppel, and does not in any way touch the present case.

Then there is the question as to the proper amount of damages. I think that the plaintiffs applied the £426 17s. 6d. as they were lawfully entitled to do, and that the whole sum which they paid for the purchase of the other shares is the true measure of damages.

LOPES and KAY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Stretton, Hilliard, & Co.

Solicitors for the respondents, Hollams, Son, & Co.

From Q. B. Div. May 12.

BURCHARD v. MACFARLANE. (a.)

Practice—Discovery—Commission issued in Scotland—Production of documents by third parties—6 & 7 Vict. c. 82, s. 5.

Section 5 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 82 only permits the court to order the production of documents before a commissioner as ancillary to the examination of a witness, and does not give power to the court to enforce discovery against persons who are not parties to the action.

Appeal from an order of the Queen's Bench Division (Lord Coleridge, C.J., and Mathew, J.).

The action, which was pending in the Court of Session in Scotland, arose out of a contract by the pursuers to purchase from the defenders a vessel named The Lady Octavia.

The Lord Ordinary had granted a commission to examine certain witnesses, and granted "diligence against havers at the instance of both parties for recovery of the documents specified in their respective specifications Nos. 22 and 23 of process, and commission to certain commissioners to take the oaths and examinations of the havers," resident in Germany, London, Glasgow, and Edinburgh respectively and receive their exhibits and productions, and ordained "Mr. A. H. Tindall, chairman, and Mr. A. G. Dyhurst, secretary of Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping to appear before the commissioner in London and produce any of the documents called for so far as under their control." The specification No. 22 of documents called for by the pursuers was "(1) All correspondence passing between the defenders or Barr, their surveyor, or any person on their behalf on the one hand, and Emil Padderatz, surveyor at Hamburg to Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping, or any one on his behalf on the other, relating to the condition of the vessel known as The Lady Octavia or the surveys of said vessel in 1889 and in July and October, 1890, between the 1st of January, 1889, and the date of raising this action; (2) All correspondence between the said Emil Padderatz on the one hand, and the London office of said Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping, or any of the officials of said register relating to said matters prior to said date; (3) All reports obtained by, and all communications addressed to, said Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping, or any of the officials of said register in reference to said vessel during the years 1889 and 1890; (4) Failing principals, copies, drafts, scrolls, or jottings of any of the above documents are called for." The specification No. 23 of documents called for by the defenders was "all correspondence passing between the pursuers or any one on their behalf on the one hand, and Lloyds, or Lloyd's Register of British and

(a.) Reported by A. P. PERCEVAL KEEP, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Foreign Shipping, or W. H. Tindall, the chairman, and A. G. Dryhurst, the secretary, or anyone on behalf of or as representing Lloyds or Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping on the other hand, relating to the vessel referred to on record as The Lady Octavia between the 1st of May, 1890, and the date of raising the present action." A copy of the interlocutor was duly served, and the commissioner called upon Messrs. Dryhurst and Tindall respectively "to attend to produce the documents mentioned in the specifications served upon you, and give your oath and examination respecting the same on behalf of the pursuers." On their failure to appear a summons was taken out before Wright, J., at chambers, who ordered them to attend before the commissioner at such time and place as he might appoint "for examination as to the documents which Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping have in their possession answering the description mentioned in the specifications Nos. 22 and 23 of process in the said action, and also that they do respectively produce to the said commissioner the documents mentioned in the said specifications (without prejudice to the said W. H. Tindall and A. G. Dryhurst's objections before the commissioner as to all or any class of documents or document or to further application by pursuers to a judge in any such case)."

On appeal the Divisional Court affirmed this order. Messrs. Tindall and Dryhurst appealed.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., Cohen, Q.C., and James Fox, in support of the appeal.—This order purports to be made under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 82, s. 5, which enacts that "if any person, after being served with a written notice to attend any commissioner or commissioners appointed to execute any such commission for the examination of witnesses as aforesaid (such notice being signed by the commissioner or commissioners, and specifying the time and place of attendance), shall refuse or fail to appear and be examined under such commission, such refusal or failure to appear shall be certified by such commissioner or commissioners, and it shall thereupon be competent, to or on behalf of any party suing out such commission, to apply to any of the superior courts of law in that part of the kingdom within which such commission is to be executed, or any one of the judges of such courts, for a rule or order to compel the person or persons so failing as aforesaid to appear before such commissioner or commissioners, and to be examined under such commission, and it shall be lawful for the court or a judge to whom such application shall be made by rule or order to command the attendance and examination of any person to be named or the production of any writings or documents to be mentioned in such rule or order." The clause in that section as to documents only means that on the examination of a witness he may be ordered to produce documents as ancillary to his examination, and does not give rights over third parties other than witnesses. This order, however, does not treat either of the applicants as witnesses, but calls on them to ascertain and disclose the documents in their possession.

They cited Elder v. Carter, 38 W. R. 612, 25 Q. B. D. 194.

J. G. Barnes, Q.C., and Hon. A. Lyttleton, contrà.—It is intended to call the applicants as witnesses, and when they are in the box they will be asked to produce the letters and report. The surveys are required in order to prove or disprove the breach of warranty on which the action proceeds. The order itself shows that a Scotch court would call for the production of these documents by a witness, and the effect of the statute is to enable the court to enforce here whatever the Scotch court might enforce within its own jurisdiction.

Lord HALSBURY, L.C.—In this case I do not find any evidence that there are in fact documents in existence such as might be conjectured from the form of this order. The documents, if they do exist, relate to the business of third parties, and not to any right existing between the pursuers and the defenders. They are a correspondence and a report between Lloyds and Lloyd's agent. It is true that they have relation to the particular vessel which is the subject of sale, but that only happens by reason of the peculiar form of incorporation which Lloyds possess, and which enables them to class vessels.

Sitting in this court, and treating the dispute as if it had happened in England, I am bound by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Elder v. Carter, and I am consequently driven to the inquiry whether or not this is in substance an order for inspection and discovery, or whether it is part of a procedure to examine witnesses. I do not know what facts are to be established. I do not know what documents are asked for. I do not know that the parties have ever condescended upon any particular document, or intimated that they have any knowledge of any document existing at all, and I am led to the conclusion that it is inspection and discovery that is sought, and not the examination of witnesses on commission.

The meaning of the order is, as I construe the meaning of this instrument, that the witness is to be examined if he has got in his possession documents which may become part of the necessary evidence in the cause. If that is the meaning of it, it is quite clear that such an order is not rendered valid because it is limited to a particular ship and to the particular years over which these transactions are spread. This order has been obtained, not by one of the parties against the other, but by both of them against third persons who have no interest in the question and have not been heard. To enforce such an order would be a serious invasion of private rights.

I have hitherto spoken as if this was a matter which occurred in England. On looking at the Act of Parliament it appears to me that the only process intended to be enforced was for the production of documents as ancillary to the examination of witnesses. If there be any difference between the rights of discovery which exist in Scotland and the rights of discovery existing here, I can only say that, sitting in this court, I can only know of such distinction so far as it is brought before me by evidence, and no such evidence has been produced.

The result is that, looking at the order of the Scotch court, and the order that has been made in furtherance of it, we must come to the conclusion that the latter is not an order which is justified by the 5th section of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 82, but that it is an order for discovery under circumstances under which no such order could be made in this country, and I think, therefore, that this appeal ought to be allowed.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—In this case the question turns on the true interpretation of the statute, and we have not to consider the law of Scotland, whatever it may be. The order on the face of it assumes to be made against Tindall and Dryhurst in an action with which they have no relation whatever, and to which they are absolute strangers. It is objected, therefore, on their behalf, that the order cannot be made, both for this reason and because it requires them, not only to state whether there are such documents, but to produce them and allow them to be read before it is determined whether they are evidence either for plaintiff or defendant. What the meaning of this order is I confess I have myself no doubt. The real meaning of it is that the documents should be produced in order that the persons applying for them may read them and know their contents. In my opinion such an order is beyond the jurisdiction of the judge.

In the Courts of Chancery before the Judicature Acts there was no such thing as a bill of discovery against a third person to discover matters in an action between other parties in which he had no interest. If there were a subpœna duces tecum issued in this form it would have been bad, because it is putting upon a witness who had no interest in the question a burthen that there was no right to put upon him, that is, that he should look through his documents or books, and come to the conclusion as to what was relevant to the inquiry. A subpœna duces tecum is an order from the court to a person to produce a document which was alleged to be in his possession, and to produce it to the court at the trial, and not to produce it to either party. Under such a subpœna when a witness brought the document into court the parties could not ask him for it. All that could be done was that the witness produced the document to the court, and might insist that his document should not be handed to the parties even at the trial. When the judge was satisfied that it was evidence in the case for either party he might order it to be read. Therefore the suggestion is that the Act of Parliament gives, as against third parties, a power which did not exist in any court as against them before the Act.

Now the words relied upon in this Act of Parliament are:—"An order for the production of any writings or documents to be mentioned in such rule or order." That is very like the words in ord. 37, r. 7, "The court or a judge may in any cause or matter, at any stage of the proceedings, order the attendance of any person for the purpose of producing any writings or other documents named in the order." It was held by the Court of Appeal in Elder v. Carter that notwithstanding the largeness of those words, when the purpose of the rule came to be considered, such an order could not be made against a third person who was not a party to the cause.

That is a judgment which is binding upon this court, and, in my opinion, is clearly right. Then, coming to section 5 of this Act, the question is whether we are not obliged to hold the same with regard to it. It seems to me that this case is outside the Act of Parliament according to its true reading, and that the learned judge had no jurisdiction to make the order appealed against.

FRY, L.J.—In my judgment this order cannot be made, and ought not to be made under the statute. It is analogous to a bill of discovery against a mere witness. Now is such an order as that within the meaning of the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 82? In my judgment it plainly is not. That statute enables the court in England or Scotland or Ireland to direct a commission for the examination of witnesses—that means persons who are able to bear testimony with regard to the issues in controversy between the litigant parties. It does not mean that they may be examined with regard to the possession of documents which may be relevant to the controversy between the parties. That observation governs the whole of the section, and I think the words at the end, "for the production of any writings or documents to be mentioned in such rule or order," are only ancillary to the examination of witnesses. The words may require the production of the documents which that witness produces as a witness, but they cannot for one moment be stretched so as to enable the litigating parties to obtain discovery against a witness. It appears to me that if we were to give the slightest countenance to this proceeding we should be doing a great injustice.

It has been said that it is a remarkable thing that A., by making a series of false statements against B. and putting them on the back of a writ, or calling them a statement of claim, may obtain inspection of the books of B. That is the law, but it has never yet been carried to this extent, that by A. making a statement against B. he can obtain discovery of the books of C. This is an attempt to carry it to that extent, and therefore, in my judgment, it ought to fail.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Parker, Garrett, & Parker.

Solicitors for the parties to the action, Thomas Cooper & Son.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. North. J. } May 29; June 5.

IN RE FREME.
FREME v. LOGAN. (a.)

Will—Equitable contingent remainder—Legal estate in mortgagees—Contingent Remainders Act, 1877—Acquisition of legal estate—Intermediate rents—Heir-at-law—Next of kin.

A testator devised freeholds, the legal estate in some of which was outstanding on mortgages, to his son for life, with remainder to such of the children of the son as being sons, should attain the age of twenty-one, or, being daughters, should attain that age or marry under it; he gave his residuary real and personal estate to his son absolutely. The will was executed before the passing of the Act 40 & 41 Vict. c. 33. The testator died in 1878. In 1888 the son, as tenant for life, sold part of the unincumbered freeholds, and out of the proceeds of sale paid off the mortgages on the incumbered freeholds, which were reconveyed to the uses of the will. Shortly afterwards the son died intestate, leaving three infant sons only surviving him.

Held, that the reconveyance of the mortgaged real estate did not defeat the contingent remainder created by the will.

Held, that the intermediate rents of the freeholds during the suspense of vesting of the remainder went to the estate of the son under the residuary devise as real property.

Motion for judgment.

The testator, W. P. Freme, by his will dated February, 1877, and executed before the passing of the Act to amend the law as to contingent remainders (40 & 41 Vict. c. 33), devised certain freehold and bequeathed certain leasehold estates to his son, James Freme, for life, and to receive and take the rents and profits thereof accordingly, and from and after his decease he devised and bequeathed the same unto and amongst all the children of his said son James as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment amongst all the children of his said son James who, being sons, should attain the age of twenty-one, or, being daughters, should attain that age or marry under it, equally between them. The testator also devised and bequeathed all his residuary real and personal estate unto his said son James absolutely.

(a.) Reported by C. F. DUNCAN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

At the date of the testator's death in 1878 some of the freehold estate was mortgaged and some was unincumbered. The leaseholds were mortgaged. In 1887 trustees were appointed of the settlement created by the will of the testator for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1882.

In 1888 James, as tenant for life, sold a part of the unincumbered freehold estate, and out of the proceeds paid off the mortgages on the other part of the freehold estate, and on the leasehold. The freeholds so discharged from incumbrances were reconveyed to the uses of the will, and the leaseholds to the trustee of the will.

James died in 1888, intestate and a widower, without having exercised his power of appointment. He left three infant sons only surviving him.

The plaintiffs were his two younger sons; the defendants were the trustee of the will, the eldest son of James. the trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, and the executor of the will.

The action was brought to determine (inter alia) the following questions arising on the administration of the estate of W. P. Freme:

(1) Whether the effect of the reconveyance of the mortgaged freeholds was, by converting an equitable into a legal estate, to defeat the remainders limited in them by the will of the said W. P. Freme?

(2) Who (if the remainders had not failed) was entitled to the intermediate rents of the said freeholds during the suspense of vesting?

S. Hall, Q.C., and E. S. Ford, for the plaintiffs.—An equitable contingent remainder in these properties was created by the will, which was not destructible: Astley v. Micklethwaite, 28 W. R. 811, 15 Ch. D. 59. In 1888 a legal contingent remainder was created by the reconveyance of the freeholds, by virtue of a reference to the uses of the will, which would have failed but for the operation of the Contingent Remainders Act of 1877, which preserves it. The rents and profits of the freeholds so reconveyed go to the devisee, James, under the general devise, but as personal estate, and on his death go to his personal representatives, and not to his heir-at-law: 1 Jarm. on Wills. 313; Sewell v. Denny, 10 Beav. 315; Burley v. Evelyn, 16 Sim. 291; Halford v. Staines, Ibid. 496.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Arkle, for the heir-at-law of James Freme.—The contingent remainder was created by the will, and the deed of 1888, whereby the legal estate was reconveyed to the uses of the will, simply clothed the remainder with the legal estate, with whatever consequences may result from that clothing. The deed of 1888 itself created no contingent remainder. If the remainder has not failed the intermediate rents go to the heir-at-law of James Freme as real estate.

Benn, for the trustee of the will and the executor.

Napier Higgins, Q.C., C. Ashworth James, and Dibdin, for the trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act.

NORTH, J., held that all that was created by the will was an equitable contingent remainder that was not subject to the defect of failure by reason of the absence of a sufficient freehold to support it. His lordship did not think that the subsequent acquisition of the legal estate by the deed of 1888 could have the effect of causing the limitation to fail, whatever effect it might have produced had the deed been dated before the time when the Act in question came into operation. In addition to that, his lordship's impression was that there was another answer to this case—namely, the point of fact that the contingent remainder, being equitable only, was not subject to being defeated by the absence of any freehold to support it, and that, in effect, was to be gathered from what fell from Malins, V.C., in Astley v. Micklethwaite. His lordship was also of opinion that the rents during the suspense of vesting of the remainder went to James' estate under the residuary devise, as between his heir-at-law and next of kin, as real, and not as personal estate.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Chester, Mayhew, & Co., for Peele & Peele, Shrewsbury.

Solicitors for one trustee for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, Bridges, Sawtell, & Co.

Solicitors for the other parties, Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Gibbons & Arkle, Liverpool.

Chan. Div. } April 22; June 20.
Stirling, J. }

In re MERVIN.
MERVIN v. CROSSMAN. (a.)

Will—Construction—Gift—Remoteness—Gift at twenty-five years of age—Maintenance clause—Vested or contingent gift.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale, conversion, and investment, and upon trust to hold such investments and the income thereof, "and to pay and divide the same equally between the present children of my son J. M." (naming them), "and any other children who may be hereafter born as and when they shall respectively attain the age of twenty-five years," with power in the meantime to apply the whole or any part of the income, for the maintenance and education of such grandchildren during their minority. The will also contained an advancement clause.

J. M. survived the testator, who died in 1879. At the testator's death J. M. had five children living; one child was born four months later, and two more subsequently. The eldest attained twenty-five in 1890.

Held, that J. M.'s children did not take vested interests in the fund; that the gift was to a class, to be ascertained when the eldest child attained twenty-five; and that the gift was void for remoteness.

In re Parker, Barker v. Barker, 16 Ch. D. 44, followed.

Elliott v. Elliott, 12 Sim. 276, discussed.

Adjourned summons.

In this case the point arose whether a bequest to the children of John Mervin, the son of the testator, was void for remoteness.

Richard Peter Mervin, the testator, who died on the 4th of March, 1879, by his will, dated the 1st of October, 1848, devised his real estate, and bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and investment of the proceeds thereof. And he directed his trustees to stand possessed of such investments and the annual income thereof upon trust to pay various annuities and make certain payments, and continued: "Subject to the hereinbefore bequests I direct my trustees to stand possessed of the said investments and the annual income and produce thereof upon trust to pay and divide the same equally between the present children of my son John Mervin—viz., Richard Peter Mervin, Elizabeth Wilson Mervin, Mary Harriet Mervin, Arthur Wilson Mervin, John William Mervin, and any other children who may be hereafter born, as and when they shall respectively attain the age of twenty-five years, with power to my said trustees in the meantime to pay and apply the whole or any part of the remainder of the income of the said investments for the maintenance and education of such grand-

(a.) Reported by W. H. QUARRELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

[illegible] the age of twenty-five years.

[illegible] the testator's surviving children [illegible] the eldest of the children who were living at the date of the testator's death [illegible] the testator's children [illegible] the age of twenty-five in January [illegible] the [illegible] in action for the administration of the testator's estate.

[illegible] the eldest child [illegible] share of the fund [illegible] the age of twenty-five years [illegible] the question now arising.

[illegible] the son and the child [illegible] the testator's death.—The gift is not [illegible] The interests of the grandchildren were vested at the time of the testator's death. The gift may be contingent in form if the intention for maintenance [illegible] the interest in the testator that the shares were vested at his death [illegible] v. [illegible] 27 W. R. [illegible] 3 Beav. [illegible] The power of advancement [illegible] v. [illegible] 1 Beav. [illegible] It is a gift of residue, and there is no gift over. The children living at the death of the testator were intended to take [illegible] v. [illegible] 27 W. R. [illegible] 30 Beav. [illegible] It is not a gift to the children as a class. It is not a gift to such of the children of them as shall attain twenty-five, as in [illegible] 2 Mer. [illegible] but to each of those living at the testator's death, as individuals, of an absolute share, as and when they shall attain twenty-five. The gift is good as regards the children living and the child in ventre sa mère at the testator's death. [illegible] v. [illegible] 1 W. R. [illegible] 30 Beav. [illegible]

If [illegible] for the two youngest children.—It is a gift to a class, to be ascertained when the eldest child attains twenty-five, which event happened within the time allowed by the rule against perpetuities, so the two youngest children who were living then are included in the class.

Gift over, for the next of kin.—The gift is void for remoteness. The natural meaning of the words is, that all the children are to take who are born before the eldest child attains twenty-five; that might not be one of those living at the testator's death at all, and might not happen until after the limit allowed by the rule. The whole income is not given by the maintenance clause, it is given during the minority of the children only. The case is thus distinguishable from Ferens v. Elliott and For v. For.

Warrington referred to Butler v. Lane, 10 Sim. 317; and In re Wennall's Estate, Wennall v. Wennall, 36 W. R. 466, 37 Ch. D. 266, in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 30.—STIRLING, J., after referring to the facts.—The first question raised was whether the children of John Mervin took vested or contingent interests. The rule which must guide me in deciding the questions which arise is thus stated by Lord Selborne in Pearce v. Moseley, 29 W. R. 1, 5 App. Cas. 714, 719. The rule which has always been applied to cases of remoteness is this: "You do not import the law of remoteness into the construction of the instrument by which you investigate the expressed intention of the testator. You take his words, and endeavour to arrive at their meaning, exactly in the same manner as if there had been no such law, and as if the whole intention expressed by the words could lawfully take effect. I do not mean that, in dealing with words which are obscure and ambiguous, weight, even in a question of remoteness, may not sometimes be given to the consideration that it is better to effectuate than to destroy the intention; but I do say that, if the construction of the words is one about which a court would have no doubt, though there was no law of remoteness, that construction cannot be altered or corrected to something different for the purpose of escaping from the consequences of that law."

It was not disputed that the trust "to pay and divide between the present children" of the son "and any other children who may be hereafter born, as and when they shall respectively attain the age of twenty-five years," if it stood alone, would confer contingent interests only on the children; but it was contended that the power to the trustees, in the meantime, to pay and apply the whole or any part of the remainder of the income for the maintenance of such grandchildren during their minority was sufficient to vest the shares of the children; and, in support of that contention, For v. For and other cases of the same class were relied on. In For v. For the testator gave the investments of one-fifth of £[illegible] to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his son for life, and after his death to his widow during widowhood, and after her death or second marriage to divide and transfer the one-fifth of the £[illegible] to and amongst the children of the son equally as and when they should respectively attain the age of twenty-five; applying, from time to time, the income of the presumptive share of each child, or so much thereof respectively as the trustees or trustee for the time being should think proper, to and for his and her maintenance and education until such share should become payable as aforesaid. Jessel, M.R., held that the children of the testator took vested interests. There, however, the fund was divided into as many shares as the son had children, and the income of each share was directed to be applied for the maintenance of the particular child for whom the share was destined. Here the income of the whole fund is made applicable for the maintenance of all the children. Now in In re Parker, Barker v. Barker, the testatrix gave her residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income, or such part thereof as her trustees should deem expedient, in the maintenance and education of her children until they should attain their respective ages of twenty-one years; and from and after their attaining their respective ages of twenty-one years upon trust to pay, assign, and transfer the estate unto her said children in equal shares. There Jessel, M.R., held that the children did not take vested interests. He distinguished For v. For, and said: "In my opinion, when a legacy is payable at a certain age, but is, in terms, contingent, the legacy becomes vested when there is a direction to pay the interest in the meantime to the person to whom the legacy is given; and not the less so when there is superadded a direction that the trustees shall pay the whole or such part of the interest as they shall think fit. But I am not aware of any case where, the gift being of an entire fund payable to a class of persons equally on their attaining a certain age, a direction to apply the income of the whole fund in the meantime for their maintenance has been ld to create a vested interest in a member of the ass who does not attain that age." I think that plies to the present case, and consequently that the ildren of John Mervin did not take vested interests. There was some suggestion that the gift was not ne to a class. I am unable to accede to this view. authority on this point be required I refer to In re ckson, Spiers v. Ashworth, 32 W. R. 194, 25 Ch. D. 32. This being so, the question arises at what eriod the class is to be ascertained.

Where a will contains an immediate gift to the ildren of a living person, and nothing more, and here are children living at the death of the testator, hose children only take: Viner v. Francis, 2 Cox, 90; Davidson v. Dallas, 14 Ves. 576. If, however, he period of distribution is postponed, the gift will pply, not only to the children living at the death of he testator, but also to those born before the period f distribution: Andrews v. Partington, 3 Bro. C. C. 01; In re Emmet's Estate, Emmet v. Emmet, 28 W. R. 101, 13 Ch. D. 484; those living at the death of the estator taking vested interests, liable to be divested pro tanto by the birth of each additional child: Oppenheim v. Henry, 10 Hare, 441; Baldwin v. Rogers, 3 De G. M. & G. 649. In Andrews v. Partington the bequest was to the children of A., the daughters' shares to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, and the sons' shares at twenty-one. It was, therefore, a case where the gift and direction as to payment was distinct. The same rule has been applied in cases where the gift is contingent. In such cases all who come into existence before the first member attains a vested interest will, if the contingency is satisfied as regards them, be entitled to share: Whitbread v. St. John, 10 Ves. 152; Gilbert v. Boorman, 11 Ves. 238; Clarke v. Clarke, 8 Sim. 59; Gillman v. Daunt, 3 K. & J. 48. In the present case the gift is contained in the direction to pay and divide, and according to this rule the class would be ascertained when the first child of John Mervin attained twenty-five.

It was, however, contended that the class was to be ascertained at the death of the testator, and in support of this contention two cases were cited: Elliott v. Elliott and In re Coppard's Estate. In Elliott v. Elliott the testator gave a legacy of £1,000 to his daughter, Elizabeth Elliott, and all other his personal estate and effects unto and among all and every the children, sons and daughters, of his said daughter in equal shares and proportions, as and when they should attain their respective ages of twenty-two years; and he directed the interest on their respective shares to be accumulated and to be paid to them as and when the principal should be payable. The Vice-Chancellor held that the gift was to such of the children of the testator's daughter as were living at his death. The judgment is as follows:—"I see no objection in principle to holding that, by the description 'all and every the children, sons and daughters, of my daughter Elizabeth Elliott,' the testator meant those children who were then living, or might be living, at his death; and then there is no objection to the gift. When a testator speaks of the children of his daughter, the reasonable construction is that he means such children as his daughter has at his death, at which time the will speaks."

This is hardly satisfactory. The Vice-Chancellor does not refer to the attainment of twenty-two. No notice is taken of the rule established by such cases as Andrews v. Partington and Whitbread v. St. John, which had been followed by the same Vice-Chancellor in Clarke v. Clarke. It is to be observed, however, that the will contained a direction that the interest on the respective shares of the children should be accumulated and paid to them as and when the principal should be payable. It may be that it was considered that the children of Elizabeth Elliott took vested interests at the death of the testator, and that the case fell within the previous decision of the Vice-Chancellor in Kevern v. Williams, 5 Sim. 171. This direction as to interest appears to me to distinguish Elliott v. Elliott from the present case.

As regards In re Coppard's Estate, it purports to be based on Elliott v. Elliott, and I am sure was not intended to go beyond it.

I come to the conclusion, therefore, upon the ordinary rules of construction, that the class to take is to be ascertained when the first of the children of John Mervin attained twenty-five.

Now in applying the rule against perpetuity the period of time to be regarded is the death of the testator, and it is to be observed that in this respect the rule in Andrews v. Partington may operate not unfavourably to the validity of such gifts as are here in question. Thus, where a testator gave his estate to the children of his daughters who should attain twenty-five, and at his death one of the daughters had a child who had attained twenty-five, it was held that the class to take was to be ascertained at the death of the testator, and, consequently, that the gift was valid: Picken v. Matthews, 10 Ch. D. 264, 27 W. R. Dig. 234. Here, however, at the death of the testator, none of the children of John Mervin had attained twenty-five. All then living might have died without attaining twenty-five, so that it might have happened that the class to take was not ascertained until after the expiration of a life or lives in being and twenty-one years afterwards, beyond the limit allowed by the rule against perpetuities.

In my judgment the gift, according to the rule established in Pearks v. Moseley, is void for remoteness, and there must be a declaration accordingly.

Solicitors, Crossman & Pritchard; The Solicitor to the Treasury.

Chan. Div.
Stirling, J. } April 11, 21.

In re FOREIGN AND COLONIAL GOVERNMENT TRUST CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Alteration of memorandum—New business—Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 62), s. 1, sub-sections 3, 5 (d).

The court has power, under sub-section 5 (d) of section 1 of the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890, to confirm, either wholly or in part, resolutions of a company extending the powers of investment in its memorandum of association; but, in exercising its discretion, the court, under sub-section 3 of section 1, may impose such conditions as it may think necessary.

In re Government Stock Investment Co., ante, p. 375, [1891] 1 Ch. 649, distinguished.

Petition.

This was a petition by the Foreign and Colonial Trust Co. (Limited) to obtain the confirmation by the court of resolutions altering its memorandum of association.

The company was incorporated on the 15th of March, 1879, under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1877, with a nominal capital of £2,499,983 10s., divided into 92,872 preferred and deferred shares.

Its objects, as defined in section 3 of its memorandum, were, among others, as follows:—"(c) To invest money in the purchase of, or otherwise acquire and hold any bonds, stocks, obligations or securities of foreign or colonial or British Governments, States, dominions, sovereigns, provinces, municipalities, or ruling or public authorities, or the shares or obligations of foreign railways or other undertakings having the guarantee of or subsidized by a foreign or colonial or British Government, State, dominion, sovereign, province, municipality, or ruling or public authority, or any other security for the payment of which the credit or any property or revenue of any such Government, &c., is pledged, charged, or made liable."

(a.) Reported by H. M. CHARTERS MACPHERSON Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

At an extraordinary general meeting of the company, held on the 6th of February, 1891, a resolution was passed that the memorandum of association should be altered by extending the powers of investment so as to enable the company to lend their moneys "on the security of, or otherwise to acquire and hold any bonds, debentures, debenture stock, obligations, or mortgages of any companies or corporations formed or incorporated under British, foreign, or colonial law."

This resolution was confirmed at a subsequent general meeting held on the 23rd of February, 1891, and registered, on the 16th of March, with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies.

There was evidence that the company could no longer advantageously invest its capital in the class of securities authorized by the memorandum; that there were practically no creditors, or debentures or debenture-stock holders; and that the resolution was carried unanimously.

Buckley, Q.C., and C. Cecil, for the petition.—In In re Government Stock Investment Co., ante, p. 375, [1891] 1 Ch. 649 (then only in W. N., 1891, p. 48) the attention of Chitty, J., was not called to sub-clause (d) of this sub-section 5 of section 1, under which we are now applying.

April 21.—STIRLING, J. [after stating the facts, continued:—] I have to see whether the case falls within sub-section 5 of section 1 of the Act, which is in these terms:—"The court may confirm, either wholly or in part, any such alteration as aforesaid with respect to the objects of the company if it appears that the alteration is required in order to enable the company" to do certain things, which are arranged under heads (a) to (e). The present application is under (d), which is:—"To carry on some business or businesses which, under existing circumstances, may conveniently or advantageously be combined with the business of the company." Now I think the business of this company is the investment of its assets in the limited class of securities mentioned in clause (c) of section 3 of the memorandum of association. In that respect I take the same view as that which I understand to have been expressed by Chitty, J., in In re Government Stock Investment Co. That being so, is what is proposed to be done the carrying on of "some business or businesses which, under existing circumstances, may conveniently or advantageously be combined with the business of the company?" What is proposed to be done is to enable the company to invest its money and assets in another class of securities; and if the business of the company be, as I think, the investment of money in one limited class of securities, it appears to me that the investment of its money in another limited class of securities must also be a business which may be combined with that already carried on by it.

As to the decision in In re Government Stock Investment Co., I am satisfied, upon seeing the full report and after communication with the learned judge, that he expressed no opinion whatever in that case as to the meaning of sub-clause (d), and I think that the proposed alteration may here be made under that sub-clause, the evidence showing that under present circumstances the large capital of the company can no longer be advantageously invested in the limited class of securities specified in clause (c) of section 3 of the memorandum of association.

Under sub-section 3 of section 1 of the Act the court has power to confirm the alteration "on such terms and subject to such conditions as to the court seems fit." I think there is one condition which ought to be imposed here; and that is, that the name of the company ought so to be altered that it may not mislead or be liable to mislead persons who deal with the company without taking the trouble to examine the altered memorandum of association. The petition must therefore stand over generally to enable the company to take the necessary steps to alter its name, with liberty to apply.

Solicitors, Norton, Rose, Norton, & Co.

Q. B. Div. (Denman and Wills, JJ.) June 9, 10.

BOARD OF WORKS FOR THE PLUMSTEAD DISTRICT v. ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS FOR ENGLAND. (a.)

Metropolis management — New street — Liability for expense of paving—"Owner" of land—Land vested in Ecclesiastical Commissioners for purposes of Church Building Acts—Site of a church—Part left unconsecrated—Divesting—Church Building Acts—58 Geo. 3, c. 45, s. 33—59 Geo. 3, c. 134, s. 34—3 Geo. 4, c. 72, s. 34—8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, s. 13—Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 105, 250—Metropolis Local Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 77.

Where land has been conveyed to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for the purposes of the Church Building Acts as a site for a new church, and a church has been built on part of such land, the effect of the consecration of the church and part of such land is to vest the whole of the land conveyed in the incumbent for the time being of such church, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, s. 13. The commissioners, therefore, are not liable to contribute to the expenses of paving a new street upon which the unconsecrated part of such land abuts, as "owners" of such unconsecrated land within the meaning of the Metropolis Local Management Acts, 1855 and 1862.

Special case.

This was an action brought for the recovery of two sums, one of £123 15s., and the other of £9 15s., amounting together to £133 10s., being the amounts respectively of two demands made by the plaintiffs on the defendants for an apportioned part of the expense of paving a new street under the provisions of the Metropolis Local Management Acts, 1855 and 1862.

The following statement of the material facts is taken from the special case which was stated by consent of the parties under Rules of the Supreme Court, order 34:—

The plaintiffs are the board of works for the Plumstead district and are constituted as such board under the said Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 105), and the lands, roads, and street hereinafter mentioned are situate within their district and jurisdiction.

The defendants are the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, to whom, under the provisions of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 55, were transfered all the powers and obligations of the Church Building Commissioners.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By a deed of conveyance, dated the 18th of October, 1886, and made between and executed by Thomas George, Earl of Northbrook, Viscount Baring, and Henry Markby, and the defendants, the said Thomas George, Earl of Northbrook, with the concurrence of the said Viscount Baring and Henry Markby, conveyed unto the defendants and their successors the fee simple in possession of a piece of land situate at Lee, in the county of Kent, for the purposes of the Church Building Acts, and to be appropriated as and for a site for a then intended new church, with surrounding yard and enclosure thereto, to be called "St. Augustine's Church, Grove Park," and to be devoted when consecrated to ecclesiastical purposes for ever, by virtue of and according to the true intent and meaning of the said Acts. All necessary things were done and consents given for the vesting of the said premises in the defendants, subject to the terms and conditions of the said deed.

Prior to the 24th of October, 1886, the erection of a building intended for the purposes of Divine worship according to the rites of the Church of England was completed upon a portion of the said piece of land, and on the 24th of October, 1886, the Bishop of Rochester duly consecrated the said building as a church for the purposes of divine worship according to the rites of the Church of England by the name of "St. Augustine's Church, Grove Park," and also consecrated a portion of the land immediately adjoining the said building.

The remainder of the said piece of land described in and conveyed by the said deed of conveyance has not been consecrated, and remains still vested in the defendants, subject to the terms and conditions of the said deed of conveyance, unless the consecration of the said building and adjoining land has divested the defendants of the same. The unconsecrated portion of the said piece or parcel of land has not since the date of the said sentence of consecration been let or occupied, and has not been built upon. At the date of the said deed of conveyance there existed, and there still exists, a sewer underneath the surface of and across the said unconsecrated portion. Between the 18th of October, 1886, the date of the said deed of conveyance, and the 24th day of October, 1886, the date of the said sentence of consecration, a wire fence was put up across the said unconsecrated portion, but was not completed as it now stands until the month of November, 1886.

Section 105 of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, provides for the payment of the expenses of paving a new street by the owners of the houses forming such street.

By section 77 of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), which recited that it was expedient to amend the said Act of 1855, it was enacted as follows:—"Where any vestry or district board shall, under the powers given by the 105th section of the firstly recited Act" (that is to say, the said Act of 1855) "have paved or be about to pave any new street, the owners of the land bounding or abutting on such street shall be liable to contribute to the expenses or estimated expenses of paving the same, as well as the owners of houses therein."

By section 250 of the said Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, it is enacted (inter alia):—"The word 'owner' shall mean the person for the time being receiving the rack rent of the lands or premises in connection with which the said word is used, whether on his own account or as agent or trustee for any other person, or who would so receive the same if such lands or premises were let at a rack rent."

In February, 1890, the plaintiffs resolved that the Bromley-road, on which the said piece of land abuts, should be paved to their satisfaction, and that the owners of houses forming the said road (which was a new street within the Acts above mentioned), and of land abutting thereon, should pay the amount of the estimated expenses of such paving. The amount of the said estimated expenses was accordingly determined, and the total amount to be contributed by the owners of the unconsecrated portion of the said piece of land was fixed at £133 10s.

The plaintiffs duly made a demand in writing on the defendants for payment of the said sum, but the defendants refused to pay the same, or any part thereof, on the following grounds, viz.:—(1) That they are not, and never were, "owners of land" within the meaning of those words in the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1862, s. 77; (2) that if they were such "owners of land" they ceased to be owners of the said unconsecrated portion on the consecration of the church.

No sum has been, or is intended to be, charged or apportioned as the amount to be contributed by the owners of the consecrated portion of the said piece of land.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the defendants, in respect of the unconsecrated portion of the said piece of land, were at the date of the plaintiffs' demand "owners of land" within the meaning of those words in the Metropolis Local Management Acts, 1855 and 1862.

The following sections of the Church Building Acts were referred to during the argument:—

58 Geo. 3, c. 45, s. 35, whereby it is enacted that "it shall be lawful for the said commissioners" (i.e., the Church Building Commissioners) "to accept and take . . . any lands, tenements, and hereditaments proper for sites of additional churches or chapels not exceeding in quantity in any one place what may be sufficient for building of a church or chapel, providing a churchyard, and making a proper and sufficient access or approach thereto from any persons willing to give the same; and every such site, when conveyed to the said commissioners and the church erected thereupon, and notice thereof given to the bishop of the diocese, shall become for ever thereafter devoted to ecclesiastical purposes only."

Section 51, whereby the commissioners are empowered to resell such lands, or such parts thereof, as shall not be wanted for the purposes of the Act.

8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, s. 13, which provides "that in all cases the freehold of the site of every church of which her Majesty's said commissioners may have accepted, or shall accept, a conveyance under the provisions of the hereinbefore-recited Acts, or any of them (as to any church not yet consecrated when the same shall be consecrated), shall vest in the incumbent for the time being of such church."

Channell, Q.C. (H. A. Forman with him), for the plaintiffs.—The commissioners are "owners" of this land within the definition of "owner" in section 250 of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855. The Church Building Acts do not prohibit them from letting at a rack rent the unused portions of land conveyed to them as a site for a church, and they are empowered to sell such unused portions by 58 Geo. 3, c. 45, s. 51. They have the ordinary rights of ownership, and are liable to contribute to the expenses of paving this new street: Bowditch v. The Wakefield Local Board, L. R. 6 Q. B. 567, 19 W. R. Dig. 66, approved by the Court of Appeal in Wright v. Ingle, 34 W. R. 220, 16 Q. B. D. 379. This land is not the site of a church, and its beneficial use has not been destroyed: Great Eastern Railway Co. v. Hackney Board of Works, 31 W. R. 769, 8 App. Cas. 687; Angell v. Paddington, L. R. 3 Q. B. 714.

Meadows White, Q.C. (T. T. Paine with him), for the defendants.—The commissioners are not the owners of this land in any sense. The effect of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, s. 13, is to vest the whole of the land conveyed in the incumbent for the time being upon the consecration of the church. The word "site" in that section means the whole of the land conveyed for the purposes of the Church Building Acts, not merely the ground upon which the church stands. Therefore, when this church was consecrated, the commissioners were divested of their ownership, and are not now liable to contribute as "owners."

Forman, in reply.—"Site" means the ground on which the church stands. with perhaps a few feet surrounding it. The Act 3 Geo. 4, c. 72, has not been repealed, and it contemplates that all the land originally conveyed may not be required for the purposes of the Church Building Acts, and by section 34 empowers the commissioners in such a case to deal with the land which they do not require. Amongst other things they are authorized "to reconvey . . . any such land, or ground, or any part thereof, in case only a part of any such land or ground shall have been applied to the purposes of the said recited Acts or this Act, to the grantor or grantors thereof." If the commissioners have power so to deal with the land it cannot be vested in another.

DENMAN, J.—The point upon which Mr. White has insisted is one which was not at first seriously argued upon the other side; but it has been made clear to me, in spite of the obscurity in which these Acts are involved, that in this case the commissioners are not liable to the charges which it is sought to impose upon them, and that they are not liable, not because of the particular character of this land, nor because they are not owners of it in the particular sense intended by the Metropolis Management Acts, but because they are not owners of it in any sense. They are created by Act of Parliament in succession to other commissioners, and they have the same duties, rights, and liabilities.

The origin of the ownership upon which the plaintiffs rely is to be found in the Act 58 Geo. 3, c. 45, s. 33. [His lordship read the part of the section above set out, and continued:—] That being the law, in the present case a nobleman conveyed a piece of land to the commissioners for the purposes of the Church Building Acts. The defendants contended that that piece of land was a "site," and that the Act 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, s. 13, had had the effect of vesting the whole of it in the incumbent of the church which has been built on part of it. There are, no doubt, difficulties in the way of this construction, but it is intelligible, and the difficulties which are involved in the contrary view are greater still.

The enactment which has raised the greatest doubt in my mind is section 34 of the Act 3 Geo. 4, c. 72. It seemed to me strange that the commissioners should have power to vest in another, land which was not vested in them. But that difficulty is cleared away when one considers that when the land is first granted to them the commissioners are to have the power, in certain cases, of vesting it in another; but that, when the land becomes vested in someone else by operation of the Act 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, this power of vesting under section 34 of 3 Geo. 4, c. 72, ceases. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, s. 13, was relied upon to show that the defendants are not in any sense the owners of this land, because it is vested in the incumbent of the church. That section plainly enacts that "the freehold of the site of every church" of which the commissioners have accepted a conveyance under the Church Building Acts "(as to any church not yet consecrated, when the same shall be consecrated) shall vest in the incumbent." In the present case the commissioners have accepted a conveyance of a certain piece of freehold land for the purposes of these Acts. I think that the freehold of the site of a church includes the site so conveyed to the commissioners within the meaning of the Acts for the purpose of building a church, and not merely the site inclosed within the four corners of the actual building.

In the present case the church was built, and a portion only of the site conveyed was consecrated. I do not think that the fact that a part of the site has not been consecrated prevents it from being the site of a church within the Act. Any other construction would lead to great difficulties and anomalies. The result is that Mr. White's contention is right, and the whole of the land given and accepted as the site of a church vested upon the consecration in the incumbent, and the commissioners were thereupon divested. I do not wish to say anything that would prevent the incumbent from raising the whole question if any attempt should be made to impose this rate on him. Our judgment is entirely confined to the point raised by Mr. White.

WILLS, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question arises upon the construction of the Church Building Acts, enactments which have been the despair of those who have tried to extract an intelligible meaning from them. The first statute with which we have to deal is 58 Geo. 3, c. 45. The effect of section 33 of that Act is that immediately after the conveyance to the commissioners the land becomes stamped with the character of ecclesiastical land; it is to be "for ever thereafter devoted to ecclesiastical purposes only, in order that the same may be consecrated by the bishop to public worship," &c. It does not seem to have been noticed that it was possible that the area of the site conveyed might not coextend with the consecrated area. It was not long before it was found out that some of the land might remain unconsecrated, for in the following year the Act 59 Geo. 3, c. 134 was passed, which provides (section 34) that if any lands acquired by the commissioners under the Acts shall remain unconsecrated at the end of ten years such unconsecrated lands shall be immediately vested in his Majesty to be applied to the uses for which they were acquired under the direction of his Majesty in Council, unless and until any other provision respecting the same shall be made by authority of Parliament. It was, therefore, the view of the Legislature that the land was vested in the commissioners and could not be divested without an Act of Parliament.

The next enactment on the subject is the statute 3 Geo. 4, c. 72, s. 34, which enacts what cannot take place unless there is land granted for the purposes of the Acts which is not to be used for such purposes; in such a case the commissioners are to deal with it by reconveying it to the grantors or in one of the other modes mentioned in the section, and the land would not then vest in the incumbent. No provision as to vesting the site in the incumbent was made until the passing of the Act 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, s. 13. That completes the scheme and vests the land upon consecration in the incumbent. The only question is whether the word "site" is used in the sense in which it is used in the initial Act—whether it means all the land conveyed or only that part which has been consecrated. It must be remembered that this is an amending Act, and if inconsistent with the earlier Acts must prevail. But I do not think that it is inconsistent. The possibility of more land being conveyed than was necessary for the church to stand upon had not occurred to the framers of the first Act, and they spoke of the whole of the land conveyed as the "site." I do not see why "the freehold of the ite" in the last mentioned Act should be cut down o the narrower meaning which was contended for. It seems to me to be more in accordance with the scheme of these Acts that the "site" should continue to mean the whole of the land which has been accepted by the commissioners for the purpose of building a church. I am, therefore, of opinion that this land was not vested in the commissioners when this rate was made.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, George Whale.

Solicitors for the defendants, White, Borrett, & Co.

C. C. R. May 14.

REG. v. MARSDEN. (a.)

Criminal law—Carnal knowledge of girl under the age of thirteen years—Evidence—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 4.

In order to prove the offence of carnally knowing a girl under the age of thirteen years, under section 4 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, it is not necessary to prove emission.

Case stated by Wright, J., as follows:—

James Marsden was convicted before me at Manchester, on the 28th of April, 1891, upon an indictment containing a single count for the felony created by the statute 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69 (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885), s. 4—namely, carnal connection with a female under thirteen years.

The jury were satisfied of penetration, but I directed them that there was no evidence of emission, and that, under the circumstances of the case (interruption), it could not be presumed. At the trial I reserved the question whether the prisoner could lawfully be convicted of the said felony, emission being negatived.

No counsel appeared for the prisoner.

Sir Edward Clarke, S.G., Henry Sutton, and Overend Evans, for the prosecution, were not called upon to argue.

[Before the year 1828 the law was that emission was a necessary ingredient in carnal knowledge: see 1 East P.C. 436, et seq., and authorities there cited. In that year the Act 9 Geo. 4, c. 31 was passed, by which (section 18) penetration without emission was made sufficient evidence. That enactment was repealed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 95, s. 1; but a similar provision was inserted in the Act 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 63, which, however, only applies to offences punishable under that Act. The Offences against the Person Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 94) (see section 5), was incorporated with the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, under which the present indictment was laid, repealed the Offences against the Person Act, 1875, and contains no provision as to proof of emission, and does not incorporate the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100.]

The judgment of the COURT (Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., DENMAN, MATHEW, CAVE, and CHARLES, JJ.) was delivered by Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—We think it clear that this conviction was right, and must be sustained. No doubt, doubts have been entertained upon this point by some judges, amongst whom is Charles, J., who now concurs in this judgment; but we are all clearly of opinion that the offence of unlawful carnal knowledge in the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, is to be considered as proved without proof of emission, and that in all cases where carnal knowledge constitutes a crime that crime is complete upon proof of penetration.

We wish to add that, in our opinion, Wright, J., was quite justified in reserving this case, in view of the doubts which have been entertained by some judges.

Conviction affirmed.

Solicitor for the prosecution, Solicitor to the Treasury.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } April 4.
Admiralty. }

"THE ELTON." (a.)

Practice—Writ—Service of notice of writ without the jurisdiction—Salvage—Action in personam—Foreign owners of cargo—"Necessary and proper parties to the action"—Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 11, r. 1 (g).

In a suit of salvage in personam brought against the owners of a ship and the owners of her cargo, where it appeared that the owners of the cargo were foreign subjects resident without the jurisdiction, the court being of opinion that the owners of the cargo were necessary and proper parties to the suit, and that the suit had been properly brought against the owners of the ship properly served within the jurisdiction, refused to set aside an order allowing service of notice of the writ of summons to be given to the owners of the cargo out of the jurisdiction, under sub-section g of ord. 11, r. 1, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, notwithstanding that the salved cargo had never been within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.

This was a motion by the defendant cargo owners before the judge in court to set aside an order which the plaintiffs, in an action of salvage instituted in personam against the owners of the steamship Elton and the owners of her cargo, had obtained, allowing notice of the writ in the suit to be served on the owners of the cargo of The Elton out of the jurisdiction.

It appeared that the writ in the action had been duly served on the owners of The Elton within the jurisdiction; that the owners of the cargo of The Elton were foreigners residing abroad; that such cargo had never been within the territorial jurisdiction of the court; and that an order had been obtained for service of notice of the writ without the jurisdiction on the owners of the cargo of The Elton, under which service on them had been effected abroad.

March 24.—Sir Walter Phillimore and Stubbs, for the owners of The Elton, in support of the motion.—The owners of the cargo of The Elton are in no sense either necessary or proper parties to the claim of the salvors against the owners of The Elton. Ship and cargo must each pay its own share of salvage; neither can be made liable for the salvage due from the other,* and the salvors, by joining their claim for salvage against the cargo owners with their claim for salvage against the shipowners, cannot get over the difficulty that the claims are really two separate claims on separate sets of defendants having distinct and separate liabilities. An action in personam for salvage in which the parties sought to be made liable were never served with a monition or citation is quite unheard of.*

* See The Pyrennee, Br. & L. 189.

(a.) Reported by C. F. JEMMETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

J. P. Aspinall, for the plaintiffs, contrà.—We submit that the words of ord. 11, r. 1, sub-section g, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, are wide enough to cover the present case, that sub-section providing that notice of a writ of summons on a foreigner abroad may be given where "any person out of the jurisdiction is a necessary or proper party to an action properly brought against some other persons duly served within the jurisdiction."

April 14.—JEUNE, J.—In this case an action in personam has been brought for salvage against the owners of The Elton and her freight, who are within the jurisdiction, and who have been served with the writ, and the owners of her cargo; but the latter being out of the jurisdiction, an order was, on the 9th of December, 1890, obtained for service of notice of the writ on them, and the matter now comes before me on a motion to set this order aside. The only question is whether these owners of the cargo are proper parties to the action within the meaning of ord. 11, r. 1 (g). The case of Massey v. Heynes, 36 W. R. 834, 21 Q. B. D. 330, has placed a clear interpretation on the meaning of this sub-section, and supplies a test for determining to what persons notice of a writ may be given. Wills, J. (at p. 335), says: "I think that if, according to the regular practice of the courts of this country, supposing all parties subject to the jurisdiction, the person to be served is one who, as a matter of course, would be joined on the same writ, and be treated as one of the defendants in the action, he is a proper, if not necessary, party to the action"; and this view was confirmed by the unanimous judgment of the Court of Appeal. It may be remarked that the case of Massey v. Heynes was one in which the defendants were alternatively liable, and in which, therefore, before order 16, they could not have been made parties; and that the case, therefore, shows that all persons who could, at the option of the plaintiffs, be made parties under order 16, are proper parties within ord. 11, r. 1 (g). Before the case of Massey v. Heynes, the Queen's Bench Division, in The s.s. Thanemore (Limited) v. Thompson and Others, 52 L. T. N. S. 552; 33 W. R. Dig. 165, held that in an action against underwriters severally liable, those in Scotland might be served with the writ; and shortly after, in the Washburn Co. v. The Cunard Steamship Co. and J. C. Parkes & Sons, 5 Times Rep. 592, where the action was brought by the owners of a patent for making barbed wire to restrain the steamship company, who were carrying a consignment of such wire to Parkes & Sons in Ireland, from parting with it, Stirling, J., held that Parkes & Sons might be served with the writ. It was suggested by Sir Walter Phillimore that these last two cases referred to defendants in Scotland and Ireland, and that therefore ord. 11, r. 2, applied. This is so; and as Stirling, J., points out, it gives rise to different considerations of convenience than if the parties to be served be resident in other countries. But this only, I think, shows that there are cases when the court will not give leave, in regard to Scotch or Irish defendants, where it would if they were foreigners, not that the court can give a permission in respect of Scotch or Irish residents which it cannot in respect of persons out of the United Kingdom.

Applying the test thus furnished, it seems to me impossible to doubt that notice of this writ should be permitted to be given to the owners of the cargo. If they were within the jurisdiction, would they not be proper parties to the action? If they could be made so under order 16, and it seems to me they clearly could, the case of Massey v. Heynes is in point, and is decisive of this motion.

But the matter stands even on firmer ground because I think that by the practice of the Admiralty Court they could always have been made parties. No doubt the great mass of cases in which both owners of ship and cargo have been made defendants have been proceedings in rem. But although salvage suits or actions in personam are comparatively rare the Court of Admiralty always had jurisdiction—founded apparently on the fiction of an action in rem having been brought, and the property salved having been allowed to be taken by the owners—to entertain such suits when at least there existed a corpus of property salved. This is shown by the cases of The Hope and The Trelawney, 3 Rob. 215; The Chieftain, 6 Notes of Cases, 459; The Meg Merrillies, 3 Hag. 346; and the language of the present Master of the Rolls in The Cargo ex Schiller, 2 P. D. 145-9, 25 W. R. Dig. 270. It does not clearly appear that in any of these cases proceedings were taken against the owners of the ship and cargo as separate parties, although in The Chieftain and The Meg Merrillies this may perhaps have been the case. But I see no reason why such parties, if consisting of separate individuals, or sets of individuals, should not have been brought before the court together by monition.

It is, indeed, possible that the reason why the fiction by which the Admiralty Court maintained the proceeding in personam was allowed to prevail is that the facility of bringing all parties before the court gave advantages which the common law jurisdiction could not afford.

But however this may be, every consideration, both of authority and principle, points to the convenience, and indeed the justice, of the owners of the ship, freight, and cargo being all before the court when the amount of salvage is to be determined.

The case of The Peace, 4 W. R. 635, Swabey, 117, is an instance of the strong view taken by the Court of Admiralty on this point. In that case the ship and freight were first proceeded against, and afterwards the owners of the cargo, and Dr. Lushington ordered the cargo-owners to pay their share of the costs of the proceedings against the owners of the ship. "It is true," he said "the owners of the cargo did not come in in the original suit. They left the owners of the ship to defend the suit, and say they are now ready to pay their share of the salvage. Extreme injustice would be done if the court were to sanction that course. The owners of the cargo would lie by, and then, when the owners of the ship had obtained a reduction of the amount of salvage claimed, they would take advantage of it." A little afterwards, in the case of The Mary Pleasants, Swabey, 224, Dr. Lushington dwelt on the difficulty in estimating the remuneration to be paid by the ship apart from that to be paid by the cargo. This appears to be only nsonant with common sense. It is easy to imagine case, such as that of a general ship, the cargo having ossibly passed to many foreigners, in which separate ctions against each individual owner would be impossible. Again, in the case of an agreement for the mount of remuneration which ought to be made by he master on behalf of cargo as well as ship (The Vestminster, 1 W. Rob. 235), it would clearly be wrong, f it can be avoided, that the validity of such agreenent could be called in question in several actions, vith possibly different results. But, apart from any pecial circumstances, it would seem clear that when he question at issue depends upon one set of facts, nd is the determination of the total amount of remuneration which several persons have to pay, and which they all have to make good, by general and apportioned contribution, all such persons should, if possible, be before the court. It was argued by Sir Walter Phillimore that it would be against international comity to bring the case of these foreign owners of cargo here; but it appears to me that the principle of international comity may be more soundly invoked to sanction the determination of an inquiry in a question of salvage by the tribunal which is seised of a portion of it, especially as conflict of jurisdiction can always be prevented by compelling the plaintiff to elect under which tribunal he will proceed. I think, therefore, that this motion must be rejected.

* The attention of the court does not seem to have been drawn to the fact that the 19th section of the Common Law Procedure Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), which gave jurisdiction in certain cases over actions commenced against foreigners residing out of the jurisdiction, had no application whatever to causes in the High Court of Admiralty, or to the somewhat serious question whether any construction of ord. 11, r. 1, sub-section g, which would, in point of jurisdiction, extend that rule to matters not covered by the statutes in force previously to the Judicature Act, would not be a construction making the sub-section so construed ultrà vires.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Cooper & Co.

Solicitors for the owners of the cargo, Stokes, Saunders, & Stokes.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. July 18.

In re OPERA (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Debenture-holders—Execution creditor—Sheriff—Mistake in law—Goods seized, but not sold, by sheriff before winding up—Priority of debenture-holders.

Goods consisting of the theatrical properties of a company carrying on the business of a theatre were seized by the sheriff under writs of fi. fa. issued by two judgment creditors of the company. On the day following the seizure a creditors' petition was presented to wind up the company, and a winding-up order was subsequently made and a liquidator appointed. Between the date of the presentation of the petition and that of the winding-up order, the sheriff, of his own accord, took the moneys paid by the public at the doors of the theatre, and thereout paid the two execution creditors the amount of their judgment debts. After the winding-up order had been made the sheriff withdrew from possession without selling the goods he had seized, and these goods were taken possession of by the liquidator, and subsequently sold by him. The sheriff, under an order made in the winding up, having been obliged to pay the whole amount of the moneys taken by him at the doors of the theatre to the liquidator, made an application that the liquidator might be ordered to repay the sheriff, out of the proceeds of sale of the goods seized by the sheriff, but given up to, and sold by, the liquidator, the sum paid by the sheriff to the two execution creditors. The sheriff's application was opposed by the liquidator, and also by debenture-holders whose debentures constituted a floating charge, payable on demand, on the undertaking and all the property, present and future, of the company.

Held (reversing on this point the decision of Kekewich J., reported ante, p. 398, [1891] 2 Ch. 154), that the goods seized, but not sold, by the sheriff were covered by the debentures, and that the debenture-holders were entitled to be paid out of the moneys in the hands of the liquidator arising from the sale of such goods, in priority to the two execution creditors, and therefore in priority to the claim for repayment made by the sheriff.

In re Standard Manufacturing Co., ante, p. 369, [1891] 1 Ch. 627, at p. 641, discussed and approved.

Appeal from the decision of Kekewich, J. (reported ante, p. 398, [1891] 2 Ch. 154).

The Opera (Limited) was a company formed under the Companies Acts for the purpose of carrying on the business of Her Majesty's Theatre, Haymarket. The company had issued debentures of £100 each payable to bearer on demand, which constituted a first charge "on the undertaking and other the real and personal property, present and future, of the company by way of floating security."

On the 16th of January, 1890, the sheriff of the County of London, under a writ of fi. fa. issued by C. Alias, seized certain goods (consisting of theatrical properties) of the Opera Co. at the theatre.

On the 17th of January another writ of fi. fa. against the company was lodged with the sheriff by one Calderwood.

On the 18th of January petitions to wind up the company were presented by Alias and other creditors of the company.

From the 18th to the 27th of January the sheriff received the moneys paid by the public for entrance to the theatre, which amounted to £1,495.

On the 24th of January a provisional liquidator was appointed by the court, and on the same day the sheriff, out of the moneys which he had then taken at the doors of the theatre, paid out Alias and Calderwood the amount of their respective debts. There was no evidence to show whether this payment was made, in fact, before or after the appointment of the provisional liquidator.

On the 31st of January the theatre was closed, and on the 1st of February the usual compulsory winding-up order was made on the petitions presented of the 18th of January, and an official liquidator was appointed.

The sheriff had not sold the goods which he had seized on the 16th of January.

On the 8th of February Kay, J., ordered the sheriff to withdraw from possession as regarded any judgment or execution obtained since the presentation of the winding-up petitions; and on the 10th of February the sheriff withdrew from possession without having sold any of the goods seized by him, and the official liquidator took possession of the same, which he subsequently sold for an amount largely exceeding the amount of the judgment debts which had been paid by the sheriff to Alias and Calderwood.

On the 13th of May, North, J., ordered the sheriff to pay to the official liquidator the whole amount of the moneys taken by the sheriff at the doors of the theatre without prejudice to any rights of the sheriff against the goods seized by him before the presentation of the petitions. The sheriff accordingly paid the moneys so received by him to the official liquidator.

On the 17th of December the sheriff took out a summons asking that the official liquidator might be ordered to pay to him, out of the moneys received by the official liquidator by the sale of the goods seized by the sheriff under the writs of fi. fa. [illegible] the 16th and 17th of January, the amounts of [illegible] paid by the sheriff to Alias and Calderwood, together with the sheriff's charges in respect thereof. The debenture-holders appeared on the hearing of this summons, and claimed to be entitled to be paid, out of the proceeds of the goods so sold by the official liquidator, in priority to the execution creditors. Kekewich, J., held that as the assets in the hands of the official liquidator had been increased by a transaction occasioned by an honest mistake of law on the part of the sheriff, the court would not allow the liquidator, its own officer, on behalf of the creditors of the company, to take advantage of the mistake; that the debenture-holders, notwithstanding their security, were in no better position than the ordinary creditors of the company, both being represented by the official liquidator, and, accordingly, that the official liquidator should pay to the sheriff the amount claimed by the summons.

(a.) Reported by M. J. BLAKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The debenture-holders and the official liquidator appealed.

Marten, Q.C., E. Beaumont, and Manby, for the appellants.—The debentures constitute a charge on the undertaking and all the property, present and future, of the company, and the execution creditors can only take subject to that charge. The sheriff cannot by mere seizure get rid of the right of the debenture-holders to which the property seized was subject when in the hands of the company: In re Standard Manufacturing Co., ante, p. 369, [1891] 1 Ch. 627, at p. 641; In re Florence Lands and Public Works Co., 27 W. R. 236, 10 Ch. D. 530. The case of Willmott v. London Celluloid Co., 35 W. R. 145, 34 Ch. D. 147, is distinguishable, as there the moneys in question were the earnings of a trading company, and were not covered by the debentures.

Warmington, Q.C., and Vernon Smith, for the sheriff.—Here the debentures do not expressly authorize the debenture-holders to carry on the business of the company or to appoint a receiver. The debenture-holders are not entitled to any account of mesne profits or of any dealing with the property of the company while it was a going concern: In re Panama Royal Mail Co., 18 W. R. 441, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 318. As the sheriff could have been paid by the company out of mesne profits, notwithstanding the existence of the debentures, so the sheriff was entitled to pay himself out of mesne profits notwithstanding the existence of the debentures. The form of the debentures in In re Standard Manufacturing Co. was very special.

Marten, Q.C., in reply.—The theatrical properties seized by the sheriff were never sold by him; he gave them up without selling to the official liquidator, by whom they were afterwards sold, and it is with respect to the proceeds of their sale that Kekewich, J., has made the order now under appeal. [LINDLEY, L.J.—Do you object to any order we now make being without prejudice to any future application by the sheriff for repayment out of moneys (if any) in the hands of the official liquidator not covered by the debentures?] I do not object to that, but there are, in fact, no such moneys.

LINDLEY, L.J.—This is an appeal against an order of Kekewich, J., which ordered the official liquidator of the "Opera (Limited)," out of moneys received by him from the sale of the property of the "Opera (Limited)" seized by the sheriff under two writs of fi. fa. lodged with the sheriff on the 16th and 17th of January, 1890, to pay to the sheriff the amount of the judgment debts in respect of which the two writs issued, and the sheriff's charges in respect thereof.

When that order came to be scanned before us, it was admitted by Mr. Warmington that there was considerable difficulty in supporting it, and unquestionably there is, because that order and the judgment of Kekewich, J., does not give effect to the fact, which appears to be the case, that the goods, the sale of which are referred to in the order, were comprised in the security of the debenture-holders; and after the decision in In re Standard Manufacturing Co. it seems to be tolerably plain and settled that the holders of those debentures could prevail even as against the execution creditors, at least before sale. What their position is after the property is sold and the money handed over I do not know, and I will not at this moment say. But, bearing in mind that these goods were comprised in the security of the debenture-holders, it is obvious, in my opinion—and it has been almost conceded practically—that the order, in the form in which it now stands, is erroneous.

That, however, does not conclude the case, because it may be that the sheriff is entitled to be repaid by the liquidator the sum in question out of the assets of this company (if there are any) not comprised in the debentures. As to that there is not any real contest. Mr. Marten does not object to a variation of the order in that way—i.e., discharging the present order and making the discharge to be without prejudice to any fresh application which the sheriff may make for payment by the liquidator out of the property not comprised in the debentures if there be any such property. Whether there is or is not we are not in a position at present to decide. I am not satisfied whether there is or is not.

It is possible, if Mr. Warmington's argument be correct, that some of the money which the liquidator now has may be applicable towards the payment of the sheriff. With that variation I think Mr. Marten is right, and the order as it now stands is erroneous, because it overlooks the rights of the debenture-holders.

FRY, L.J.—I an of the same opinion. It is impossible not to feel some sympathy with the sheriff in this case, because he appears to have acted with great consideration and with a desire to prevent unnecessary injury to the Opera. But, at the same time, it is impossible to give effect to this sympathy at the expense of the owners of a legal or equitable charge upon the property of the company, owners who in no way influenced or induced the sheriff to do what he did. Now the order of the learned judge has directed repayment to the sheriff out of the money that has been received by the official liquidator, including property which, it is conceded at the bar, belonged to the debenture-holders; in other words, that the debenture-holders are to pay for something that was not done at their instance or by their request.

I think, therefore, that all we can do is to discharge the order, reserving to the sheriff liberty to apply hereafter, if so advised, for repayment from any money coming to the hands of the official liquidator which is not subject to or charged by the debentures of the company.

LOPES, L.J.—The order of Kekewich, J., overlooks the right of the debenture-holders, whatever they may be, and I think, therefore, that order cannot stand.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Boxall & Boxall.

Solicitors for the respondent, Lewis & Lewis.

From Chan. Div. April 23, 28.

In re NATIONAL DEBENTURE AND ASSETS CORPORATION. (a.)

Company — Memorandum of association — Number of signatories — Certificate of registration — Evidence — Winding up — Jurisdiction — Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 6, 17, 18, 145.

The registrar's certificate of incorporation of a company is not conclusive evidence that the memorandum of association was in fact signed by at least seven persons; evidence can be adduced to show that in fact the memorandum was signed by less than seven persons, and, if that fact be established, the court has no jurisdiction to make a winding-up order.

In re Northumberland and Durham District Banking Co., 6 W. R. 527, 2 De G. & J. 357, approved.

Peel's case, 15 W. R. 1100, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 674, and Oakes v. Turquand, 15 W. R. 1201, L. R. 2 H. L. 325, distinguished.

Appeal from Kekewich, J.

The company in this case was registered in May, 1888, under the Companies Acts, 1862. In November, 1890, the company passed a resolution for a voluntary winding up, and appointed Mr. Hibbert as liquidator. An order was subsequently made by Kekewich, J., that the voluntary winding up should be under the supervision of the court, and the appointment of the liquidator was continued.

Persons claiming to be creditors of the company then presented a petition for a compulsory winding-up order and that the voluntary liquidator might be removed. The petitioners alleged fraud in the formation and management of the company, and as illustration of the alleged fraud, gave some evidence which tended to show that the memorandum of association had not in fact been signed by seven persons, but that one of the signatories, Henry Moore, had signed twice, once in his own name and again under the assumed name of Frederick Sanguin. The voluntary liquidator then took the objection that as, on the petitioners' evidence, only six persons had signed the memorandum of association, the company had never been legally constituted or incorporated, and, therefore, that the court had no jurisdiction to make an order on the petition.

Kekewich, J., came to the conclusion on the evidence before him that the memorandum of association had not in fact been signed by seven persons; that the certificate of incorporation of the company given by the registrar was not conclusive evidence in such a case that all the requisitions of the Companies Act, 1862, in respect of registration had been complied with; and that the court had, therefore, no jurisdiction to make the compulsory winding-up order asked for by the petition.

The petitioners appealed.

The Court of Appeal, not being satisfied that the evidence before the court below established the fact that there were less than seven signatories to the memorandum of association, gave the appellants liberty to adduce further evidence on that point.

Messrs. Kotchkie and Wickens, directors of the company, and Mr. Watson, a solicitor, were examined viva voce in court. From their evidence the Court were satisfied that Moore and Sanguin were in fact different persons, and that there were in fact seven signatories to the memorandum of association.

Warmington, Q.C., and C. E. E. Jenkins, for the appellants.

Marten, Q.C., and Warrington, for the liquidator.

G. White, for creditors.

The following cases, on the question of jurisdiction, were cited in the court below and dealt with by Kekewich, J., in his judgment:—Padstow Total Loss and Collision Assurance Association, 30 W. R. 326, 20 Ch. D. 137; In re Nassau Phosphate Co., 24 W. R. 692, 2 Ch. D. 610; In re Northumberland and Durham District Banking Co., 6 W. R. 527, 2 De G. & J. 357; Wenlock v. River Dee Co., 38 Ch. D. 534, 37 W. R. Dig. 43; Peel's case, 15 W. R. 1100, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 674; Oakes v. Turquand, 15 W. R. 1201, L. R. 2 H. L. 325.

LINDLEY, L.J.—This is a petition of a somewhat unusual character as regards the circumstances under which it is presented, although it is common enough in point of form. A company was formed, apparently in a proper way, by the registration of a memorandum of association with seven signatures, and it was registered on the 8th of May, 1888. There has been a voluntary liquidation which has been converted into a liquidation subject to the supervision of the court. Now some of the creditors are of opinion that matters require investigation which could be more effectually done under a compulsory order, and have therefore presented a petition for a compulsory order. The case came before Kekewich, J., and he dismissed the petition upon the ground that the company in question consisted of less than seven members, and had always consisted of less than seven members, and that there was no jurisdiction to wind it up. His decision on that point was based on the construction of the 16th and 18th sections of the Companies Act, 1862; and although by the 18th section it is enacted that "a certificate of the incorporation of any company given by the registrar shall be conclusive evidence that all the requisitions of this Act in respect of registration have been complied with," it was decided as long ago as the time of Knight Bruce and Turner, L.JJ., in the case of In re The Northumberland and Durham District Banking Co., that the registrar could not by a certificate create a jurisdiction in himself so as to enable companies to be registered to which the Act had no application. It is a condition precedent, for example, that the company shall be registered under the Act; that it shall consist of seven members; and if it consists of four or five, the registrar cannot, by his certificate, incorporate the company. Kekewich, J., came to the conclusion that this company had not consisted of seven members, and if that had been right in point of fact, his decision would have been correct in point of law. We did not feel satisfied ourselves about that fact, and we directed the petition to stand over in order that there should be liberty to the petitioners to adduce further evidence before us on that point. That accounts for the somewhat unusual circumstance that we have had persons examined here as witnesses; and, having heard their evidence, it seems to me that there is no reason to suppose that there were not seven persons who signed that memorandum. It is quite obvious that Mr. Moore is one person, Mr. Sanguin is another person, and Mr. Kotchkie is a third person. Although doubt was thrown on the existence of seven signatories, the evidence does not, to my mind, rebut the presumption which would be, after the certificate given by the registrar, that the Act was duly complied with, and that there were seven. Therefore, the doubt which induced Kekewich, J., to refuse to make an order is dispelled by the further evidence which has been adduced before us.

It comes, therefore, now to the simple question of whether it is necessary and proper for the protection of the creditors to make a winding-up order—a compulsory order—instead of continuing the supervision order. I certainly have not heard any attack made on

(a.) Reported by M. J. BLAKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

years carried on a publishing business, executed a deed reciting that the partners had sold their business to a limited company in consideration of certain fully paid-up shares in the company, which formed the only assets of the partnership, and that they were desirous of modifying their partnership with a view to its registration as an unlimited company under Part VII. of the Companies Act, 1862; and containing mutual covenants between the present partners and any future members of the company, that they should be subject to certain provisions therein contained. The sole object of the deed was, in fact, to obtain registration as a company under Part VII. of the Act. This deed was produced to the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, and an application made to him to register the company.

Held, reversing the decision of the Divisional Court (Cave and Charles, JJ.), that the application could not succeed.

Rule calling on the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue commanding him to register a partnership of seven persons as a company incorporated under Part VII. of the Companies Act, 1862.

In the year 1879 the bookselling and publishing business of W. H. Allen & Co. was transferred to Mr. Johnston. In 1882 two other persons were taken in by Mr. Johnston as members of the partnership, and in 1886 another person was admitted by Mr. Johnston under a contract which permitted a transfer of parts of any share or interest, not exceeding one-half of the remainder, to such persons as Mr. Johnston should think fit, subject to approval by any partner; and Mr. Johnston from time to time made sales of shares in the partnership to different persons during the years 1887 to 1889, and all these members paid either by way of purchase or brought capital into the business.

Since the 4th of December, 1889, the partnership consisted of the seven persons who now sought the registration, and the contracts relating to the partnership and constituting the same were dated the 4th of December, 1889, and the 13th of March, 1891.

The partners desiring to have the partnership registered as an unlimited company under section 180 of the Companies Act, 1862, in March, 1891, made application to the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies to be registered under Part VII. of the Act—that is, under section 180—and they left with the registrar the papers required under sections 183 and 184 of the Act.

The registrar refused to register the partnership, holding that a partnership such as the one in question was not a company which could be registered under section 180. During the years 1881 to 1889 such partnerships were registered under that section when required. But in 1889 a different rule was adopted, and the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies —acting on the advice of the Board of Trade—refused to register such partnerships. It was said this view was adopted by the Board of Trade in consequence of the loss of fees and stamp duty to the Crown which arose from the registration of such private partnerships under Part VII. of the Act, and that such registration was the means of evading a large amount of stamp duty.

The deed which was sent to the registrar for registration was the deed of the 13th of March, 1891. This deed recited that, "Whereas the parties hereto (hereinafter called the partners) for some time carried on business in co-partnership as private booksellers and publishers, and whereas the partners some time since sold the said business to a company incorporated under the Companies Acts with the name of W. H. Allen & Co., Limited, in consideration of 20,000 fully paid-up shares in W. H. Allen & Co., Limited, of £5 each, and the said 20,000 shares are none of the assets of the said partnership, and whereas the partners are desirous of defining the terms of their existing co-partnership with the modifications hereinafter appearing with the view to the registration of such partnership as an unlimited company under Part VII. of the Companies Act, 1862;" and the operative part witnessed, "that each of the partners doth hereby covenant with the others of them, that the partners and the several other persons, if any, who become members of the company hereby constituted, shall, whilst holding shares in the capital of such company be and continue, until dissolved under the provisions in that behalf contained, a company under the name hereinafter specified, and that such company shall be subject to the regulations following."

The following were the material regulations:—

"The name of the company is Johnston, Heathcote, Randall, Danby, Parr, Hill, and Jibb" (these being the names of the seven partners).

"Until after the registration of the company there shall not at any time be more than twenty members."

"The objects for which the company is established are to continue and carry on the co-partnership hitherto existing between the partners, and to realize and get in the assets of the co-partnership, and to satisfy all liabilities, and to do all such other things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects."

"The capital of the company shall be £770, divided into seventy-seven shares of £10 each, and the said shares shall be divided amongst the partners as follows:—

"The said 20,000 shares of W. H. Allen & Co., Limited, shall be brought into the company by the partners. The number of directors of the company shall not be more than seven or less than three. The partners shall be the first directors of the company."

"The provisions contained in Table A. in the first schedule in the Companies Act, 1862 (except those numbered 23, 24, 25, 52, and 53—that is, those relating to conversion of shares into stock and directors), shall apply to the company, as if they were herein set forth at length."

"The company may at any time before its registration be dissolved by special resolution, and when such a resolution is passed the affairs of the company shall be wound up by the directors or otherwise as by special resolution directed."

The preamble to the Companies Act, 1862, states that, "It is expedient that the laws relating to the incorporation, regulation, and winding up of trading companies and other associations should be consolidated and amended."

Section 4 enacts: "No company, association, or partnership consisting of more than ten persons shall be formed, after the commencement of this Act, for the purpose of carrying on the business of banking, unless it is registered as a company under this Act, or is formed in pursuance of some other Act of Parliament, or of letters patent; and no company, association, or partnership consisting of more than twenty persons shall be formed, after the commencement of this Act, for the purpose of carrying on any other business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company, association, or partnership, or by the individual members thereof, unless it is registered as a company under this Act, or is formed in pursuance of some other Act of Parliament, or of letters patent, or is a company engaged in working mines within and subject to the jurisdiction of the Stannaries."

Section 5 states that the Act is divided into nine parts, t[illegible] [illegible]ich relates "to the constitution and incorporation of companies and associations under this Act," and the seventh "to companies authorized to register under this Act."

By section 6: "Any seven or more persons associated for any lawful purpose may, by subscribing their names to a memorandum of association, and otherwise complying with the requisitions of this Act in respect of registration, form an incorporated company with or without limited liability."

Section 180 (which is in Part VII.) enacts: "With the above exceptions, and subject to the foregoing regulations, every company existing at the time of the commencement of this Act, including any company registered under the said Joint-Stock Companies Acts consisting of seven or more members, and any company hereafter formed in pursuance of any Act of Parliament other than this Act, or of letters patent, or being a company engaged in working mines within and subject to the jurisdiction of the Stannaries, or being otherwise duly constituted by law, and consisting of seven or more members, may at any time hereafter register itself under this Act as an unlimited company, or a company limited by shares, or a company limited by guarantee; and no such registration shall be invalid by reason that it has taken place with a view to the company being wound up."

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., Ingle Joyce, and H. Sutton, showed cause against the rule.

Finlay, Q.C., and Theobald, in support of the rule, contended that this partnership was a company "duly constituted by law" within this section.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 17.—The judgment of the Court (Cave and Charles, JJ.) was read by CHARLES, J.—The question we have to decide in this case is whether an ordinary partnership of not less than seven persons can be registered under section 180 of the Companies Act, 1862.

For the negative it was contended, first, that such a partnership was not a company at all; secondly, that if a company, it was not a company duly constituted by law within that section; thirdly, that this particular partnership was not a bonâ fide partnership, and had no object but that of winding up the firm of Allen & Co., Limited.

As to the first point. In Ogilvie's Imperial Dictionary one of the meanings of the word "company" there given is "a number of persons united for performing or carrying on anything jointly; as, a company of players; an insurance company; 'High in office in the Goldsmith's Company'—Dickens; 'A company forges the wine'—Tennyson. [The word is applicable to private partnerships or to incorporated bodies; but where there are only a few individuals associated the concern is generally called a co-partnery, the term company being usually reserved for large associations.]"

Lindley, L.J., in his Book on Partnership and Companies (4th ed., p. 4), says, "The fundamental distinction between partnerships and incorporated companies is that a partnership consists of a few individuals known to each other, bound together by ties of friendship and mutual confidence, and who, therefore, are not at liberty without the consent of all to retire from the firm and substitute other persons in their places; whilst a company consists of a larger number of individuals not necessarily acquainted with each other at all, so that it is a matter of comparative indifference whether changes amongst them are effected or not."

We have looked carefully through the Act of 1862, and we cannot find any indication that the word "company" in section 180 is used in any other sense than that indicated by Lindley, L.J. In section 199, a partnership consisting of more than seven members, and not registered under the Act, is included under the term "unregistered company." By tables B. and C. the same fee is charged for registering an existing company, except when there is an express exemption, as for registering a new company. It was also pointed out to us that the Legislature itself has used "company" and "co-partnership" as synonymous terms both in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113, s. 47, which is re-enacted by section 205 of the Act of 1862, and also in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, s. 2, which is repealed by that Act. Section 180 fixes the number of members required to entitle a company to registration at not less than seven. The number of members of the partnership in this case is seven, and any partner may transfer his shares without the consent of the company. It is clear, therefore, that this partnership is a company within the description given by Lindley, L.J., and we are also of opinion that it is a company within the meaning of section 180.

But, secondly, it is said that if it is a company, at any rate it is not a company constituted by law. In order to determine the meaning of this expression we must read the whole sentence, which runs thus—"Any company hereafter formed in pursuance of any Act of Parliament other than this Act, or of letters patent, or being a company engaged in working mines within and subject to the jurisdiction of the Stannaries, or being otherwise duly constituted by law." On the one hand it is said that "constituted by law" is intended to distinguish and exclude companies constituted by agreement of the parties. On the other hand, it is said that "constituted by law" means constituted according to law, and a passage in Lord Justice Lindley's book on Partnership was referred to (4th ed., p. 4), where it is said:—"A corporation is a fictitious person created by special authority (and by the law of England, by the Crown, or by Parliament), and endowed by that authority," &c., where the phrase "by the law of England" is equivalent to "according to the law of England." Further, it was pointed out that of the three kinds of companies specifically referred to in that section the first is a company formed in pursuance of an Act of Parliament, the second is a company formed in pursuance of letters patent (that is, by the Crown), and the third is a company formed by voluntary agreement, and that this embraces all the ways in which companies can be formed, although only one of the kind of companies which can be formed by voluntary agreement is indicated, so that the words "otherwise constituted by law" do not point to any fourth mode of forming companies, but must refer to other companies formed by voluntary agreement which are not engaged in working mines within and subject to the jurisdiction of the Stannaries. That a cost-book mining company is formed by agreements is expressly stated by Lindley, L.J., on Partnership, 4th ed., p. 146, and was not denied by the other side. What, then, is the meaning of "otherwise constituted by law"? It was contended that these words simply exclude companies not formed according to law—as, for instance, banking companies of over ten persons—and also all companies which are illegal, whether they are so by common law or are made so by some statute, of both of which classes of cases Lindley, L.J., gives numerous specimens (Partnership, 4th ed., p. 180, et seq.). Moreover, it was urged that this view was supported by section 183, which requires that, before registration, there shall be delivered to the registrar a copy of any Act of Parliament, Royal charter, letters patent, deed of settlement, contract of co-partnery, cost-book regulations, or other instruments constituting or regulating the company, and it was pointed out that the words "deed of settlement" and "contracts of co-partnery" appeared only applicable to companies formed by voluntary agreement, which are not cost-book mine companies. To these considerations must be added the remarkable fact that, for twenty-seven years after the Act passed, it never seems to have occurred to anybody that ordinary partnerships of seven or more members could not register under it, and a long list of companies has been cited to us which, although ordinary partnerships, have been allowed to register themselves under section 180.

We asked the Attorney-General to point out what inconvenience could result from allowing existing partnerships to register under section 180, and all he could say on that subject was that if it were done the Crown would lose certain fees on the transfer of the partnership property to the company, which, if the partnership can be registered, is transferred at once by the statute itself to the registered company, whereas, if a new company has to be formed to take over the business of the old partnership, fees must be paid to the Crown on the transfer of the property of the old partnership to the new company. This does not appear to us a sufficiently good reason for departing from a construction of the section which is reasonable in itself and has the sanction of twenty-seven years' usage, and consequently we hold that the contention of the prosecution on this point is correct.

The third point which was raised by Mr. Ingle Joyce was of a much narrower kind. It was urged that this particular company was not a bonâ fide company; that it had no business, and was simply formed for the purpose of winding up the company of W. H. Allen & Co. It would rather seem that the partnership in question is formed for the purpose of winding up itself, and it was pointed out by Mr. Theobald that by section 180, the registration is not to be invalid by reason that it has taken place with a view to the company being wound up. We see no reason to think that this was a bogus company, and we are, therefore, of opinion that this third objection fails like the others, and that the rule must be made absolute.

July 28.—The registrar appealed.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., Ingle Joyce, and H. Sutton, for the appellant, pointed out that such companies as this had, in fact, been only registered under Part VII. during the years 1881 to 1889, and not for twenty-seven years, as stated in the judgment of the court below.

Finlay, Q.C., Buckley, Q.C., and Theobald, for the respondents.

LINDLEY, L.J.—This is a very ingenious attempt to drive a coach and four through this Act of Parliament, but I do not think it can be successful. The facts are simple enough. There were seven partners who have been carrying on the business of booksellers and publishers, under the firm of Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co. They have sold the whole of their business to a limited company, and are partners only in this sense, that they have not formally dissolved partnership, and have not discharged their liabilities; but they are not carrying on any business, nor do they profess to do so. They desire to avail themselves of Part VII. of the Companies Act, 1862, and to get themselves in some way, if possible, registered under it, for the purpose of winding up their affairs; and with this view they executed this ingenious deed of the 13th of March, 1891. [His lordship then referred to the material portions of it.] The whole object of this deed, as appears from the provisions of it, is to obtain registration under the Act; for though the deed contains the statement that one of the objects for which the company was established was "to continue and carry on the co-partnership hitherto existing between the partners," this is deliberately untrue. Upon their taking this deed to the registrar, he refused to register the company under Part VII., and they thereupon obtained a mandamus from the Divisional Court compelling him to do so, on the ground that this company was within section 180 of the Act. From this the registrar has appealed.

It is necessary to look at the general scope of the Act of 1862, and its structure. [His lordship then went through the main divisions of the Act, and continued:—] This distribution of the Act is important. It seems to me it would be quite contrary to the whole scheme of the Act that a company should be formed for the sole purpose of registration under Part VII. The Act was framed on the theory that companies which were to be formed by registration under it were to be registered under Part I., and section 6 appears to me to involve this negative, that a company is not to be formed and registered under the Act except under section 6. I think it is impossible otherwise to carry out the provisions of the Act.

But that is not the object of the applicants in the present case; for they desire to be registered under section 180, saying that they come within the words "any company hereafter formed . . . . being otherwise duly constituted by law." In order then to bring the case within section 180, it must be established that we are dealing with a company (whatever that may be), and a company "duly constituted by law." To what extent and in what sense was this a "company," and "duly constituted by law"?

At first, I must confess, I did not see how they could be a company at all; because I understand a company to be an association of persons, the shares of each member of which are transferable without the consent of the others, and I cannot discover any provision to that effect in the deed. Mr. Buckley, however, has pointed out that there is a possible provision for the transference of shares under the 11th provision of the deed, which incorporates certain provisions of Table A. of the Act, some of which I will assume to be applicable, and that this, therefore, is or may be a company of some kind.

Section 180 does not state for what purpose such a company may be formed; but it is said that this being a company, is brought within the words of the section, "duly constituted by law," because there is no law against it. I will not say that there cannot be a company of less than twenty members, formed since the Act of 1862, capable of being registered under Part VII. of that Act. But even assuming that such a company formed to carry on business could be registered under Part VII., it does not carry the present case; for I can find nothing in Part VII. to warrant the notion that a company formed for no other purpose than that of registration under Part VII., and thus evading the whole of the provisions of Part I., can be thus registered. Section 180 points to a company carrying on business, and it is an entire misconstruction and misuse of the Act of Parliament to suppose that a company formed for the mere purpose of registration can be registered under Part VII.

FRY, L.J.—I take the same view as Lindley, L.J., in this case. The question mainly turns on section 180 of the Companies Act, 1862, and the words "otherwise duly constituted by law." Do these words include the case of this company? The inclination of my opinion as to these words is that I am not prepared to hold that they cover a mere prithe costs so incurred (being in effect the costs of taking possession of the property, obtaining and enforcing a personal judgment against the applicant, and attempting to sell the property on the mortgagee's instructions) on such of the documents in his custody as related to the title of the mortgaged property.

These documents had originally come into his possession as solicitor to the applicant, but were alleged to have afterwards been held by him on behalf of the mortgagee.

The respondent made out his bill for the abovementioned costs in the name of the applicant, but admitted at the bar that the applicant had given him no express retainer, and that he had no bill against the applicant personally. The question of lien, therefore, alone was argued.

Maidlow, for the applicant.—The mortgagee has no lien against me now, and therefore the respondent's lien being derived entirely from the mortgagee is gone: Wakefield v. Newbon, 6 Q. B. 276; Pratt v. Vizard, 5 B. & Ad. 808; Pelly v. Wathen, 1 De G. M. & G. 16.

A. J. Allen, for the respondent.—I rely upon Ogle v. Story, 4 B. & Ad. 735; In re Jones, 8 Beav. 479; Ex parte Cobeldick, 32 W. R. 239, 12 Q. B. D. 149.

Maidlow, in reply.—Ogle v. Story is virtually overruled by Wakefield v. Newbon. See also Cordery on Solicitors, 214; Hollis v. Claridge, 4 Taun. 807; Cattell v. Simons, 6 Beav. 304; Williams on Personal Property, p. 37, 12th edition.

Cur. adv. vult.

August 5.—CHITTY, J., stated the facts and continued:—I will assume in favour of the respondent that among the documents he holds there are some which relate to the title of the mortgaged property, and that though he received them originally from the applicant, the custody was changed, and that he afterwards held them as solicitor for the mortgagee.

After the admission of the respondent that he had no bill of costs against the applicant personally, it is clear that the lien claimed on the documents of title is only a lien in virtue of the right of the mortgagee to hold such documents.

But it appears from the evidence that the applicant has settled all accounts with his mortgagee, and that the mortgagee has no longer any claim against him for the costs included in the bill in question, and consequently no lien as against him on the documents of title, nor any right to withhold them from him. There is no suggestion in the evidence that the settlement of accounts between the applicant and his mortgagee (who was mortgagee in possession) was come to for the purpose of defeating any lien of the respondent, and it is unnecessary to consider what might have been the effect of such evidence if given. The question then is whether the respondent has any lien on the documents of title as against the applicant. The nature of a solicitor's lien is so well established that it is scarcely necessary to state its nature or on what grounds it is founded. It is not the result of contract; it is not an equitable charge; it is not an incumbrance affecting the estate itself (see the judgment of Lord St. Leonards in Blunden v. Desart, 2 Dr. & W., at p. 425). It does not confer on the solicitor any higher right to retain deeds than the client himself has (Ib. 418).

There is some error in the language attributed to the judges who decided Ogle v. Story, as reported in 4 Barn. & Ad. 735, where apparently an attorney's lien is spoken of as a pledge. In the case as reported in 2 L. J. N. S. K. B. 110, the term "pledge" does not appear. This case was cited as an authority for the respondent; but it has no bearing on the case before me. It was an action to recover money from the attorney; the true ground of the decision was, that the plaintiff had overpaid the mortgagee (Fulwood), and the plaintiff ought to have sued him and not the attorney (see the judgment of Lord St. Leonards, 2 Dr. & War., at pp. 426, 427). The nature of a solicitor's lien is stated clearly in the judgment of the court delivered by Lord Cranworth in Pelly v. Wathen. He says (vide 1 De G. M. & G., at p. 23): "The general lien of a solicitor is merely a right to keep back from his client the deeds and papers which he holds as solicitor until his bill of costs is satisfied. It is a right derived entirely through the client, and therefore, on the most obvious principles of justice, cannot go beyond the right of the client himself. If the client's right to the deeds which came to the hands of the solicitor is absolute, so will be the right of the solicitor. If the deeds in the hands of the client are subject to any rights outstanding in third parties, such rights will follow them into the hands of the solicitor. These consequences flow so immediately from the nature of the relation subsisting between the client and his solicitor that, even independently of authority, we should have felt bound by the principles on which they depend." And, again, at page 24, he says (in effect) that the right to hold title deeds in virtue of a solicitor's lien is subject to all rights, legal and equitable, affecting them in the hands of the person from whom he received them. These principles are illustrated by numerous authorities which it is unnecessary to cite. From these it follows that, where the mortgagor has paid to the mortgagee all that is due to him for principal, interest, and costs, and the mortgagee has given the mortgagor a release, the mortgagee's solicitor has no right to retain the deeds as against the mortgagor, even for costs due to the solicitor from the mortgagee for work done relating to the mortgaged property pending the mortgage. The equitable right of the mortgagor to have back from the mortgagee his deeds on payment of principal, interest, and costs prevails against the solicitor's lien claimed in right of the mortgagee.

In Wakefield v. Newbon, 6 Q. B. 276, there had been a reconveyance to the mortgagor, and it was held that he was entitled to recover the deeds from the mortgagee's attorney. Here the mortgagee has released the mortgagor and conveyed the property to another mortgagee by the direction of the mortgagor. The only difference between the cases is that there the mortgagor had a legal right to the deeds; here he only has an equitable right. If the new mortgagee had claimed the deeds, the result might have been different, but he has made no such claim. The documents of title having originally come into the possession of the respondent as solicitor for the applicant, the applicant is entitled to have them delivered back to him now that the lien is gone.

There is no question as to the applicant's right to have back all documents belonging to him not relating to the mortgaged property.

The order must be in the usual form, for delivery of all documents in the respondent's hands on oath. The respondent must pay the costs. Inasmuch as the documents came into the possession of the respondent originally as solicitor for the applicant, it is not necessary that an action should be brought: the order can properly be made in the matter of the solicitor.

It is unnecessary to consider the question whether by setting up wrongly a lien to retain the documents for a debt due from the applicant personally, the spondent has not waived his lien. See Dirks v. Richards, 4 Man. & Gr. 574.

Order made.

Solicitors for the applicant, Indermaur & Brown, for T. Roberts, Newport, Monmouth.

Solicitors for the respondent, Thomas White & Sons.

Q. B. Div. (Cave and Charles, JJ.) June 5, 9.

OSBORNE v. THE SKINNERS' COMPANY. (a.)

Public health—Demolition of unhealthy dwelling-house—Notice to owner—Definition of "owner"—The Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 70), s. 29, and Form C., schedule 4.

The definition of "owner" in Part II. of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, is that given by section 29 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 18), as "the person or corporation entitled to sell or convey" the property in question, and notice to such person or corporation of proceedings for demolition under the above Act of 1890 is sufficient, notwithstanding that the Form C. in Schedule 4 is drawn as applicable to an owner under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 4—namely, a person in receipt of the rack-rent.

Rule nisi for a mandamus to a metropolitan magistrate to hear and determine a summons under the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890.

Notice had been served upon the Skinners' Company by the plaintiff as clerk to the local sanitary authority for the demolition of certain dwelling-houses declared to be dangerous to health, of which the company were owners in fee. The magistrate dismissed the summons on the ground that the Skinners' Company had parted with possession of the premises upon a lease of ninety-nine years of which more than twenty-one remain unexpired, and that they were not, therefore, "owners" within the meaning of the Act.

The notice to the company was in Form C. of Schedule 4 of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, which recites that whereas the person before the court is "an owner within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1875." The plaintiff obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus.

Poland, Q.C., and Avory, for the Skinners' Company, showed cause against the rule.—The form is drawn under section 32 (2) of the Act. It expressly refers to the fact of the owner, within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1875, having had notice. By that Act and the Nuisance Removal Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 41), an owner is a person receiving the rack-rent. The company are not such owners: Cook v. Montague, 20 W. R. 624, L. R. 7 Q. B. 418, is applicable.

Moreton Smith, for the plaintiff, was not called upon.

CAVE, J.—This appeal must be allowed, and the rule be made absolute. The definition in section 29 of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, of the expression "owner" is, "in addition to the definition given by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, to include all lessees or mortgagees of any premises required to be dealt with under this part of this Act, except persons holding or entitled to the rents or profits of such premises for a term of years of which twenty-one years do not remain unexpired."

The question here is whether this definition applies to the word "owner" in section 32, which enacts that where, on the representation of any officer of the local authority, or upon certain other information, any dwelling-house is reported to be in a state dangerous or injurious to health, or unfit for human habitation, the local authority "shall forthwith take proceedings against the owner or occupier for closing the dwelling-house under the enactments set out in the third schedule to this Act." These enactments include the Sanitary Act, 1866, as applicable to the metropolis, and the Public Health Act, 1875, as applicable to elsewhere than the metropolis.

Mr. Poland argues that the word "owner" in section 32 should be confined to the "owner for the time being receiving the rack-rents" of the dwelling-house in question under the definition in the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 4. It would be remarkable if the Legislature gave one definition in section 29 to be applicable to this part of the Act, and in this same part, on the next occasion of the use of the word, should have intended to use it in another sense. This would be still more extraordinary, seeing that this Act of 1890 is a consolidation of previous Acts, including the Artisans' and Labourers' Dwellings Act, 1868 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 130), under which the definition of "owner" is the same as under section 29 of this Act. Under the Act of 1868 notice could be given to an owner undoubtedly in the position of the Skinners' Co. here, notifying that alteration or demolition of the premises reported against would be required, and after demolition compensation could be paid to the owner. That is exactly what the local authority may do under this Part II. of the Act of 1890. It is incredible that the Legislature should retain the same definition and yet, in a similar enactment, have intended that that definition should not apply as before.

By section 33, "where a closing order has been made in respect of any dwelling-house, then the local authority, if of opinion that the dwelling-house has not been rendered fit for human habitation . . . . shall pass a resolution that it is expedient to order its demolition." Notice of such resolution is to be served on "the owner" of the dwelling-house, and unless "the owner" undertakes the demolition of it, the local authority must undertake that work; and by section 34, after deducting the expenses, the local authority shall pay to the owner the balance after the sale of the materials.

In all these sections the word "owner" must be read as applicable to a person coming within the definition of section 29. Any limitation of the word to the receiver of the rents and profits would bring about this disastrous result, among others, that an owner of a term nearing its expiration, and anxious to escape from his liability to repair, might assign his lease to some impecunious person upon whom the notice for demolition would have to be served, and who would pocket the balance handed over by the local authority, while the owner of the dwelling-house would find, on coming into his interest, that everything was demolished and that someone else had pocketed the compensation. That is only an instance of what might happen if Mr. Poland's definition were adopted in this Act. I am clearly of opinion that there was no intention under this Act to alter the definition by the Act of 1868, and re-enacted in this very Act itself.

CHARLES, J.—I am of the same opinion. Part II. of the Act of 1890 deals with "Unhealthy Dwelling Houses." By section 29, the first section of Part II., "owner" undoubtedly is made to include the present owner, whether receiver of the actual rents and profits or not. Then comes sections 32 to 34, dealing with the arrangements for the demolition of unhealthy houses. Section 47 enacted that "where an owner of any dwelling-house is not the person in receipt of the rents and profits thereof, he may give notice of such ownership to the local authority, and thereupon the local authority shall give such owner notice of any proceedings taken by them in pursuance of the Act in relation to such dwelling-house." Taking the sections together, and remembering that the Act re-enacted to a great extent the Act of 1868, they formed a consistent whole. Under section 32 the local authority must give notice of demolition to an owner as defined under the Lands Clauses Acts. If such a person is not in receipt of the rents and profits he may give notice who is, and thereupon the local authority shall give such owner—that is, the owner of the rents and profits of the dwelling-house—notice of their proceedings. Before the order for demolition is made, any person properly coming under the definition of "owner" will thus receive due notice of all proceedings under the Act. The argument of the appellants depended upon the form of notice given in the fourth schedule, and cited as applicable by section 32 (2). But that form is admittedly not applicable without alteration to proceedings by local authorities within the metropolis, and though, as altered for application within the metropolis, Mr. Poland might be entitled to rely upon it in considering the purpose of the Act; and though undoubtedly the "owner" in the form is a person not within the Lands Clauses Act, but a "receiver of rents and profits" within the Public Health Act, 1875, yet too much stress must not be laid on the statutory form which is given as an example of what is more generally applicable when a special enactment is given in the body of the Act defining "owner" in a different manner.

(a.) Reported by SPENCER L. HOLLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Rule made absolute.

Solicitor for the appellant, W. J. Ricketts.

Solicitor for the respondents, F. A. Rowland.

Q. B. Div. (Denman and Wills, JJ.) June 4.

WALKER v. CRYSTAL PALACE DISTRICT GAS CO. (a.)

Practice—Costs—Refreshers—Ord. 65, r. 27 (48).

The trial of an action occupied less than five hours on the first day, and was concluded on the next day, having occupied altogether five hours and sixteen minutes.

Held, on taxation of costs, that a refresher fee to counsel could not be allowed.

Appeal from an order of a master as to taxation of costs, referred to the court.

The trial of the action, which took place before Lord Coleridge, C.J., lasted five hours and sixteen minutes, that is to say, it began on a Wednesday at 12.15, continued till 4 that day, was resumed at 10.45 on Thursday and finished at 12.16.

The solicitor of the plaintiff, who succeeded in the action, paid a refresher to counsel; but, on taxation between party and party, the master disallowed such payment.

The plaintiff appealed.

Atherley Jones, for the plaintiff.—Ord. 65, r. 27 (48) says:—"As to refresher fees, when any cause or matter is to be tried or heard upon viva voce evidence in open court, if the trial shall extend over more than one day, and shall occupy either on the first day only, or partly on the first and partly on a subsequent day or days, more than five hours, without being concluded, the taxing officer may allow, for every clear day subsequent to that on which the five hours shall have expired," certain fees. The rule means that if a case lasts more than five hours, whether those five hours are on one day of the week, or part on one day and part on another, a refresher may be allowed for every day on which the case continues after the expiration of the five hours.

He cited Harrison v. Wearing, 27 W. R. 526, 11 Ch. D. 206; and Brown v. Sewell, 29 W. R. 295, 16 Ch. D. 517 (cases decided before the making of the rule); and Collins v. Worley, 60 L. T. N. S. 748, 37 W. R. Dig. 58, and Wicksteed v. Biggs, 52 L. T. N. S. 428 34 W. R. Dig. 44 (cases decided since the rule).

Danckwerts, for the defendants, was not called upon.

DENMAN, J.—In order that this rule should be applicable it is necessary that the trial shall extend over more than one day—i.e., shall begin on one day and last into another; and it is further necessary that either on the first day, or else partly on the first day and partly on the second, the trial shall occupy five hours without being concluded. The rule says that where that is the case the taxing officer may allow certain refreshers "for every clear day subsequent to that on which the five hours shall have expired." That means that when the five hours have expired, whether on the first or on the second day, and the case is not concluded, then, after the expiration of another "clear day," a refresher may be allowed. We need not decide whether such "clear day" means another period of five hours calculated like the first, or whether it means a day of the week. In neither sense did a clear day elapse in the present case, for the trial only lasted sixteen minutes beyond the five hours. I think that the order of the master must be affirmed.

WILLS, J.—In my opinion the word "day" is used all through the rule in the sense of a day of the week. If a case occupies more than five hours on Monday, on Tuesday there will be a right to a refresher. If it takes less than five hours on Monday, there will be no right to a refresher on Tuesday; but, if it lasts into Wednesday, then again there will be a right to a refresher, for the Wednesday is a "clear day," clear of the other days and subsequent to the Tuesday. Whether the whole of the clear day must be taken up, or whether a part is sufficient, it is not necessary to decide. The clear day must be one after that on which the first five hours expire. I agree that the order of the master was right.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Coburn & Young.

Solicitors for the defendants, Wilkins, Blyth, & Co.

Q. B. Div. (Lord Coleridge, C.J., and Mathew, J.) April 24.

FRANCE v. DUTTON. (a.)

County court—Costs—Particulars of claim—Signature of particulars by solicitor's clerk—Sufficiency of signature—Ord. 6, r. 10; ord. 27, r. 4 (County Court Rules, 1889)—Scales of Costs, Appendix.

In an interpleader action in a county court the particulars of claim were signed with the name of the claimant's solicitor by the solicitor's clerk, who had general authority to conduct his master's business. Upon an objection taken on the taxation of costs that the particulars ought to have been signed by the solicitor himself, to entitle him to costs under the rules,

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Barrister-at-Law.

Held (distinguishing Reg. v. Cowper, 38 W. R. 408, 24 Q. B. D. 533), that the signature of the solicitor's name by the clerk was a sufficient signature by the solicitor, and that the solicitor was entitled to his costs.

Appeal, by leave of the judge, from Clerkenwell County Court, the learned judge having refused to direct a review of the taxation of the claimant's costs in an interpleader issue in which the claimant had been successful.

The registrar disallowed as costs items of 12s. and 3s. 4d. for drawing particulars of claim and fair copies, and for attending lodging same, respectively.

These particulars were signed by the solicitor's clerk with the solicitor's name, and on the taxation of the costs the above items were disallowed by the registrar upon the ground that the particulars ought to have been signed by the solicitor himself, and that the signature of the solicitor's name by the clerk was not a sufficient signature of the particulars, according to the decision in the case of Reg. v. Cowper, 38 W. R. 408, 24 Q. B. D. 533.

On appeal, the learned judge, in a considered judgment, upheld the decision of the registrar, and decided that, according to Reg. v. Cowper, the particulars ought to have been signed by the solicitor himself, the signing of the solicitor's name by the clerk not being a sufficient signature within the meaning of the rules.

The claimant appealed, and the question now was whether the signature by the clerk was a sufficient signature.

W. Whately, for the appellant.—The case of Reg. v. Cowper, which the learned judge thought he was bound to follow, was different from the present case. In that case the particulars of claim were filled in on a form which contained the name of the solicitor lithographed and put on, long before the particulars were filled in. That makes a great distinction between Reg. v. Cowper and the present case, where the signature by the clerk was put on after the particulars had been filled in and completed. A second point of distinction between the two cases is that this case does not come within the same rules as Reg. v. Cowper. This is an interpleader issue, and comes under ord. 27, r. 4 (County Court Rules, 1889), which does not contain any provision that the particulars should be signed by a solicitor, whereas Reg. v. Cowper was an ordinary summons and plaint, coming under ord. 6, r. 10, which expressly provides that the solicitor shall indorse his name to the particulars. The signature of the solicitor's name by his authorized clerk is a sufficient signature by the solicitor, within the meaning of the rules. In re Hirst, 22 W. R. 857, L. R. 18 Eq. 704, and Reg. v. The Justices of Kent, 21 W. R. 635, L. R. 8 Q. B. 305, are authorities for that proposition. In the latter case it was held that a notice of appeal signed in the appellant's name by the clerk to his attorney with the appellant's authority was sufficient, on the principle which was held applicable to the case, "qui facit per alium facit per se." That case really governs the present case, and shows that the signature of the solicitor's name by his clerk, acting with his master's general authority, was a sufficient signature by the solicitor.

Jelf, Q.C. (Muir Mackenzie with him), for the respondent.—It is necessary to have the actual mind of the solicitor brought to bear upon the particular subject-matter in question. That is the meaning of these rules requiring these particulars to be signed by the solicitor, and that has not been so here. The ratio decidendi in Reg. v. Cowper was that the mind of the solicitor must follow the particular matter required, and as that had not been so there, the court held the signature insufficient for that reason. Here the same defect exists. The rules require that there must be the actual signature of the actual solicitor on the rolls; here the whole document was written out by the clerk.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—I am of opinion that this is not within the authority of Reg. v. Cowper. The question is whether a solicitor is or is not entitled to charge for certain particulars which were not signed by himself with his own hand, but were signed by his clerk, who had his general authority; and the question is whether there are any words in the Act of Parliament which make it necessary that this act should be done by the solicitor personally. I agree with the decision of the court in the case of Reg. v. The Justices of Kent, where it was laid down by Blackburn, J., that the principle applicable was the principle "qui facit per alium facit per se," though he also said that there may be cases where the statutes themselves show on the face of them that some particular act is to be done by a particular person, and then that act must be done by that person and no one else.

It is not denied here that these particulars are binding on the parties, and the sole question is whether they are properly signed by the solicitor within the meaning of the rules. Ord. 6, r. 10, of the County Court Rules, 1889, says that "the solicitor of a plaintiff suing by a solicitor shall indorse on the particulars his name," &c. Has this rule been complied with? In Reg. v. Cowper, it was held that indorsement in this rule meant signature, as it was important to show that the document had come under the actual notice of the solicitor, and that he had adopted it. In that case the signature was a lithographed signature, and the question was whether the particulars had been properly signed by the solicitor within the meaning of the rule; and it was there held that a lithographed signature, placed on a form by a lithographer, was not a signature by the solicitor. We have a different state of things here. We have a document which purports to be signed by the solicitor, and is in fact signed by his clerk, who has his general authority to conduct the business for his master, and who signed in the name of his master. Does this come within the principle "qui facit per alium facit per se"? I think it does. The solicitor authorized his clerk to do this particular act, and the act was done by the clerk within the scope of his authority. These two things take the case out of the case of Reg. v. Cowper, and therefore Reg. v. Cowper is not in point here. We think, therefore, that the items disallowed were not properly disallowed.

MATHEW, J.—I am of the same opinion. This document purports to come from the solicitor and to have been signed by him. Was it so signed by him? It was signed by the solicitor, inasmuch as it was signed by the clerk properly authorized for the purpose of so signing. The distinction between this case and the case of Reg. v. Cowper is perfectly obvious, as in that case there was a form—a lithographed form—prepared beforehand, and there was no security of any kind that the document was prepared for that particular purpose; it was, in fact, only one of a large number of forms already prepared with the solicitor's name lithographed upon it. The distinction between the two cases is sufficient to justify us in holding that these costs should have been allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant, George Castle.

Solicitors for the respondent, Cooper & Bake.

Q. B. Div. (Lord Coleridge, C.J., and Mathew, J.) May 13; June 22.

In re ONWARD BUILDING SOCIETY. (a.)

Company—Order for compulsory winding up—Purchase of shares after date of order—Right of purchaser to be placed on list of members—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 35, 98, 153.

A person who purchases shares in a company after an order has been made by the court for the compulsory winding up of the company is not entitled, under section 35 of the Companies Act, 1862, to be placed on the register of members of the company, as section 35 is not applicable to transfers after the date of a winding-up order made by the court.

Appeal from the Darlington County Court.

The facts and arguments are sufficiently stated in the judgment, the question being whether the appellant, Mr. Broad, who had purchased shares in the Onward Building Society after the date of a compulsory winding-up order made by the court, was entitled, in respect of such shares, to be placed on the list or register of members of the society under section 35 of the Companies Act, 1862.

Sir Henry James, Q.C., and W. A. Meek, for the appellant.

Seward Brice, Q.C., and Howland Jackson, for the respondent, the official liquidator of the society.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 22.—The written judgment of the COURT (Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., and MATHEW, J.), was read by MATHEW, J.—This was an appeal from the decision of the county court judge of Darlington, who had refused an application for an order directing the liquidator of the Onward Building Society to place on the register of members the name of the appellant, Mr. Broad. The society had been ordered to be wound up compulsorily, and the question was whether Mr. Broad, who purchased shares after the date of the order, was entitled, under section 35 of the Companies Act, 1862, to have his name substituted on the register for that of his vendor. Though the society had been unable to fulfil its engagements, the assets turned out to be more than sufficient to meet all liabilities, and it appeared that a considerable surplus would remain for distribution among the members. The applicant and others had made large purchases of shares, and were desirous of having their names placed on the list of members for the purpose of securing the most favourable realization of the assets, and of submitting, if necessary, their views to the court under section 91 of the Act upon any matter relating to the winding up.

The learned county court judge refused to make an order under section 35, on the ground that he had no jurisdiction. Upon the argument before us it was contended that the statute did not prohibit dealing in shares after the winding-up order had been made by the court, and it was urged that a buyer would not reap the full benefit of his contract if his name did not appear on the register of members, and that under section 35 he was entitled, as of right, to have the register rectified. The case of Rudge v. Bowman, L. R. 3 Q. B. 689, was cited in support of the argument for the appellant. On the other hand, it was argued for the liquidator that, although the statute contained no express provision on the subject, the intention of the Legislature was clear, that after the order for the winding up by the court had been made the provisions of section 35 did not enable a member to alter his status as a contributory.

It was not disputed that under the peculiar circumstances of this case the substitution of one name for another on the register would not prejudice the position of creditors. But it was pointed out that the case in which there were assets for distribution among contributories was altogether exceptional, and that, as a general rule, an order for winding up involved the payment of calls which under the Act were intended to be borne by those who were liable to be placed on the list of contributories at the date of the order. Thus, section 98 provides as the first duty of the court after the order for winding up, that a list of contributories should be settled, with power to rectify the register in all cases where rectification is required in pursuance of the Act; and this being done, the court is required to order the assets to be collected and applied in discharge of liabilities. The powers of the liquidator, under section 95, are confined to steps taken with the sanction of the court for winding up the affairs of the society and distributing the assets, and among the acts that he is empowered to do no provision is made for the alteration of the list of contributories when once settled by the court.

The learned counsel for the appellant could point to no section, except section 35, in support of the application. But it seems clear that section 35 is not applicable to transfers after the date of a winding-up order made by the court, because it contemplates a proceeding instituted without leave of the court against the society, and not against the liquidator. But once the order has been made, the leave of the court would seem to be indispensable under section 95. But it was contended that no leave was necessary because of the provisions contained in section 153. Under the terms of that section it was argued that a transfer of shares or alteration in the status of a member between the commencement of the winding up and the order could only be made with the sanction of the court; but after that date, it was said, the sanction of the court was not necessary. It followed that section 35 must be construed to apply to all such subsequent transfers. But it seems to us that the true meaning of the 153rd section is to permit, with the sanction of the court, dispositions of shares for the time specified in the section, and to prohibit all subsequent alteration of the status of members or contributories. If this be not the true construction, the most inconvenient consequences would follow in cases where calls had to be made on contributories. There would be no limit to the number of times in which transfers of shares might be made in the course of the winding up. It would be difficult to say what the position of the parties to such transaction would be; and in providing for the liabilities of the society the liquidator would be hopelessly embarrassed and delayed.

The alteration of the register under section 35 might involve most troublesome and expensive inquiry and litigation, and as a liquidator who acted properly ought not to be made responsible for costs, the expense must be cast on the assets of the society, which are already appropriated under the winding-up order to the society's creditors.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Barrister-at-Law.

We have come to the conclusion that the judgment the county court judge was right, and must be firmed, with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Linklater & Co., for ucas, Hutchinson, & Meek, Darlington.

Solicitors for the respondent, Jackson & Jackson, for . N. Watson, Darlington.

C. C. R. April 25.

REG. v. GRIFFITHS. (a.)

riminal law—Offence by bankrupt—Petition presented by bankrupt himself—Act creating criminal offence—Prospective effect—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 11, sub-sections 14, 15—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 26.

The Debtors Act, 1869, s. 11, sub-sections 14, 15, akes certain acts misdemeanours if committed by a ankrupt "within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him." The Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (which received the Royal Assent m the 18*th of August*, 1890, and came into operation on he 1*st of January*, 1891), by section 26 substitutes for he above words in section 11 of the Debtors Act, 1869, he words "within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition by or against him."

The defendant committed certain of the acts specified in sub-sections 14 and 15 in the year 1890; and within four months, but after the 1*st of January*, 1891, presented his petition, and was adjudged bankrupt.

Held, that he could not be convicted of offences under the above sections, for that section 26 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, was not retrospective, and that, to constitute an offence under that section, the acts must have been committed after the 1*st of January*, 1891.

Case stated by the recorder of the city of Worcester.

The defendant was tried at the quarter sessions for the city of Worcester, held on the 6th of April, 1891, on an indictment containing several counts charging him with offences under the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 11, sub-sections 13-15, amended by the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, s. 26.

It was proved that the defendant traded in Worcester as a boot and shoe dealer, and that, at various times in November, 1890, under the false pretence of carrying on business and dealing in the ordinary way of his trade, he, with intent to defraud, obtained a quantity of boots and shoes on credit, and had not paid for them. It was also proved that on several days in November and December, 1890, with a like intent, he pawned the goods so obtained.

On the 1st of January, 1891, the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, came into operation.

On the 14th of January, 1891, the defendant presented a petition that he might be adjudged bankrupt, and thereupon a receiving order was made, and he was duly adjudged bankrupt.

It was contended on behalf of the defendant that the acts charged against him were committed before the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, came into operation, and that, as no bankruptcy petition had been presented against him, he could not be convicted of the offences defined in the 11th section of the Debtors Act, 1869.

The learned recorder reserved the question of law, and left the case to the jury.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The jury found the defendant guilty on all the harges, and he was admitted to bail to come up for cudgment if the conviction should be affirmed.

The question for the opinion of the court was jwhether the conviction could be sustained.

The Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 11, enacts that any person adjudged bankrupt shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour in each of the following cases:—

Sub-section 14: "If, within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him, . . . he, being a trader, obtains, under the false pretence of carrying on business and dealing in the ordinary way of his trade, any property on credit, and has not paid for the same, unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to defraud."

Sub-section 15: "If, within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him, . . . he, being a trader, pawns, pledges, or disposes of otherwise than in the ordinary way of his trade, any property which he has obtained on credit and has not paid for, unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to defraud."

By section 26 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), it is enacted that "section 11 of the Debtors Act, 1869, shall have effect as if there were substituted therein for the words 'if within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him,' the words 'if within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition by or against him.'" Vachell, for the defendant.—These acts were committed in the year 1890, at which time they were not misdemeanours, for there had been no bankruptcy petition "against" the defendant. It was decided in Ex parte Wood, In re Burden, 36 W. R. 896, 21 Q. B. D. 24, that the court had no power to order a prosecution for offences under section 11 of the Debtors Act, 1869, in cases where the debtor had filed his own petition. The Bankruptcy Act, 1890, came into force on the 1st of January, 1891, and is not retrospective; in order to bring a case under that statute all the acts which constitute the offence must be done after the 1st of January, 1891.

Amphlett, for the Crown.—There is no hardship to the defendant in holding that this is an offence under the Act of 1890. That Act gave ample notice of its effect; it received the Royal Assent on the 18th of August, 1890, and it was intended that when it did come into operation on the 1st of January following it should be retrospective: Towler v. Chatterton, 6 Bing. 258; Reg. v. Leeds, &c., Railway Co., L. R. 18 Q. B. 343.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—In this case I am not prepared to say that there is not matter to be fairly adduced in argument on both sides. But on the whole I think that it is safer to hold that section 26 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, is not retroactive; and that in the case of a person who is accused of an offence under this Act all the ingredients constituting the crime must have taken effect subsequently to the 1st of January, 1891. The Act was not to come into operation until that day, and therefore it seems to me that the words in section 26 "shall have effect," must be read as "shall from the 1st of January, 1891, have effect." Now it is admitted that, if the words in section 11 of the Debtors Act, 1869, had not been altered, the acts complained of here would not have constituted any of the crimes with which the defendant is charged, because no bankruptcy petition had been presented against the defendant at that time. The alteration of the words in the earlier Act to "if within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition by or against him" by the later Act, makes for the future the offences alleged here offences against that Act, and the question is, from what period has it done so? I am of opinion from the 1st of January, 1891. I think also that that construction receives considerable support from the fact that in the 14th and 15th sections of the Debtors Act, 1869, a person is entitled to be acquitted of the offences mentioned therein if he can show that he had no intent to defraud. That defence would have been open to the defendant at the time the offences were committed. It would be a strong thing to say that a defence which was open to the defendant at the time the offence was committed has been taken away by an Act which came into operation afterwards. No authority for so holding has been shown to us. I think it is safer to hold that these acts, which were not crimes when done in November, 1890, have not been made so by the coming into operation of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, in January, 1891. I am of opinion, therefore, that this conviction must be quashed.

DENMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that full effect is given to the section by holding that it applies to acts committed after January, 1891. That is, in my opinion, the proper way to give effect to a section in relation to a criminal matter. For by giving any other construction to it we should violate the rule of law that criminal offences are not to be created by giving to a statute a retroactive effect. I am, therefore, of the same opinion as my lord.

MATHEW, J.—I am of the same opinion.

CHARLES, J.—I am of the same opinion, and only desire to add that I think it is safer to hold that in order to constitute a crime under section 26 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, it is necessary that all the ingredients of the offence should have been committed after the coming into operation of that Act.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—I only wish to add that as to the question whether these words should be construed as having a prospective effect only, I think that that is so, and that the distinction between this case and those cited, in which similar words have been held to have a retrospective effect, is that in this case no gap in the law is created by construing this section as we are doing.

Conviction quashed.

Solicitor for the prosecution, G. W. Bentley, Worcester, for The Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitor for the defendant, Dreaper, Worcester.

[THE END.]

THE

WEEKLY REPORTER DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE;

WITH

APPEALS TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND PRIVY COUNCIL;

ALSO OF

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE AND COURT OF BANKRUPTCY IN IRELAND;

FROM THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1890, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1891.

VOL. XXXIX.

LONDON: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

1891.

A DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN ENGLAND AND IRELAND,

FROM

THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1890, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1891,

AS REPORTED IN

VOL. XXXIX. OF THE WEEKLY REPORTER, 1890-91;

AND IN

OTHER LEGAL REPORTS DURING THE SAME PERIOD,

TOGETHER ALSO WITH CERTAIN OTHER CASES REPORTED THEREIN DURING THE SAME PERIOD, BUT DECIDED PREVIOUSLY THERETO.

 In the following Digest the letters H.L. after a case indicate the HOUSE OF LORDS; P.C., the PRIVY COUNCIL; C.A., the COURT OF APPEAL; LUN., LUNACY; CH.D., the CHANCERY DIVISION; KAY, J., Mr. JUSTICE KAY; CHI., J., Mr. JUSTICE CHITTY; NOR., J., Mr. JUSTICE NORTH; STI., J., Mr. JUSTICE STIRLING; KEK., J., Mr. JUSTICE KEKEWICH; ROM., J., Mr. JUSTICE ROMER; WILL., J., Mr. JUSTICE WILLIAMS; Q.B.D., the QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION; Q.B.D., BKCY., the QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION sitting in BANKRUPTCY; P.D. & A.D., the PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION; C.C.R., the COURT FOR CROWN CASES RESERVED; C. OF A.C., COURT OF THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY; C.A. (Ir.), the COURT OF APPEAL IN IRELAND; M.R. (Ir.), the MASTER OF THE ROLLS IN IRELAND; V.C. (Ir.), the VICE-CHANCELLOR OF IRELAND; L.J. (Ir.), the LAND JUDGE, IRELAND; Q.B.D. (Ir.), the QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION, IRELAND; EX.D. (Ir.), the EXCHEQUER DIVISION, IRELAND; P. & M.D. (Ir.), the PROBATE AND MATRIMONIAL DIVISION, IRELAND; C.C.R. (Ir.), the COURT FOR CROWN CASES RESERVED, IRELAND; BKCY. (Ir.), the COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, IRELAND; LAND COM. (Ir.), LAND COMMISSION, IRELAND.

 THIS DIGEST CONTAINS THE NAMES OF ALL CASES REPORTED UP TO THE END OF AUGUST, 1891.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.—See INSURANCE, ACCIDENT.

ACCOUNT STATED:—

Promise by legatee of chattel real, on being let into possession, to pay legacy charged thereon—Personal liability.—A testator devised his farm, held under a yearly tenancy, to his son, charged with certain legacies. Before the grant of probate the executors asked the son if he would take possession and pay the legacies, to which the son assented, and went into possession of the farm. In an action by one of the legatees against the son for the amount of his legacy, the jury found that the son promised to pay in consideration of being allowed by the executors to take possession,

Held, that there was sufficient consideration for the son's promise to pay the legacies, and that the legatee was entitled to judgment.—Barry v. Barry, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 45.

ACTION.—See FRIENDLY SOCIETY, 2.

ADMINISTRATION:—

1. Costs—Jurisdiction—Trustee—Personal profit.—Under an order made on further consideration of an administration action, costs were paid to solicitors. The solicitors paid over half the profit costs to a defendant, a trustee of the estate being administered.

Held, that there was no jurisdiction on summons in the action to order the defendant trustee to pay into court the amount so paid to him.—In re Thorpe, Vipont v. Radcliffe, CH.D. NOR., J.—[1891] 2 Ch. 360; 60 L. J. Ch. 529; 64 L. T. 554.

2. Costs—Real and personal estate—Order on further consideration—Costs ordered to be paid primarily out of several funds in court, of which some represented personalty only—No further consideration reserved—Liberty to apply—Subsequent application on behalf of charity legatees for apportionment of burden of costs between funds representing realty and personalty.—A testatrix devised real estate upon trust for sale, and left a mixed fund, composed of the proceeds and of pure personalty, to a legatee for life, with remainder to a charity. An action having been brought to administer the estate, the order made on further consideration directed that certain non-charitable legacies and the costs of the action should be paid primarily out of four several funds in court, some of which represented pure personalty, and that, so far as such four funds were together insufficient, the balance should be made up from another fund, representing realty only. In carrying out the order the entirety of the funds made primarily liable was exhausted, and a portion of the said fund representing realty only, was also required. No question was reserved upon that further consideration, but the order directed the income of the residue to be paid to the tenant for life, with liberty to apply. The tenant for life having died, the testatrix's heir-at-law and his assignee petitioned, nearly ten years after the order on further consideration, that the residue of the last-mentioned fund should be paid out to them.

Held, by Kay, J., that the order on further consideration was binding and conclusive as to the funds by which the costs were to be ultimately borne, and that the residue, as consisting of the proceeds of realty only, must therefore be paid to the petitioners.

Held, by Cotton and Bowen, L.JJ., that the costs of adminstering the real estate ought to be borne ultimately by the funds representing real estate only, and (reversing the decision of Kay, J.) that the order on further consideration had not finally decided the question by what funds the costs must ultimately be borne, but that, the residue fund being still under the control of the court, it was not too late properly to adjust the incidence of the costs, which must accordingly be done.

Held, by Fry, L.J., that, no subsequent further consideration and no question as to the ultimate incidence of the costs having been reserved by the order on further consideration, that order ought to be taken to have finally determined such incidence.

Sheppard v. Sheppard, 32 Beav. 129, discussed.—In re Roper, Taylor v. Bland, C.A. 101—45 Ch. D. 126; 63 L. T. 434.

3. Dower—Real estate—Proceeds of sale in court—Payment of capitalized value to doweress.—In an administration suit, real estate subject to dower was sold, and the proceeds paid into court.

Held, that the doweress was entitled to be paid the capitalized value of her dower out of the funds liable to the same.—Gleeson v. Byrne, V.C. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 361.

4. Injunction to protect assets—Bankruptcy of administrator carrying on business of deceased—Submission to jurisdiction of Bankruptcy Court.—A testator, who carried on business as a miller and farmer as "M. H. & Son," by his will bequeathed his mills, farm, stock, &c., to his son M., and he appointed M. executor, but gave no authority to carry on the business. The will was never proved. M. entered into possession and carried on the business until his death. On M.'s death intestate J., another son of the testator, entered into possession, and continued the business under the title of "M. H. & Son." J. had never been in partnership with the testator or M. He took out administration to M., and administration with the will annexed to the testator. J. was subsequently adjudicated bankrupt on the petition of a creditor who had sold him goods for the purpose of carrying on the business, and the official assignee seized all the property in his possession. The plaintiffs applied to the Bankruptcy Court to stay the realization of the property, on the ground that proceedings were pending in the Chancery Division for the administration of the testator's estate, but no rule was made. An order was made in the Chancery Division for the administration of the estates of the testator and of M. The property seized was acquired by J. in the course of carrying on the business of the testator. Upon an application for an injunction to restrain the assignee from realizing or intermeddling with the property seized, Held, (1) that the application by the plaintiffs to the Bankruptcy Court did not constitute a submission to the jurisdiction of that court so as to disentitle them to the relief asked for; (2) that the property seized was assets of the testator; (3) that an injunction should be granted, as the proper court for deciding any question in relation to the testator's assets was the court where the estate was being administered and not the court where J. was adjudicated bankrupt.—In re Hickey's Estate, M.R. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 65.

5. Married woman—Separate estate—Restraint on anticipation—Order for payment of costs by married woman—Order that arrears of income of married woman be not immediately paid to her—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), ss. 1 (2), 19.—A married woman was entitled, under the will of a testator whose estate was being administered in an action commenced before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, to part of the income of his estate for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation. In 1889 she, in her own name, without a next friend, first commenced an action in the Queen's Bench Division, and subsequently took out a summons in the administration action, for certain relief against the trustees of the will. Both her action and summons were dismissed, and she was ordered to pay the trustees their costs thereof respectively, both orders (being in the usual form as settled in Scott v. Morley, 36 W. R. 67, 20 Q. B. D. 120) limiting execution to her separate property not subject to restraint against anticipation, unless, by virtue of section 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, such property should be liable to execution notwithstanding such restraint.

At the date of these orders the trustees had in their hands a sum representing arrears of the married woman's income, which had accrued due since the date of the summons, and which was more than sufficient to pay the costs.

The trustees having applied for leave to retain their costs of the Queen's Bench Division action and of the summons out of the money in their hands,

Held (affirming the decision of Kekewich, J.), that such leave ought to be granted.

In re Glanvill, 34 W. R. 118, 309, 31 Ch. D. 532, considered and distinguished.

The principle of law on which Pike v. Fitzgibbon, 29 W. R. 551, 17 Ch. D. 454, was decided—viz. that the general engagements of a married woman can only be enforced against separate estate to which she was entitled free from any restraint on anticipation at the time such engagements were entered into—has been altered by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882.

An order of the court made merely for convenience of administration, and in effect directing that money representing arrears of income which have actually accrued due to a married woman should not be immediately paid to her, does not render such arrears "property subject to restraint against anticipation," and consequently such arrears can be taken in execution under an order made in the form settled in Scott v. Morley.—

Cox v. Bennett (No. 2), C.A. 401—[1891] 1 Ch. 617; 64 L. T. 380.

6. Overpayment to beneficiary—Liability of trustees—Costs.—A testator gave his residuary estate upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death he gave one-fourth to each of his two sons, and the other two-fourths upon trust for his two daughters and their children respectively, and appointed his wife and two sons trustees and executors. His widow and sons proved the will, but the administration of the estate was left to the widow, who distributed large sums among the beneficiaries in respect of their shares, but not equally; and one son, who was an executor and trustee, especially received considerably more than the others. Ultimately, after the death of the widow, the estate was found to be insufficient to give the other beneficiaries as much as the son had received. There was no evidence to show that the deficiency had not arisen from depreciation subsequent to the payments to the son, which primâ facie appeared probable.

Held, in an action to administer the testator's estate, that the surviving executors were not liable for the overpayment made by the widow to the son, and that the son was not bound to refund the amount he had been overpaid, but was not entitled to receive his separate costs, as the overpayment exceeded the amount of such costs.—In re Winslow, Frere v. Winslow, CH.D. NOR., J. 120—45 Ch. D. 249; 60 L. J. Ch. 20; 63 L. T. 485.

7. Secured creditor — Insolvent estate — Rules of Bankruptcy—Judicature Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 57), s. 28, sub-section 1.—In the administration of an insolvent estate a secured creditor is only entitled to interest on the amount at which he values his security from the date of valuing it, and not from the judgment for administration, which is the equivalent for an adjudication in bankruptcy. Money received by secured creditors on foot of such interest before the estate was found to be insolvent deducted from the amount payable to them for principal.—Ross v. Ross, V.C. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 362.

8. Separate account—Stop order—Contribution—Res judicata—Breach of trust—Priority.—A fund was carried over to the separate account of the defendant in an administration action, and her issue, with a direction to pay the dividends to the defendant for life, and the defendant mortgaged her interest under the order to persons who had obtained stop orders. It was afterwards discovered that when the order was made the defendant was jointly liable with the testator for a breach of trust, which had been made good out of the testator's estate. The plaintiff, a beneficiary, sought to obtain contribution from the defendant to the extent of a moiety of the liability, and to have this claim satisfied out of the funds carried over to the separate account notwithstanding the stop orders.

Held, that as between the plaintiff and the incumbrancers the matter was res judicata, and that the incumbrancers were entitled to rely on the order releasing the fund in question from the general questions in the action, and that under the order the defendant had a clear title, and the incumbrancers were entitled to priority.—In re Eyton, Bartlett v. Charles, CH.D. CHI., J. 135—45 Ch. D. 458; 59 L. J. Ch. 733; 63 L. T. 336.

9. Voluntary charge—Equitable reversionary interest—No assignment of fund—Creditors for value—Volunteer—Priority.—A mere voluntary charge on an equitable reversionary interest, although coupled with covenants for payment and further assurance, cannot be held equivalent to an assignment pro tanto so as to give the volunteer claiming thereunder priority as against creditors for value.

Donaldson v. Donaldson, 2 W. R. 691, Kay, 711, discussed.—In re Earl of Lucan, Hardinge v. Cobden, CH.D. CHI., J. 90—45 Ch. D. 470; 60 L. J. Ch. 40; 63 L. T. 538.

See also EXECUTOR; PRACTICE (IRELAND), 13, 17.

ADMINISTRATION, GRANT of.—See PROBATE, 1—10.

ADMIRALTY:—

1. Practice—Collision—Delay in instituting action in rem—Maritime lien—Change of interest—Statute of Limitations—Interest on damages.—In 1878 a collision occurred in the North Sea between a Norwegian steamer and a British vessel, in which the latter sunk. The name and place of business of the Norwegian company owning the steamer were known to the owners of the British vessel, and for one or more days, on forty-seven occasions during the following eleven years, the Norwegian steamer put into ports in the United Kingdom. During the same period there were changes in the capital and in the shareholders of the Norwegian company.

In 1889 the plaintiffs, the owners of the British vessel, instituted an action in rem against the Norwegian steamer. The owners of the Norwegian steamer, as defendants, pleaded, in bar of the action, that the claim of the plaintiffs, their rights (if any), and their maritime lien (if acquired) had been lost by laches, and that it would be otherwise inequitable to allow the action to proceed, as there had been changes of interest in the ownership of the steamer, the rights of third parties had intervened, and the greater part of the crew of the steamer were not now available to give evidence.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to prosecute their claim for damages, for in each case the particulars and circumstances must be looked at to see whether it would be inequitable to entertain the suit, considering the period of time that had elapsed since the collision, the opportunities of arresting the vessel, the loss of witnesses, the loss of evidence, and the change of property, and in this case, though the defendants would be entitled to every presumption which could fairly be made in their favour by reason of the absence of any witness, the defendants had failed to show that the merits could not be gone into.

The action was subsequently compromised on the terms that the defendants should pay to the plaintiffs one-half of the damages proceeded for. In assessing such damages the registrar awarded interest on the amount at four per cent. from the time the British vessel would probably have reached her destination (May 1, 1878) until payment.

On objection to the registrar's report, on the ground that no interest was due at all on an amount which had not been ascertained until the institution of the action, or that no interest was due under the circumstances of this case, as no claim had been made for eleven years, or that the interest should be limited to six years by analogy to the Statute of Limitations,

Held, that the interest was properly awarded for the whole period according to the practice in admiralty.—The Kong Magnus, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 223; 63 L. T. 715.

2. Practice—Costs—Collision—High Court—County court—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), ss. 3 and 9.—Where successful plaintiffs in a collision action in the High Court recovered less than £300 they were allowed no costs, although they claimed more than the county court limit.—The Herald, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 324.

3. Practice—Costs—Collision—High court—County court—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 3, sub-section 3; s. 9. —In the absence of special circumstances justifying proceedings in the Admiralty Division of the High Court, a plaintiff will not be allowed costs when, in an action of damage by collision, although he claims more, he does not recover an amount exceeding £300, that being the limit of the county court jurisdiction under section 3, sub-section 3, of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71).—The Asia, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 121; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 38; 64 L. T. 327.

4. Practice—Costs—Damage to ship—Negligence of dock official—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 3—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 51), s. 4. — By the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 3, "Any county court having admiralty jurisdiction shall have jurisdiction to try the following causes . . . (3) as to any claim for damage . . . by collision . . . in which the amount claimed does not exceed three hundred pounds."

By the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 51), s. 4, "The third section of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, shall extend and apply to all claims for damage to ships whether by collision or otherwise, when the amount claimed does not exceed three hundred pounds."

The plaintiffs brought an action in personam in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (Admiralty) of the High Court of Justice against a dock company for injuries to the amount of £221 4s. 6d. to their steamship by a collision with the dock wall, occasioned by the negligence of the servants of the dock company. The court found the dock company liable, and on the application of the defendants to disallow the costs of the action,

Held, that the plaintiffs must be refused the costs of the action, as it fell within the words of section 4 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1869, and therefore might have been brought in a county court exercising admiralty jurisdiction.—Turner v. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, The Zeta, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 216.

5. Practice—Default—Action in rem—Judgment—Registrar and merchants.—In a default action in rem the Admiralty Court will not before judgment refer the plaintiff's claim to the registrar for assessment.—The Titia, P.D. & A.D.—64 L. T. 148.

6. Practice—Evidence—Matters of nautical skill—Damage to cargo—Screw alley—Trinity Masters.—In admiralty actions, where the court is assisted by nautical assessors, evidence as to matters of nautical skill and knowledge is not admissible, and hence, where in a damage to cargo action the judge found on the advice of his assessors that all screw alleys, however well made, may emit smells which may damage sensitive cargo stowed in the vicinity, the Court of Appeal, being assisted by assessors, refused to allow the appellants, the shipowners, at the hearing of the appeal, to call evidence to show that the particular screw alley did not emit a smell, on the ground that it was a question of nautical skill about which evidence could not be given.—The Assyrian, C.A.—63 L. T. 91.

7. Practice—Evidence—Transcript of shorthand notes of evidence taken before examiner—Incorrect transcript—Application to take transcript off the file. —In an admiralty action the transcript of the shorthand notes of the evidence of witnesses directed to be examined before an examiner becomes, on being filed in the registry, evidence in the cause, and such transcript cannot be taken off the file without an order of the court.

Accordingly, in a case where the transcript of the shorthand notes of the evidence of a witness examined before an examiner was shown to be incorrect, the judge in court granted a motion ordering the transcript to be taken off the file and returned to the examiner for amendment.—The Knutsford, P.D. & A.D. 559—[1891] P. 219; 64 L. T. 352.

8. Practice—Solicitor's undertaking—Appearance—Attachment—Ord. 9, rr. 1 and 10.—Where in a collision action in rem solicitors for the defendants accept service of the writ and indorse it with the words, "We accept service on behalf of the defendants, the owners of The A., and undertake to put in bail in a sum not exceeding the value of the said barque A.," and in consequence of their authority being withdrawn by the defendants they do not enter an appearance, they do not thereby commit a breach of their undertaking so as to render themselves liable to attachment, inasmuch as they have never expressly undertaken to appear.—The Assa and Bertha, P.D. & A.D.—64 L. T. 332.

9. Practice—Writ—Service of notice of writ out of jurisdiction—Salvage—Action in personam—Foreign owners of cargo—"Necessary and proper parties to the action"—Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 11, r. 1 (g).—In a suit of salvage in personam brought against the owners of a ship and the owners of her cargo, where it appeared that the owners of the cargo were foreign subjects resident without the jurisdiction, the court being of opinion that the owners of the cargo were necessary and proper parties to the suit, and that the suit had been properly brought against the owners of the ship properly served within the jurisdiction, refused to set aside an order allowing service of notice of the writ of summons to be given to the owners of the cargo out of the jurisdiction, under sub-section g of ord. 11, r. 1, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, notwithstanding that the salved cargo had never been within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.—The Elton, P.D. & A.D. 703—[1891] P. 265; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 69.

See also COUNTY COURT, 1, 2.

ADULTERATION:—

1. Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 6, 25—Sale by servant on behalf of master—Information against servant.—An information for selling food not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded, under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, may properly be laid against a person who merely sells as a servant on behalf of his master; and such servant, not having himself purchased the article, cannot rely for his defence on section 25.—Hotchin v. Hindmarsh, Q.B.D. 607—[1891] 2 Q. B. 181.

2. Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 9—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 30), s. 3—Separate informations—Adulteration of milk—Daily supply of milk under a contract—Samples taken from separate cans—Separate informations in respect of samples found to be adulterated—Evidence as to other samples—Effect of contract.—The appellant entered into a contract with the guardians of a union to furnish a daily supply of milk at a certain price; the milk was to be tested on each delivery, and a reduction was to be made in the price if there should be less than a certain proportion of cream. An inspector of weights and measures, acting under section 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1879, procured a sample from each of five cans in which the daily supply was being delivered. Two of the samples being found to be deficient in cream, two separate informations were laid against the appellant under section 9 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, one in respect of each of the two samples.

Held, that it was right to lay separate informations; that the inspector was justified in taking separate samples; that the justices were justified in rejecting evidence as to the three other samples; and that, notwithstanding the contract, an offence had been committed against the statute.—Fecitt v. Walsh, Q.B.D. 525—[1891] 2 Q. B. 304; 60 L. J. M. C. 143.

3. Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 6, 25—Written warranty—Contract to supply milk for fixed period—Label on can.—The appellants bought milk under a written contract with a vendor for a supply of milk to them for six months, the vendor by the contract warranting each and every supply of milk to be delivered under the contract to be pure, genuine, and new milk, unadulterated, and with all its cream on. The milk was delivered at the railway terminus in cans, each can with a label stating that the milk was warranted genuine new milk with all its cream on.

Held, that this was a warranty within the meaning of section 25 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and protected the appellants.—Farmers and Cleveland Dairy Co. v. Stevenson, Q.B.D.—60 L. J. M. C. 70; 63 L. T. 776.

ADVANCEMENT.—See WILL, 1.

AGENT-GENERAL of COLONIAL GOVERNMENT.—See JURISDICTION.

AGRICULTURAL HOLDINGS ACT.—See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 1.

AIR.—See EASEMENT, 1.

ANIMALS, CRUELTY to. — See CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

ANNUITY.—See WILL, 3, 4, 5.

APPORTIONMENT:—

1. Tenant for life and remainderman—Deficiency in mortgage security—Interest in arrear.—Money in settlement was invested by trustees on a mortgage. The interest fell into arrear, and a receiver was appointed over the lands, pending sale. In the opinion of the court the security was likely to prove deficient.

The tenant for life having died,

Held, that the moneys brought in by the receiver should be apportioned between the representatives of the tenant for life of the settled money and the persons entitled in remainder, in the proportion which the arrears of interest at the death of the tenant for life and the amount due for principal and interest on the mortgage since his death bore to one another.—In re Ancketill's Estate, L.J. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 331.

2. Tenant for life and remainderman—Power of appointment over reversionary fund subject to settlement—Appointment of fund as part of appointor's residuary estate—Time of falling into residue.—By a settlement made in 1815, A., on the marriage of his son, settled two several sums of £10,000 upon trusts for the son for life, and after the son's decease for the son's wife for life, and in default of issue of the marriage as A. should by deed, will, or codicil referring to the settlement, appoint. By his will in 1832 (not referring to the settlement) A. directed that his residuary personal estate, or the produce thereof, should be invested and held upon trust for his son for life, and, in default of issue of the son, for A.'s daughters and their children, the daughters taking life interests. By a codicil in 1833 A. appointed that the two several sums of £10,000 mentioned in the settlement should form part of his residuary personal estate, and be paid to his executors and trustees accordingly. A. died in 1834; the son in 1850 without having had issue; and the son's wife in 1889. At her death a sum of £25,400 Consols represented the two sums of £10,000.

Held, that, on the true construction of the codicil, the two several sums of £10,000 only became a part of the testator's estate when the amount became payable to his executors and trustees, and not before, and therefore there was no question of apportionment.

Decision of Kay, J. (62 L. T. Rep. N. S. 216), reversed.—In re Flower, Matheson v. Goodwyn, C.A.—63 L. T. 201.

3. Tenant for life and remainderman—Trust fund—Will—Insufficient assets.—A trust fund being insufficient to pay the arrears of income and the corpus in full,

Held, that the total amount of income and capital actually received in respect of the trust estate must be divided between the tenant for life and the remaindermen in the proportion of the two sums which they would have respectively received if the fund had been sufficient to pay them in full; the tenant for life giving credit for the amount of income actually received by her.—In re Foster, Lloyd v. Carr, CH.D. KAY, J. 31—45 Ch. D. 629; 60 L. J. Ch. 175; 63 L. T. 443.

APPRENTICE:—

1. Corporation — Contract of apprenticeship to — Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 45), s. 11, sub-section 12 (a)—5 Eliz. c. 4—54 Geo. 3, c. 96, s. 2.—A trading corporation registered under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1876, can enter into a legal and binding contract of apprenticeship.—Burnley Equitable Co-operative and Industrial Society (Limited) v. Casson, Q.B.D. 124—[1891] 1 Q. B. 75; 60 L. J. M. C. 59; 63 L. T. 652.

2. Covenant by infant—Deed of apprenticeship—Liability of infant to be sued after age on the covenant—Necessaries—Education.—An action can be maintained against an apprentice upon a bond entered into by him when an infant, provided that the bond was a single bond, and that the plaintiff shows that the consideration under the bond was for the supply of necessaries, that necessaries were so supplied, and that the charge for the same was reasonable and proper.

Education in a trade may be a "necessary" for an infant.—Walter v. Everard, C.A. 676—[1891] 2 Q. B. 369.

3. Felony by apprentice—Refusal of master to carry out covenants under the deed.—In an action against a master for a breach of covenant by him, under an apprenticeship deed, in refusing to continue to keep, teach, and maintain an apprentice, the defence went to prove that the apprentice was an habitual thief.

Held, that this was a good defence, on the ground that the master impliedly covenanted to teach the apprentice how to carry on the particular trade honestly, and that the apprentice, by becoming an habitual thief, had rendered the fulfilment of such a covenant impossible by his own default.—Learoyd v. Brook, Q.B.D. 480—[1891] 1 Q. B. 431; 60 L. J. Q. B. 373; 64 L. T. 458.

4. Validity of apprenticeship deed—Covenant to serve—Negative covenant—Validity of deed.—A deed of apprenticeship, whereby an infant apprentice is bound for a term not to accept employment except from the master or with his consent, and which contains no co-relative covenant by the master to provide employment for the apprentice, and which may be terminated by the master only, is invalid, as being unreasonable and not for the benefit of the infant.—De Francesco v. Barnum, CH.D. FRY, L.J. 5—45 Ch. D. 430; 60 L. J. Ch. 63; 63 L. T. 438.

ARBITRATION :—

1. Costs—Power of arbitrator to award costs—Submission before, arbitration after, the 1st of January, 1890—Submission silent as to costs—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), ss. 2, 25.—Where an arbitration took place after the commencement of the Arbitration Act, 1889, pursuant to a submission which had been entered into before the commencement of that Act, and which contained no power to the arbitrator to deal with the costs of the reference and award.

Held, that the combined effect of sections 2 and 25 of the Act was to give the arbitrator power to deal with them.—In re Williams and Stepney, C.A. 533—[1891] 2 Q. B. 257.

2. Costs—Verdict in pursuance of an award—Powers of court and taxing master.—Where by a consent decree arbitrators were directed to return a general award on the whole declaration for a sum certain, and such award was thereby directed to be entered as a verdict whereon final judgment might be signed, and costs of the action, reference, and award were directed to follow the verdict so entered.

Held, that, the appellants having thereunder obtained a verdict for a portion of the sum claimed by them, which verdict carried costs as above directed, the court could not give the respondent a verdict for the residue of the sum claimed, and then delegate to the taxing master the duty of ascertaining, by the evidence of the arbitrators and others, as to what part of the appellants' claim the respondent had succeeded with a view to the apportionment of costs.

Held, further, that such evidence would be inadmissible as tending to explain or contradict the award.

Duke of Buccleuch v. Metropolitan Board of Works, L. R. 1 H. L. 418, followed.—O'Rourke v. The Commissioner for Railways, P.C.—15 App. Cas. 371; 59 L. J. P. C. 72; 63 L. T. 66.

3. Setting aside award—Action—Order of reference by consent of "all matters in difference"—Jurisdiction of court—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), ss. 14, 15.—An action having been brought to recover certain instalments due in respect of work done under a contract, upon an application for judgment under order 14, other instalments having become payable under the contract, an order was made by consent that "all matters in difference between the parties" should be referred to the award of an arbitrator.

The arbitrator having made his award, the defendants moved to set it aside, contending that, under section 15 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, the award was equivalent to the verdict of a jury.

Held, by the Queen's Bench Division, that section 15 did not affect the finality of an award, and that the application must be refused.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that as the order of reference was of "all matters in difference between the parties," section 15 was not applicable; and the award could not be set aside in the same way as the verdict of a jury.—Darlington Wagon and Engineering Co. v. Harding, C.A. 167—[1891] 1 Q. B. 245; 60 L. J. Q. B. 110; 64 L. T. 409.

4. Setting aside award—Misconduct—Admission—Evidence—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 11 (2).—On a motion to set aside an award, on the ground of the misconduct of the arbitrator, it was alleged that he had been bribed. The only evidence of the truth of this allegation adduced at the hearing was that of witnesses who had heard the arbitrator himself admit the fact in a conversation, at which R. (the other party to the arbitration) was not present.

Held, that the admission was not sufficiently proved to enable the court to set aside the award as against R.—In re Whiteley and Roberts, CH.D. KEK., J. 248—[1891] 1 Ch. 558; 60 L. J. Ch. 149; 64 L. T. 81.

5. Staying proceedings—Application to stay proceedings on counter-claim—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 4—"Step in the proceedings."—By section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, it is provided that "if any party to a submission . . . commences any legal proceedings in any court against any other party to the submission in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to such legal proceedings may at any time after appearance, and before delivering any pleadings, or taking any other steps in the proceedings, apply to that court to stay the proceedings.

The plaintiff brought an action for work done under a building contract, which contained a general submission to arbitration of all disputes arising out of the contract. The defendant counter-claimed for damages arising out of breaches of the contract. Subsequently to the delivery of the counter-claim the defendant took out a summons for directions under order 30 for the purpose of obtaining discovery from the plaintiff. On the hearing of the summons the plaintiff applied for and obtained, under rule 2 of that order, leave to administer interrogatories to the defendant. The plaintiff subsequently discontinued his action, and proposed to refer the whole matter to arbitration, and upon the defendant refusing to allow the counter-claim to be referred, took out a summons under section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, to stay the proceedings on the counter-claim,

Held, that the plaintiff's application for leave to administer interrogatories was a step by him in the proceedings, and there was, consequently, no jurisdiction to make the order.

Semble, that the delivery of a counter-claim is "the commencement of a legal proceeding" within the meaning of the section.—Chappell v. North, Q.B.D.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 252; 60 L. J. Q. B. 554.

6. Submission—Breach of warranty—Right to reject goods—Invalid award—Jurisdiction of arbitrators.—G. & Co., on the 31st of July, 1889, entered into a contract to buy from B., W., & Co. 1,000 cases of tinned salmon. The contract contained, amongst other things, the following provisions: "Quality guaranteed good merchantable, and equal to the average of the spring pack of 1889 season C. R. salmon, at 22s. per case, ex quay Liverpool. . . . Usual examination for customary allowances and general broker's conditions. Any dispute to be settled by arbitration."

On the 3rd of April, 1890, G. & Co. wrote to the agents of B., W., & Co. that they did not consider the tender (as per samples examined) equal to contract guarantee, and therefore must call for arbitration. An arbitrator was appointed on each side, and the parties went to arbitration. The arbitrators' award was dated the 11th of April, 1890, and was, so far as is material, as follows: "That the buyers accept the salmon, and that the sellers make an allowance to the buyers of one shilling and sixpence per case." The arbitrators, according to their evidence, had proceeded on the understanding that they were not merely to find whether the salmon was inferior in quality, but, if they found it was so, were to decide whether it should be rejected or not. G. & Co. moved to restrain B., W., & Co. from proceeding to enforce the award, and also that the award might be set aside or remitted to the arbitrators for reconsideration.

Held, that the submission extended to nothing except the question whether the goods were up to guarantee, and that, if the goods were not of the guaranteed quality, the buyers were entitled to reject them, the sale not being of specific goods; that the arbitrators had exceeded their jurisdiction in dealing with a question not submitted to them; and that the matter must be referred back to them.

Decision of Kay, J. (63 L. T. 97), affirmed.—In re Green & Co. and Balfour, Williamson, & Co., C.A.—63 L. T. 325.

7. Submission—Power of court to compel appointment of arbitrator—9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 15, s. 1—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 39—52 & 53 Vict. c. 49.—An agreement to refer disputes to arbitration contained a provision that the matters in dispute should be referred to three arbitrators, one to be appointed by each of the parties, and the third by the two so appointed. A dispute having arisen, one of the parties refused to appoint an arbitrator.

Held, that the court had no power to compel him to do so.—In re Smith & Service and Nelson & Sons, C.A. 117—25 Q. B. D. 545; 59 L. J. Q. B. 533; 63 L. T. 475.

See also BUILDING SOCIETY, 1; PARTNERSHIP, 1; POOR LAW, 3; SCOTCH LAW, 1.

ARMY:—

Pay and retiring allowances—Royal warrant—Secretary of State for War—Mandamus—Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), s. 136.—A mandamus will not lie against the Secretary of State for War to compel him to carry out the terms of a royal warrant regulating the pay and retiring allowances of the officers and soldiers of the army, inasmuch as no legal duty in relation to such officers and soldiers is imposed upon the Secretary of State either by statute or by common law.—Reg. v. Secretary of State for War, C.A.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 326; 60 L. J. Q. B. 457; 64 L. T. 764.

ARREST:—

Reward for—Information leading to conviction of offender—Publication of offer—Communication of information.—On the 29th of May the defendant instructed his printers to print handbills, offering a reward of £25 to the person who should give information to a superintendent of police, named Penn, leading to the conviction of the perpetrator of a certain crime. The plaintiff, a police officer, on the same morning, before the instructions to print the handbills had been given by the defendant, had communicated the desired information to a fellow police officer named Coppin, with instructions to forward it to Superintendent Penn, and Coppin thereupon communicated the information, in accordance with the rules of the force, to his own immediate superior officer, Inspector Lennan, who sent it on the same evening to Superintendent Penn, whom it reached in due course on the following morning, the 30th of May, after the time when the said handbills had been delivered to and had been distributed by him to the neighbouring police stations.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the reward, the messengers, Coppin and Lennan, through whom such information was conveyed to Superintendent Penn being the plaintiff's agents to convey, and not Penn's agents to receive the said message.—Gibbons v. Proctor, Q.B.D.—64 L. T. 594.

ASSAULT.—See DIVORCE, 13, 14.

ASSIGNMENT of DEBT:—

Assignment subject to a trust—Assignment of debts for purpose of suing—Right of assignee to sue—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 6.—By a deed made between the plaintiff and certain creditors of the defendant, which recited that the plaintiff had agreed to take an assignment of the debts due from the defendant to the creditors upon the terms that he should forthwith proceed to recover the same, and, upon recovery, should pay to the creditors respectively the amount of their debts, or such part thereof as might have been recovered, the creditors assigned the debts to the plaintiff absolutely. Notice of the assignment was given to the defendant.

Held, that this was an "absolute assignment not purporting to be by way of charge only" within section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873, and that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the action.—Comfort v. Betts, C.A. 595—[1891] 1 Q. B. 737; 64 L. T. 685.

ATTACHMENT.—See ADMIRALTY, 8; SOLICITOR, 18.

AUCTIONEER.—See TROVER.

BAILMENT:—

Jus tertii—Bailor's title assigned to third party—Action of detinue by bailor—Right of bailee to dispute bailor's title.—The defendants sold certain copper to the plaintiffs, but continued to hold it as warehousemen for them. The plaintiffs sold it to a third party, who was indebted to the defendants. On the defendants refusing to deliver the copper to the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs brought an action against them for wrongful detention of the copper. The defendants defended the action, not by authority of the third party, but on their own behalf.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the defendants the copper or its value.—Rogers v. Lambert, C.A. 114—[1891] 1 Q. B. 318; 60 L. J. Q. B. 187; 64 L. T. 406.

BANKER:—

1. Overdraft—Compound interest—Accounts with half-yearly rests—Security for fixed sum—Inconsistent parol agreement.—In 1879 S. was allowed by his bank to overdraw his account to the amount of

£1,500 upon an agreement that the account was to be subject to all charges and interest, and in the event of his death such interest and charges were to continue until the account was paid off. In 1880 S. obtained a further advance of £6,500, and assigned a mortgage upon his estate for £5,000 to the bank, with interest at four per cent., the mortgagee being paid off. The deed was in form an absolute assignment of the mortgage to the bank, and did not show the existence of any banking account; but it was proved that the assignment was intended as a collateral security for the account which was to be overdrawn, and not merely for the £5,000. Compound interest at the bank rate, with a minimum of five per cent., was regularly charged upon the overdraft with half-yearly rests, and paid by S. from 1880 until his death in 1889, accounts being regularly stated and settled between them. At his death S. had overdrawn to the amount of £6,100.

In a suit for the administration of the estate of S.,

Held, (1) that by the agreement compound interest must be paid by the executors of S. on the balance due at his death; (2) that the assignment of the mortgage for £5,000 was in law a distinct transaction, having no connection with the banking account, and that the inconsistent parol agreement could not alter or contradict the legal effect of the deed; (3) that as accounts were regularly stated and settled by S. with full means of knowledge of his rights, and as the bank might have closed the account if S. had insisted on these rights, it would be inequitable to allow the executors to open the settled transactions.

Held, further, that an account should be taken to ascertain the minimum sum to the debit of S. at any time after the assignment of this mortgage, and that this sum, if not more than £5,000, should be treated as the principal sum due on the security at the date of the last settlement, and that interest at four per cent. should be calculated on it till payment.—Stewart v. Stewart, M.R. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 351.

2. Overdraft — Current account — Promoters of exhibition—Limited company.—The promoters of an exhibition opened an account at a bank in the name of the exhibition. The exhibition was subsequently incorporated as a limited company, and a copy of the articles of association was left with the bank. The account was kept under the same title as before, and the cheques drawn in the same names as before. The exhibition having been ordered to be wound up, the bank sued the promoters to recover an overdraft.

Held, that under the circumstances of the case the bank never contemplated the personal liability of the promoters, and did not look upon them personally as their customers, and that therefore the promoters were not liable.—Coutts & Co. v. Irish Exhibition in London, CH.D. KEK., J.—63 L. T. 489.

See also BANKRUPTCY, 11; BILL OF EXCHANGE, 2; CHEQUE; NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT.

BANKRUPTCY:—

ACT OF BANKRUPTCY—

1. Assignment of whole of property—Mortgage to secure further advances—Ship—Fraudulent preference —Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52). ss. 4, 43, 48, 49.—A mortgagor who conveys all his property with the main object of securing further advances, does not thereby commit an act of bankruptcy, even though the mortgage also secures a past debt due from the mortgagor to the mortgagee.

Where under a mortgage of a ship to secure further advances, an advance is made on the date of a receiving order against the mortgagor, who is subsequently adjudicated bankrupt in respect of acts of bankruptcy committed prior to the execution of the mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled, under section 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, as against the trustee in bankruptcy, to recover such advance, where before the date of the receiving order there was an existing contract between mortgagor and mortgagee to make further advances and a positive promise by the mortgagee to make this specific advance.

A. mortgaged his shares in a ship to B., to secure further advances, and also a small past debt due from A. to B. Prior to the mortgage, A. had committed acts of bankruptcy in respect of which he was subsequently to the date of the mortgage adjudicated bankrupt. B. had no notice or knowledge of the acts of bankruptcy, and made advances to enable A. to carry on his business. On the date of the receiving order, B. made A. an advance of £250 in consequence of a prior agreement between them to make future advances, and a positive promise to advance this specific sum. In an action by B. to establish the validity of his mortgage and recover against the respondent the amount of his loans.

Held, that the mortgage was valid, and that B. was entitled, as against the trustee in bankruptcy, to recover not only all advances prior to the date of the receiving order, but also the advance of £250 made on the date of the receiving order, as it was made in consequence of the contract and promise made before the date of the receiving order.—The Thames, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 353.

2. Bankruptcy notice — Final judgment — Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4.—On the 17th of April, 1888, an order was made in the Chancery Division that a certain investment made by P. and T., trustees under a settlement, was a breach of trust, and P. and T. were ordered to pay the moneys represented by the investment, less their own taxed charges and expenses, into court. It was further ordered that T. was entitled to indemnity from P. with costs. The amount of such indemnity was fixed by an order made on the 15th of July, and, on nonpayment, application was made for leave to issue a bankruptcy notice for the same against P. The registrar refused the application.

Held, that the orders of the 17th of April and the 15th of July constituted a final judgment within section 4 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, on which a bankruptcy notice could be issued.—In re Poole, Ex parte Twisaday, Q.B.D., BKCY.—63 L. T. 321.

3. Bankruptcy notice—Final judgment—Form of judgment—Judgment for taxed costs—Amount not filled in.—Judgment having been given for the defendant in an action, the judgment was drawn up in the ordinary form, with a blank left for the amount of the costs. The costs were subsequently taxed and a certificate given for the amount, but the blanks in the judgment were not filled up. A bankruptcy notice was issued under section 4 for the amount of the taxed costs, on which a petition was presented, and a receiving order made against the debtor. On appeal by the debtor against the receiving order,

Held (allowing the appeal), that inasmuch as no execution could issue on the judgment as it then stood, nor upon the taxing master's certificate alone, there was no final judgment, and therefore the receiving order made against the debtor must be set aside.—In re Crump, Ex parte Crump, Q.B.D., BKCY.—64 L. T. 799.

4. Bankruptcy notice—Judgment debt—Right of judgment creditor to include claim for interest—1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 17—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g)—Bankruptcy Rules 1886, r. 136.—A judgment creditor, in issuing a bankruptcy notice against a debtor under section 4, sub-section 1 (g), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, is entitled to include in such bankruptcy notice a claim for interest on the judgment debt.—Ex parte Hasluck, In re Lehmann, Q.B.D., BKCY. 16.

5. Bankruptcy notice—Judgment debt—Power to include more than one judgment debt—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g) —Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, rr. 136, 137; Appendix, Part I., Forms 5, 6.—A bankruptcy notice cannot be issued in respect of more than one judgment debt.—Ex parte Argentine Gold Fields, In re Low, C.A. 181—[1891] 1 Q. B. 147; 60 L. J. Q. B. 265; 63 L. T. 694.

6. Bankruptcy notice—Judgment debt—Non-compliance with bankruptcy notice—Payment of judgment debt—Right of another creditor to present petition—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g).—The act of bankruptcy committed by a debtor by reason of his non-compliance with the requirements of a bankruptcy notice duly served on him under section 4, sub-section 1 (g), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, is not put an end to by payment of the judgment debt; but a bankruptcy petition founded on that act of bankruptcy may be presented by another creditor, although the debt of the creditor by whom the bankruptcy notice was served has been paid.

Ex parte Wier, In re Wier, 19 W. R. 1042, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 875, has no application to an act of bankruptcy committed under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.—Ex parte Powell, In re Powell, Q.B.D., BKCY. 656—[1891] 2 Q. B. 324; 64 L. T. 800.

ANNULMENT—

7. Rejection of proof by trustee—"Act done by trustee"—Debt and judgment—Execution issued on judgment—Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 81.—The defendant having been adjudicated a bankrupt under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, the plaintiff sent in a proof for £4,084 in respect of an alleged debt. The trustee in bankruptcy rejected the proof. The plaintiff had, prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy, signed judgment against the defendant by consent for the above sum of £4,084, but the plaintiff did not send in any proof in respect of the judgment. The adjudication in bankruptcy having been subsequently annulled, the plaintiff issued execution upon the judgment.

Held, that, inasmuch as, in bankruptcy, there is power to go behind the judgment and to inquire into the consideration upon which it is founded, the proof upon the simple contract debt must be considered the same as the proof upon the judgment debt; that the rejection of the proof was an "act done by the trustee" within section 81 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and remained valid upon the annulment of the adjudication; and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to issue execution upon the judgment.—Brandon v. McHenry, C.A. 372—[1891] 1 Q. B. 538; 60 L. J. Q. B. 448; 64 L. T. 59.

APPEAL—

8. Deposit—Appeal from order made in county court—Deposit as security for costs of appeal—Withdrawal of appeal—Right of appellant to return of deposit—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 131—Practice.—On an appeal being brought from an order made in the county court, the sum of £20 was lodged in the High Court by the appellant as security for the costs of the appeal, in pursuance of rule 131 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1886. The appeal was afterwards withdrawn, the costs of the respondent in respect of it being paid; but an application by the appellant for a return of the deposit was opposed by the respondent, on the ground that certain costs incurred by the appellant in the county court had not been paid.

Held, that the appellant was entitled to have the deposit paid out, and that the respondent could not claim the deposit as security for the costs incurred by the appellant in unsuccessfully contesting the motion in the county court.—Ex parte Scott, In re Scott & Mitchell, Q.B.D., BKCY. 32.

9. Deposit—Security for appeal—Application to dispense with deposit by creditor—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 131.—By the Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 131, the Court of Appeal may in any special case dispense with the deposit of £20 which a party intending to appeal is required to lodge at the time of entering his appeal.

A creditor in receipt of 30s. weekly wages recovered judgment in the county court for £50 for injuries received from A., a fellow labourer. On A. becoming bankrupt, the creditor applied to the county court to order the bankrupt to set aside a portion of his weekly wages to meet the judgment debt. The court refused the application.

The creditor, under the above rule, then applied to the Divisional Court to dispense with the deposit of £20 required to be lodged before appealing.

Held, that under the circumstances the application would be granted, the deposit dispensed with, and the time for appealing extended.—In re Jones, Ex parte Lloyd, Q.B.D., BKCY.—64 L. T. 803.

ASSETS—

10. Charge on salary of chaplain of workhouse—Validity—Public policy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 97.—The bankrupt, who was chaplain of a workhouse, prior to his bankruptcy gave a charge upon his salary to secure payment of a loan. Upon the bankruptcy taking place, the official receiver, as trustee, applied for an order declaring that the salary of the bankrupt as chaplain vested in him, and to restrain the person to whom the charge had been given from receiving any portion of the salary, on the ground that any assignment of the bankrupt's stipend was void or voidable as being contrary to public policy, because the bankrupt was a public officer holding a public appointment, and paid out of the public funds, and because he was a clerk in holy orders, and his salary was payable to him in respect of the cure of souls and the conduct of the services of the church.

Held, that the charge was not invalid upon the ground alleged, a clergyman having the cure of souls not being a public officer within the meaning of the principle of public policy.—In re Mirams, Q.B.D., BKCY. 464—[1891] 1 Q. B. 594; 60 L. J. Q. B. 397; 64 L. T. 117.

11. Money stolen by cashier of bank—Purchase of shares—Right of bank to shares purchased.—The bankrupt, who was the cashier in a bank, misappropriated moneys intrusted to him by his employers for banking purposes, and purchased therewith certain shares. The bankrupt absconded, and an application by the bank for an order that they were entitled to the shares purchased with the stolen money was refused by the county court judge.

Held, on appeal, that the order of the county court must be reversed, and that the trustee in bankruptcy must deliver up the shares to the bank. —Ex parte Manchester and County Bank, In re Hutton, Q.B.D., BKCY. 303.

12. Salary or income—Power to order payment to trustee—Wages of workman—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 53, sub-section 2.—Wages earned by a workman employed in a colliery are not "salary or income" within the meaning of section 53, sub-section 2, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and therefore no order can be made under that section for payment of any part of such wage to the trustee in bankruptcy of the person by whom the wages are earned.

Ex parte Benwell, In re Hutton, 14 Q. B. D. 301, followed.—In re Jones, Ex parte Lloyd (No. 2), Q.B.D., BKCY.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 231; 64 L. T. 804.

13. Transfer of shares in company—Transfer not signed by transferee nor presented to company—Property in the shares.—In a box left on the bankrupt's premises after he had absconded, which purported to contain the securities of C., who had placed money in the bankrupt's hands to invest, was found a transfer by the bankrupt to C. of certain shares in consideration of the sum of £500 together with the share certificates. The transfer was not executed by C., and had not been presented to the company. The trustee in bankruptcy claimed the shares.

Held, that the shares were the property of C., and not of the trustee.—In re Dodds, Ex parte Trustee, Q.B.D., BKCY.—64 L. T. 476.

COSTS—

14. Small bankruptcy—Costs out of the estate—Lower scale—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 112—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 55. —On application by the trustee in the bankruptcy for leave to disclaim a lease, the landlord appeared and opposed the application, but leave was given to the trustee to disclaim, with costs both of the landlord and of the trustee out of the estate. The costs of the trustee's solicitor were allowed at £21, but an objection to this sum was taken by the Board of Trade, on the ground that, the assets of the bankrupt being under £300, the costs ought to be allowed on the lower scale, under rule 112 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1886.

Held, that rule 112 applied, and that the solicitor was only entitled to three-fifths of the ordinary charges.—In re Procter, Q.B.D., BKCY. 655—[1891] 2 Q. B. 433.

15. Solicitor of debtor—Petition by debtor—Refusal of trustee to pay costs—Previous payments made by debtor to solicitor—Alleged fraudulent preference—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 125.—A trustee in bankruptcy cannot refuse to pay out of the estate the taxed costs of the solicitor appearing for the debtor on the filing of his own petition, by reason of the fact that certain payments have been made by the debtor to such solicitor shortly before the bankruptcy, which the trustee is of opinion amount to a fraudulent preference; but in such case the trustee must pay the taxed costs of the solicitor, and move the court to set aside the previous payments in the ordinary way.—Ex parte Raphael, In re Coster & Tack, Q.B.D., BKCY. 190.

DECEASED DEBTOR—

16. Resident abroad—Deceased debtor resident out of England for six months preceding death—Jurisdiction—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 95, 125, sub-sections 1, 4, 6, 10—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, Form 11.—The words "unless the context requires it" in sub-section 10 of section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, comprise the whole context of the Act, and are not limited to the context of section 125.

In the case of a debtor residing at his decease, and for the greater part of the six months previously, out of England, the provisions of section 95 will apply, giving jurisdiction to the High Court—i.e. the Court of Bankruptcy—over the estate in England of a debtor not resident in England.—In re Evans (Deceased), Ex parte Evans, C.A. 98—[1891] 1 Q. B. 143; 60 L. J. Q. B. 143; 64 L. T. 242.

DISCHARGE—

17. Absolute refusal—Second application for discharge—Right of bankrupt to apply de novo—Practice—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 104.—Where the discharge of a bankrupt has been refused absolutely, the bankrupt is not entitled to apply to the court de novo for an order of discharge. But the court has power, under section 104 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, to entertain an application by the bankrupt for a review, and may thereupon rescind or vary its former order if it thinks fit.—Ex parte Tobias, In re Tobias & Co., Q.B.D., BKCY. 399—[1891] 1 Q. B. 463; 60 L. J. Q. B. 244; 64 L. T. 115.

18. Application under Act of 1883—Effect of Bankruptcy Act, 1890—Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 38—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 28—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 8—Practice.—In all cases in which adjudication has been made under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the bankrupt has a right to have his application for an order of discharge dealt with under section 28 of that Act, and not under section 8 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890.—Ex parte Railson, In re Railson, Q.B.D., BKCY. 271—60 L. J. Q. B. 206; 63 L. T. 709.

19. Conditional discharge—Entering up judgment—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52, s. 28. —A debtor being possessed of a life interest under a settlement which by the law of Scotland could not be attached by creditors, was adjudicated bankrupt in England. On the application by him for his discharge the county court judge granted the discharge on condition that he should consent to judgment for £2,200. There was no evidence that the debtor was possessed of any other property except the life interest, or that he would have any after-acquired property.

Held, that the order must be varied, and the discharge granted unconditionally.

Held, also, that a condition as to entering up judgment ought not as a rule to be imposed unless there is some expectation of the debtor coming into property in the future, which but for such an order he would be able to enjoy without paying his debts. —In re Goud, Ex parte Goule, Q.B.D., BKCY.—63 L. T. 292.

20. Omission to keep proper books—"Business"—One or two transactions—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 28, sub-section 3 (a).—When a court of bankruptcy is considering whether a bankrupt has "omitted to keep such books of account as are usual and proper in the business carried on by him" within the meaning of section 28, sub-section 3 (a), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, proof that he engaged in one or two building transactions is sufficient proof that he carried on the business of a builder if it be shown that he intended the one or two transactions to be followed by similar transactions.—Ex parte Board of Trade, In re Griffin, C.A. 156—60 L. J. Q. B. 235.

21. Rash and hazardous speculations—Stock Exchange transactions—Gambling for differences—Refusal of discharge—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 28.—On application by the bankrupt for discharge, the official receiver reported that the bankrupt had been guilty of rash and hazardous speculations in buying on the Stock Exchange for clients who were speculating for the differences, and had no intention of making bonâ fide investments, and that the bankruptcy was caused by such clients not paying up their differences at the time, owing to sudden and heavy falls in the markets in which the operations were carried on. The discharge of the bankrupt was absolutely refused by the county court judge, on the ground that to buy for a client who was intending to pay or receive the differences was a transaction of a more rash and hazardous nature than to buy for one who was intending to take up and pay for the shares, and that contracts for differences were in themselves immoral.

Held, on appeal, that the risk of a purchase by a stockbroker for a client did not depend upon whether the bargain was a bargain for differences or whether it was a purchase for investment, but upon whether the client had the means to pay the differences which might be expected to result; that it was not the duty of the Bankruptcy Court to take into consideration the general morality of transactions for differences; and that, having regard to the particular facts, the case would be sufficiently met by a suspension of the discharge for three years.—Ex parte Jenkins, In re Jenkins, Q.B.D., BKCY. 430.

22. Undue preference—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 28, sub-section 3 (f); s. 48.—Where a bankrupt has, within three months preceding the receiving order, given an undue preference to any of his creditors, the court may punish him by refusing or suspending an order for his discharge under section 28, sub-sections 2 and 3 (f), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, though he has not been guilty of a fraudulent preference within the meaning of section 48.

A debtor, on whose premises there were three mortgages, having been served with three writs in separate actions brought by the three mortgagees to recover their mortgage debts, handed the two writs issued by the second and third mortgagees to the solicitors of the first mortgagee, who thereupon entered appearances for him to those two writs, and signed judgment by default in the action by the first mortgagee.

Held, that such conduct on the part of the debtor was an undue preference within section 28, sub-section 3 (f).—Ex parte Skegg, In re Skegg, C.A. 72—25 Q. B. D. 505; 59 L. J. Q. B. 546; 63 L. T. 90.

23. Withdrawal of application for—Leave to withdraw—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 28, sub-section 2.—The Bankruptcy Court has the same inherent jurisdiction as other courts to give leave for the withdrawal of any application previously made to it, and there is no exception in the case of an application by a bankrupt to withdraw a previously-made application for a discharge under section 28 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.—Ex parte Board of Trade, In re Wallis, C.A. 453—60 L. J. Q. B. 455.

EXAMINATION—

24. Examination by creditor—Right to examine witness as to debtor's affairs—Action pending against witness by creditor—Ulterior object of creditor—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 27.—By section 27 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the court may, on the application of the official receiver or trustee, at any time after a receiving order has been made against a debtor, summon before it any person who can give information respecting the debtor, his dealings, or property.

The court has power to summon a witness to be examined under this section on the application of a creditor, but such power is not to be used for the purpose of enabling the creditor to obtain materials to assist him in a private action which he has against the witness whom he is seeking to examine.—In re Easton, Ex parte Davis, Q.B.D., BKCY.—64 L. T. 798.

EXECUTION—

25. County court—Motion by trustee against high bailiff of county court—Formal notice—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 53, 54, 186—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 45.—Where a motion made in the county court by the trustee in the bankruptcy for an order declaring that he was entitled to certain property of the bankrupt which had been seized by the high bailiff under a writ of execution was dismissed by the county court judge on the preliminary objection being taken that formal notice of the motion had not been given,

Held, that the provisions of section 53 of the County Courts Act, 1888, by which, before an action is commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of the Act, formal notice in writing must be given to the defendant, do not apply to a motion made in a bankruptcy; and that the case must go back to the county court judge to be heard upon the merits.—Ex parte Poppleton, In re Lock, Q.B.D., BKCY. 15—62 L. T. 942.

26. Garnishee order—Postponement of payment under garnishee order—Liability of debtor to bankrupt's estate—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 45, sub-section 1.—A garnishee, by an arrangement with the judgment creditor, obtained an extension of time for the payment of the attached debt. Subsequently to the garnishee order being made absolute, but before the extended time for payment had expired, the judgment debtor was adjudicated bankrupt. The garnishee, subsequent to this adjudication, paid the attached debt under the above arrangement to the judgment creditor.

Held, that the garnishee order became ineffectual under the provisions of section 45, sub-section 1, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, by reason of the intervention of the bankruptcy of the judgment debtor before the attached debt had been actually paid by the garnishee to the judgment creditor, and consequently that the garnishee remained liable to the estate of the bankrupt for the amount of the debt.—In re Trehearne, Ex parte Ealing Local Board, C.A. 116—60 L. J. Q. B. 50; 63 L. T. 798.

ORDER AND DISPOSITION—

27. Custom of trade—Iron safes—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44.—A custom exists amongst the manufacturers of iron safes to send safes to retail ironmongers upon sale or return or to sell as agents, so as to exclude the doctrine of reputed ownership.—Ex parte Poppleton, In re Lock (No. 2), Q.B.D., BKCY. 384.

PETITION—

28. Petitioning creditor's debt—Infant sued on bill of exchange—Necessaries supplied—Indorsee of bill as petitioner—Non-liability of infant—Infants' Relief Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 62)—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 22.—The indorsee of a bill of exchange cannot sue or present a petition in bankruptcy against a person upon his acceptance, whilst an infant, of the bill, even though the original consideration for the bill were the supply of necessaries to the infant.—Ex parte Margrett, In re Soltykoff, C.A. 337—[1891] 1 Q. B. 413; 60 L. J. Q. B. 339.

29. Petitioning creditor's debt—Trustee as to part of debt—Beneficially interested as to remainder—Joinder of cestui que trust.—A petition in bankruptcy may be presented by a creditor who is beneficially interested in part of a debt and trustee as to the other part without adding the cestuis que trustent as co-petitioners.

The rule laid down in Ex parte Dearle, In re Hastings, 33 W. R. 440, 14 Q. B. D. 184, only applies to a bare trustee having no beneficial interest.—Ex parte Ward, In re Gamgee, C.A. 579—60 L. J. Q. B. 574; 64 L. T. 730.

PROOF—

30. Contingent liability—Creditor's estimate—Assent of trustee—Annuity—Death of annuitant before dividend—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 37, schedule 2, r. 2—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, rr. 219, 228.—A proof tendered by a creditor alleged that the debtor was indebted to her in the sum of £7,000, being the value of an annuity of £1,440 payable to her by the debtor during the residue of her natural life, and the proof further stated the creditor's age, and that the annuity was valued accordingly. The proof was not admitted or rejected by the trustee within twenty-eight days, nor did he require further evidence in support of it; but four months after the proof had been tendered, and before any dividend had been declared or anything further done, the creditor died. The executors of the creditor were thereupon requested by the trustee to withdraw the original proof and to make an amended proof limited to the payments of the annuity due to the date of the creditor's death, and, on their refusal to do so, the proof was rejected by the trustees, on the ground that the annuity had been determined by the death of the creditor. On application by the executors to reverse the decision of the trustee, and to direct him to admit the proof for the full amount,

Held, that, although the trustee must be taken to have admitted the existence and amount of the annuity, the omission to deal with the proof was not equivalent to an acceptance of the creditor's estimate, which, by section 37 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, was to be made by the trustee, and not by the creditor, and that it was open to the trustee to place an estimate on the value of the annuity after the death of the creditor, the true value of the annuity being the amount of the payments due and unpaid at the time of the creditor's death.—Ex parte Executors of Vaughan, In re Dodds, Q.B.D., BKCY. 125—25 Q. B. D. 529; 59 L. J. Q. B. 403; 62 L. T. 837.

31. Covenant to pay out of estate six months after death—Claim barred by bankruptcy proceedings—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 37, sub-section 3.—By a deed made between R. D. K. of the one part and E. B. of the other part, R. D. K. covenanted that his executors and administrators would pay E. B. the sum of £3,000, with interest at five per cent. from the date of the death of R. D. K., within six months from his death. R. D. K. subsequently filed his petition in bankruptcy, and an order was made thereunder. E. B. knew of these proceedings, but abstained from proving in respect of this liability. R. D. K. died, and E. B. commenced this action against the executors under the covenant in the deed.

Held, that this was a debt which fell within section 37 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and any proceedings under the deed were barred by the proceedings in bankruptcy.—Barnett v. King, C.A. 39—[1891] 1 Ch. 4; 60 L. J. Ch. 148; 63 L. T. 501.

32. Gambling debt—Judgment in respect of—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52).—In an action by A. against B. to recover money won by betting, B. obtained unconditional leave to defend, and A. appealed against that order. Before the appeal was heard A. signed judgment upon default by B. in delivering a defence, and B. took out a summons to set aside that judgment. A. was meanwhile threatening to post B. as a defaulter, and it was agreed that, in consideration of A.'s not posting B., the latter should abandon his summons, and the former his appeal, and that the judgment should stand.

Held (affirming the decision of Cave, J.), that the judgment debt was not a debt provable in bankruptcy.—In re Deerhurst, Ex parte Seaton, C.A.—60 L. J. Q. B. 413 n; 64 L. T. 273.

33. Proxy—Attestation of instrument of proxy by person appointed proxy—Validity—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), Schedule I., rr. 15, 16—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, rr. 245, 247—Appendix, Forms 75, 76.—Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, a proxy cannot be an attesting witness to the instrument of proxy by which he is appointed.—Ex parte Cullen, In re Parrott, Q.B.D., BKCY. 543—[1891] 2 Q. B. 151; 60 L. J. Q. B. 567; 64 L. T. 801.

34. Surety for bankrupt—Proof for purpose of voting at first meeting—Proof before payment of debt—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), Schedule 1, r. 9.—A surety for a bankrupt is not entitled to prove for the purpose of voting at the first meeting of creditors unless he has paid the debt for which he is surety.—Ex parte Whittaker, In re Parrett, Q.B.D., BKCY. 400—63 L. T. 777.

PROTECTED TRANSACTIONS—

35. Notice of act of bankruptcy—Solicitor—Notice given to managing clerk—Sufficiency of notice.—Where a solicitor, with the consent of the client, puts his managing clerk in his place to conduct and manage the matter which the solicitor was retained to conduct, notice of an act of bankruptcy to the managing clerk will be notice to the solicitor.

But, apart from any question of substitution, the mere fact that a man is a managing clerk will not constitute notice to him notice to his principal.—Ex parte McGowan, In re Ashton, Q.B.D., BKCY. 330—64 L. T. 28.

37. Notice of bankruptcy petition—Notice served on sheriff of bankruptcy petition against or by debtor—Execution creditor—"Sheriff"—Man in possession—"Officer charged with the execution of a writ or other process"—46 & 47 Vict. c. 52, s. 168—53 & 54 Vict. c. 71, s. 11, sub-section 2.—A man who seizes, keeps possession of, and sells the goods of a judgment debtor by direction of the sheriff is not an "officer charged with the execution of a writ or other process," and therefore is not a "sheriff" within the meaning of section 168 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and therefore notice to him within fourteen days after sale of a bankruptcy petition having been presented against or by the debtor is not notice to the sheriff within the meaning of section 11, sub-section 2, of the Bankruptcy Act.

1890, and does not entitle the official receiver or trustee in bankruptcy to the balance of the proceeds of sale under that section.

Opinion of the Court of Appeal in Ex parte Warren, In re Holland, 15 Q. B. D. 48, followed.—Bellyse v. M'Ginn, Q.B.D., BKCY.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 227.

SCHEME OF ARRANGEMENT—

37. Approval of scheme by court—After-acquired property of debtor—Order of discharge—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 18, 28, 44.—In a liquidation by scheme of arrangement or composition under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, it is matter of contract between the creditors and the debtor what property shall vest in the trustee for the creditors, and at what date the debtor shall be discharged.

Accordingly, in the absence of any stipulation in the scheme approved by the court to the contrary, the scheme only operates to convey to the trustee property to which the debtor is entitled at the date of the approval of the scheme by the court, and the approval by the court operates as a discharge of the debtor.—In re Croom, England v. Provincial Assets Co., CH.D. KEK., J. 286—[1891] 1 Ch. 695; 60 L. J. Ch. 373; 64 L. T. 53.

TRUSTEE—

38. Committal—Nonpayment of interest under section 74—Nonpayment of costs—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 74, sub-section 6.—The court has power to commit a trustee in bankruptcy for disobedience to an order of the Board of Trade to pay penal interest at twenty per cent. per annum, under section 74, sub-section 6, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, upon all moneys in excess of £50 retained by him for more than ten days.

A trustee in bankruptcy having failed to comply with an order to pay penal interest under the provisions of section 74, sub-section 6, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883; and also having failed to pay the costs of two motions brought against him by the Board of Trade, application was made by the Board of Trade to commit him.

Held, that the court had jurisdiction to commit for disobedience to the order as to the interest, but not as to the costs; that the convenient course under the circumstances was for the Board of Trade to issue a debtor summons for the whole amount, and to apply afterwards to commit in case of non-compliance with the summons.—In re Nicholson, Ex parte The Board of Trade, Q.B.D., BKCY.—63 L. T. 322.

VOLUNTARY SETTLEMENT.—

39. Purchaser under—Possible claim by trustee in bankruptcy of settlor—Onus of proof—"Parties claiming under the settlement"—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47.—A purchaser under a trust for sale in a voluntary settlement is included in the term "parties claiming under the settlement" in section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and, consequently, has cast upon him the burden, if the settlement should be impeached by the trustee in bankruptcy of the settlor, of proving that the settlor was, at the time of making the settlement, able to pay all his debts without the aid of the property comprised in the settlement.—In re Briggs and Spicer, CH.D. STI., J. 377—[1891] 2 Ch. 127; 60 L. J. Ch. 514; 64 L. T. 187.

See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2; CRIMINAL LAW, 2; DIVORCE, 23; PRACTICE, 55; WILL, 15.

BANKRUPTCY (IRELAND):—

1. Arrangement with creditors — Disclaimer of lease—Election—35 & 36 Vict. c. 58, ss. 97, 98.—A debtor made an arrangement with his creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, 1872. The debtor's landlord was a creditor for £120, being a half-year's rent accrued due prior to the petition, and also for £1,000, being the estimated value of the covenant to pay rent under the lease. Subsequently the landlord issued a writ against the debtor for a half-year's rent accrued due subsequent to the filing of the petition. The debtor having moved in the Bankruptcy Court to restrain the action.

Held, that sections 97 and 98 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1872, do not apply to proceedings in arrangements, and that the motion must be refused.

In re Somerville, 1 L. R. Ir. 293, approved.—In re M., an arranging debtor, C.A. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 1.

2. Arrangement with creditors—Composition after bankruptcy—Bankrupt's solicitor obtaining judgment for costs—Restraining execution.—The solicitor for an undischarged bankrupt, who had made a composition with his creditors after the bankruptcy, but without annulment of the bankruptcy, brought an action and recovered judgment for costs incurred in those proceedings.

The court granted an injunction restraining the solicitor from issuing execution on the judgment.—In re M'Donald, BKCY. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 83.

3. Order and disposition—Shares standing in bankrupt's name—Deposit of certificate with bank—20 & 21 Vict. c. 60, s. 313.—The certificates of shares in a public company were deposited by the owner with a bank by way of security. By section 12 of the Companies Act, 1845, the certificates were primâ facie evidence of the title of the shareholder to the shares, but nevertheless the want of such certificate would not prevent the shareholder from disposing of the shares. The owner of the shares absconded and was adjudicated bankrupt. The bank did not give notice to the company of the deposit of the certificates until four months after the act of bankruptcy, and the name of the bankrupt remained as the registered owner of the shares.

Held, that, whether the bank had or had not notice of the act of bankruptcy, the shares were in the order and disposition of the bankrupt within 20 & 21 Vict. c. 60, s. 313.—In re Stevenson, BKCY. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 309.

4. Order and disposition—True owner—Policy of assurance—Assignment—Verbal notice of—30 & 31 Vict. c. 144.—A policy of assurance on the life of the bankrupt, who was then manager of the Dublin branch of the insurance company with whom the policy had been effected, was subject to a condition that all notices of assignment or charge upon the policy should be given "in writing at the principal place of business" of the company. The bankrupt, while manager, assigned the policy. No notice of the assignment was given at the head office of the company, which was in London.

Held, that the policy was in the order and disposition of the bankrupt with the consent of the true owner.

Semble, verbal notice of assignment would not have been sufficient.—In re Young, BKCY. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 372.

5. Preferential debts—Harbour dues—Local rates—Bankruptcy (Ireland) Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 58), s. 49.—By section 5 of the Cork Harbour Commissioners Act, 1883, the commissioners are empowered to demand and take, in respect of every vessel entering or using the port, dues from the owner or master.

Held, that these dues were not local rates within section 49 of the Bankruptcy (Ireland) Act, 1872, so as to be entitled to preferential payment.—In re H. & Co., arranging debtors, BKCY. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 271.

BETTING.—See GAMING.

BILL of EXCHANGE:—

1. Acceptance—Qualified or general—Negotiability of bill—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 19.—A bill of exchange was drawn by one Flipo payable to himself and directed to the defendants as drawees. The defendants accepted the bill as follows:—"In favour of Flipo only. Accepted payable at Alliance Bank, London." The words "In favour of Flipo only" were in writing, and underneath them the rest of the acceptance was impressed with an ordinary stamp.

Held, that the acceptance was a general, and not a qualified, one, and did not restrict the negotiability of the bill.—Decroix, Verley, et Cie. v. Meyer & Co. (Limited), C.A. 2—25 Q. B. D. 343; 59 L. J. Q. B. 538; 63 L. T. 414.

2. Forgery of name of payee—Negligence—Payee "a fictitious or non-existing person"—Knowledge of acceptor—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 7, sub-section 3.—A clerk in the service of the respondents forged numerous bills to a large amount, purporting to be drawn upon the respondents by one of their correspondents to the order of another, and he also forged letters of advice as to these bills. The respondents accepted these bills, payable at the appellants' bank, and the clerk then forged the indorsement of the person named as payee, and received payment in cash across the counter to himself.

Held, by Lord Halsbury, L.C., and Lords Watson, Herschell, Macnaghten, and Morris (Lords Bramwell and Field dissenting), that the payee was "a fictitious or non-existing person" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 3, of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, so as to make the bills payable to bearer, and that, consequently, the appellants were entitled to debit the respondents with the amount of the bills.

Also by Lord Halsbury, L.C., and by the Earl of Selborne and Lords Watson and Macnaghten (Lords Bramwell and Field dissenting), because of the conduct of the parties.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (37 W. R. 640, 23 Q. B. D. 243) reversed.—Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers (No. 2), H.L. (E.) 657—[1891] A. C. 107; 60 L. J. Q. B. 145; 64 L. T. 353.

See CRIMINAL LAW, 4.

BILL of SALE:—

1. Absolute assignment—Assignment and hire and purchase agreement—True nature of the transaction—Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 4, and 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43).—The plaintiff having applied to the defendants for an advance of £30 upon the security of his furniture, it was arranged that the landlord, to whom the plaintiff owed £25 for rent, should put in a friendly distress, when the defendants would buy the goods from him. The landlord accordingly, at the plaintiff's request, distrained upon the goods in question for £25 rent due, and the goods seized were appraised at £29 5s. The broker then, at the request of the plaintiff, sold the goods to the defendants at the condemned price. The next day the defendants produced an agreement by which the goods were to be hired to the plaintiff's wife upon the terms that, on payment of £50 by monthly instalments, the goods were to become her property, the defendants to have power to take possession upon non-performance of any of the provisions of the agreement. The plaintiff objected to pay £50 for an advance of £29 5s. upon which the defendants said that they had bought the goods, and that the plaintiff knew whether they were worth £50 or not. The plaintiff then said that he saw how he was placed, and his wife signed the hiring agreement. This agreement was not registered as a bill of sale. Default having been made, the defendants took possession, and the plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for trespass to the goods.

Held, that the true inference from the facts was that by the purchase from the landlord the property in the goods passed to the defendants, subject to a resulting trust in favour of the plaintiff until the execution of the hiring agreement; that, as the beneficial interest in the goods remained in the plaintiff until the execution of that agreement, the defendants had no title to the goods independently of that agreement; and that, as the agreement was not registered under the Bills of Sale Acts, the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

Judgment of Cave, J. ([1891] 1 Q. B. 1), reversed.—Beckett v. Tower Assets Co., C.A. 438—[1891] 1 Q. B. 638; 60 L. J. Q. B. 493; 64 L. T. 497.

2. Absolute assignment by deed—Hiring agreement—Fictitious transaction—Loan upon security—Grantor not estopped from showing true nature of transaction—Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31) and 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43).—A transaction purported to be an absolute assignment by deed of certain chattels by the plaintiff to the defendants, followed by an agreement in writing whereby the plaintiff hired the chattels from the defendants upon the terms that, upon a certain sum being paid by the plaintiff to the defendants by weekly instalments, the chattels were to belong to the plaintiff, and, upon default in payment of any instalment, the defendants were to be entitled to resume possession.

Held, that, notwithstanding the deed, the plaintiff was not estopped from showing that the true nature of the transaction was a loan upon the security of the chattels, and not an absolute assignment; and that the documents were void under the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882, for want of registration.—Madell v. Thomas, Sons, & Co., C.A. 280—[1891] 1 Q. B. 230; 60 L. J. Q. B. 227; 64 L. T. 9.

3. Attesting witness—Two attestation clauses—Address and description—Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 9, 16; Form in schedule.—Where there are two or more grantors and two or more attestation clauses in a bill of sale given by way of security, the bill of sale is not rendered void under the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, by reason of the address and description of the attesting witness not being repeated in the second and subsequent attestation clauses, provided that it is clearly apparent upon the face of the bill of sale itself that the attesting witness is the same person in each case.

Parsons v. Brand, 38 W. R. 388, 25 Q. B. D. 110, distinguished.—Bird v. Davey (March, Claimant), C.A. 40—[1891] 1 Q. B. 29; 60 L. J. Q. B. 8; 63 L. T. 741.

4. Debenture—Company—Registration—Bills of Sale Acts, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36); 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31); and 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 17—Registration under Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), s. 45, and Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 43.—Debentures of a joint-stock company limited which create a charge on the floating real and personal property of the company are, by section 17 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, expressly excluded from the operation of that Act, and therefore do not require registration under it.

The dictum of Grove, J., in Jenkinson v. Brandley Mining Co., 35 W. R. 834, 19 Q. B. D. 568, that the words "or other incorporated company" in section 17 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, are limited to companies ejusdem generis with mortgage and loan companies, disapproved; but Held, that, even if that dictum were right, any incorporated company which is authorized to raise money on loan or mortgage is, for the purposes of that section, ejusdem generis with a mortgage or loan company.

Although debentures answering to the description given above (which applies to companies' debentures in the ordinary form) are agreements "by which a right in equity" to a "charge or security" on "personal chattels" is "conferred," within the definition of bills of sale in section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878; yet, upon the true construction of that Act, the mortgages or charges of any incorporated company for the registration of which statutory provision has been made by the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, or the Companies Act, 1862, are not bills of sale within the scope of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878.

Read v. Joannon, 38 W. R. 734, 25 Q. B. D. 300; John Welsted & Co. v. Swansea Bank, 5 Times L. R. 332; Edmonds v. Blaina Furnaces Co., 35 W. R. 798, 36 Ch. D. 215; and Levy v. Abercorris Slate and Slab Co., 36 W. R. 411, 37 Ch. D. 260, approved.

Decision of Bristowe, V.C., reversed.—In re Standard Manufacturing Co., Ex parte Lowe and Others, C.A. 369—[1891] 1 Ch. 627; 60 L. J. Q. B. 52; 64 L. T. 487.

5. Form in schedule—Address of attesting witness—Name and description of grantee—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 8, 9.—The execution of a bill of sale was attested by "C., clerk to the D. Bank, D.-street, Charing-cross." The affidavit made by the attesting witness, and filed with the bill of sale, gave the private residence of the witness as his address.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (differing on this point from North, J.), that the address of the attesting witness as given in the bill of sale was sufficiently in accordance with the statutory form.

A bill of sale was expressed to be granted to "the D. Bank, of 6, D.-street, Charing-cross (of which said bank S., of the same place, is the sole proprietor)." The chattels comprised in the bill of sale were thereby assigned to "the said bank and its assigns," and the bill of sale contained no further mention of S.

Held, that no irresistible inference could be drawn from the bill of sale itself that the "D. Bank" was in fact S., and accordingly that the bill of sale was void, on the ground that the name and description therein contained of the grantee was not in accordance with the statutory form.

Bird v. Davey, 39 W. R. 40, [1891] 1 Q. B. 29, distinguished.—In re Heseltine, Woodward v. Heseltine, C.A. 405—[1891] 1 Ch. 464; 60 L. J. Ch. 357; 64 L. T. 303.

6. Form in schedule—Power to sell on or off the premises—Whether such power invalidates bill of sale—"Necessary for the maintenance of the security"—Bills of Sale Act, 1882.—A clause in a bill of sale giving the grantee "power to sell the goods by private treaty or public auction on or off the premises" is a clause necessary for the maintenance of the security, and does not vitiate the bill of sale.—Bourne v. Wall (Wall, Claimant), Q.B.D. 510—64 L. T. 530.

7. Form in schedule—Repayment of principal—Unequal instalments—Interest on unpaid instalments—Rate of interest—Alleged ambiguity—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 9.—A bill of sale dated March 6, 1889, was granted to secure the repayment of a sum of £30, with interest thereon at the rate of sixty per cent. per annum. The grantor thereby agreed to pay the said principal sum by the following instalments:—i.e., "the sum of £5 on the 9th of March, 1889, the sum of £2 on the 6th of April, 1889, and the sum of £2 on the 6th day of every succeeding month until the 6th of February, 1890, and the balance of the said principal sum on the 6th of March, 1890; and on the said 6th day of March, 1890, to also pay the interest which shall have accrued at the rate aforesaid upon the said principal sum, and, in case default shall be made in payment of any of the said instalments of the principal sum, the same shall until payment continue to bear interest at the rate aforesaid."

Held, on the authority of Goldstrom v. Tallerman, 35 W. R. 68, 18 Q. B. D. 1, that the bill of sale was in accordance with the statutory form contained in the schedule to the Bills of Sale Act, 1882.

Decision of the Divisional Court (Lord Coleridge, C.J., and Lord Esher, M.R.) reversed.—Haslewood v. Consolidated Credit Co., C.A. 54—25 Q. B. D. 555; 60 L. J. Q. B. 12; 63 L. T. 71.

8. Form in schedule—Repayment of principal and interest—Instalments—Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 9.—By a bill of sale, dated the 26th of September, 1887, and given as security for an advance of £50 and interest thereon at the rate of five per cent. per month, the grantor agreed that he would pay to the grantee the principal sum, together with the interest then due, as follows:—The sum of £2 10s. on the 26th of October, 1887, and the like sum of £2 10s. on the 26th of each and every succeeding month until the 26th of September, 1889; then the balance and interest as aforesaid was to be paid.

Held, that, upon the true construction of the bill of sale, the monthly payments of £2 10s. were in respect of interest only, and not of principal, and that the principal sum of £50 was not repayable until the 26th of September, 1889; and that the bill of sale so drawn was in accordance with the statutory form.

Held, further, that, apart altogether from its construction, the bill of sale was in accordance with the form, and was therefore valid.

Goldstrom v. Tallerman, 35 W. R. 68, 18 Q. B. D. 1, distinguished.—Edwards v. Marston, C.A. 165—[1891] 1 Q. B. 225; 60 L. J. Q. B. 202; 64 L. T. 97.

9. "Marriage settlement"—Ante-nuptial agreement for a settlement—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 4.—An agreement for a marriage settlement comes within the term "marriage settlement" in the exception contained in section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and is, therefore, not a bill of sale within the meaning of the Act.

Judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (39 W. R. 301, [1891] 1 Q. B. 634) affirmed.—Wenman v. Lyon & Co. (Honeywill, Claimant), C.A. 519—[1891] 2 Q. B. 192.

10. Pledge—Transference of property, but not of possession—Document regulating terms of holding.—The goods of A. having been seized by the sheriff under a fi. fa., the defendant agreed to pay out the sheriff and to hold the goods as a security for the advance, and that the sheriff's officer should remain in possession of the goods on his behalf. This agreement was reduced into writing and signed by the defendant. The sheriff acquiesced in the terms, and his officer remained in possession of the goods. A. having subsequently executed a bill of sale of the same goods to the plaintiff,

Held, by Lindley and Lopes, L.JJ. (Lord Esher, M.R., dissenting), that the agreement, being essential for the proof of the defendant's title to the goods, was a bill of sale, and therefore void for want of registration.—Mills v. Charlesworth, C.A. 1—25 Q. B. D. 421; 59 L. J. Q. B. 530; 63 L. T. 508.

11. Pledge—Registration—Delivery order—Parol contract—Document essential to the transaction—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), ss. 3, 4—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 3, 8, 9.—The plaintiff, as owner of goods in a warehouse, subject to a charge of £100, agreed verbally with the defendants for a loan of £250 on the security of the goods. He also gave them a promissory note for £255 and a written agreement for payment of further interest. The £100 was paid off and the inventory of the goods handed to the defendants, the balance being paid to the plaintiff. The warehousemen refusing to transfer the goods till their charges were paid, the plaintiff gave the defendants an order on the warehousemen for the delivery of the goods on payment of their charges. The defendants paid the charges, and the goods were transferred into their names in the warehouse books, the plaintiff giving them a promissory note for the amount of the charges and a written agreement for further interest.

Held, that the transaction was one of pledge, and was not affected by the Bills of Sale Acts.—Grigg v. National Guardian Assurance Co., CH.D. KEK., J. 684—64 L. T. 787.

12. Registration—Non-re-registration—Avoidance ab initio—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 41), s. 11—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 3, 8.—A bill of sale, duly registered, had been granted in 1884. It was not, however, re-registered within five years as required by section 11 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878.

Held, that, having regard to sections 3 and 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, the effect of non-re-registration was to render the bill of sale void as between the parties to it, and not merely void as against the persons enumerated in section 11 of the Act of 1878.—Fenton v. Blythe (Collard, Claimant), Q.B.D. 79—25 Q. B. D. 417; 59 L. J. Q. B. 589; 63 L. T. 453.

13. Registration—Covenant in lease—"Licence to take possession of personal chattels as security for a debt"—Power of distress for recovery of debt in respect of goods supplied by a landlord to a tenant—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 4—Practice — Motion for judgment — Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s. 2.—Motions for judgments upon the verdict of a jury must, by section 2 of the Judicature Act, 1890, be made to the judge who tried the case, and such motions will not in the future, even by consent of parties, be heard by the Court of Appeal.

In an agreement for a lease by a brewer, as landlord, to the tenant of "a tied house" a covenant was inserted to the effect that the landlord "should have the same rights, powers, and remedies as landlords ordinarily possess in case of rent in arrear, for any amount due by the tenant for any liquors or other goods sold, or for any money advanced by him to the tenant not exceeding in the whole £200 over and above any rent then due, and should be at liberty to seize and distrain any furniture, stock, or effects in respect of any such debts, and sell the same as, by law, landlords are empowered to do for rent."

Held, that the covenant, in spite of there being no existing debt at the date upon which it was made, amounted to a bill of sale within the meaning of section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, as "a licence to take possession of personal chattels as security for a debt," and was void for want of registration.

Pulbrook v. Ashby & Co., 35 W. R. 779, approved.—Stevens v. Marston, C.A. 129—60 L. J. Q. B. 192; 64 L. T. 274.

15. "True owner"—Successive assignments of same chattels—Consideration not truly stated—Undisclosed trust or condition—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 10, sub-section 3—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 3, 5.—H., being already indebted to T. on earlier securities, including a bill of sale over certain goods, and desiring to obtain a further advance, executed a bill of sale to T. upon the same goods, on the understanding that he should afterwards pay T. the amount due to him on the then subsisting securities, and this amount was paid.

An execution creditor of H. contended that the bill of sale was invalid.

Held, that the bill of sale was good.—Thomas v. Searles, C.A. 692—[1891] 2 Q. B. 408.

14. "True owner"—Property previously settled by grantor—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43).—A. made a settlement upon marriage of all the furniture then at his residence, together with all that should be acquired during coverture, upon himself and his wife during their joint lives, and after their death to the survivor absolutely, with a proviso that, if A. became bankrupt, his wife might declare other trusts. A. executed a bill of sale over certain furniture included in the settlement. On motion by the trustee in bankruptcy of A. to set aside the bill of sale, on the ground that the bankrupt was not the true owner within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, Held (dismissing the motion), that A. was, to the extent of his interest under the settlement, the true owner of the goods.—In re Field, Ex parte Pratt, Q.B.D.—63 L. T. 289.

BOILER:—

Boiler explosion—Explosion in coal mine—Meaning of "boiler"—Jurisdiction of Board of Trade to order inquiry—Boiler Explosions Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 22), ss. 3, 4—Boiler Explosions Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 35), s. 2.—By section 4 of the Boiler Explosions Act, 1882, the Act was not to apply to "any boiler used exclusively for domestic purposes, or to any boiler used in the service of her Majesty, or any boiler on board a steamship having a certificate from the Board of Trade, or to any boiler explosion into which an inquiry may be held under the provisions of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1872, and the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872."

By section 2 of the Boiler Explosions Act, 1890, "So much of section 4 of the Boiler Explosions Act, 1882, as relates to any boiler other than a boiler used in the service of her Majesty, or used exclusively for domestic purposes, is hereby repealed, and the said Act shall apply in the case of any boiler explosion occurring on board a British ship."

Held, that the provision in section 4 of the Act of 1882 excepting from the operation of that Act any boiler explosion into which an inquiry may be held under the Mines Regulation Acts, 1872, was repealed by section 2 of the Act of 1890, and therefore the Board of Trade has jurisdiction under the Act of 1882 to order an inquiry into such a boiler explosion.

On the surface of a mine there was a boiler, from which the steam was conveyed by a pipe down the shaft of the mine and along the workings to a receiver, and from the receiver by a pipe to an engine in the mine. Stop-valves were placed upon the pipe at different places, the last valve being close to the engine, the distance from the boiler on the surface to the engine being 1,363 feet. When all the valves were open steam passed from the boiler to the engine. An explosion having occurred at the valve close to the engine,

Held (by Lord Halsbury, L.C., and Lord Esher, M.R.; Fry, L.J., doubting), that the place where the explosion occurred was a part of the "boiler" within the meaning of that word as defined by section 3 of the Boiler Explosions Act, 1882—"a closed vessel used for generating steam."

Decision of the Queen's Bench Division affirmed. —Reg. v. Commissioners under the Boiler Explosions Act, 1882, C.A. 440—[1891] 1 Q. B. 703; 60 L. J. Q. B. 544; 64 L. T. 674.

BUILDING CONTRACT:—

Time—Implied waiver—Vendor and purchaser—Notice—Covenant for title—Statutory declaration.—A land company were in possession of part of certain settled estates under building agreements providing for leases to be eventually granted, such agreements to expire in case the buildings were not completed in 1881 and 1885 respectively. A railway company projected a scheme which would involve taking part of the premises and interfere with the building operations. The tenant for life, the leasing authority of the estate, under these circumstances, without making any agreement to that effect, did in fact, through his agent's conduct, waive the obligation of the land company to complete within the specified time. In 1883 the railway company, with knowledge of these circumstances, agreed to purchase the fee subject to the building agreements. In 1886 the railway company entered without making a deposit, or giving a bond to the land company under the Lands Clauses Act, though knowing that the land company claimed that their agreements were subsisting in equity. The land company brought an action against the railway company, and established that the railway company had wrongfully entered, the land company being equitably entitled to an extension of time. The railway company took their conveyance of the fee, the tenant for life, who joined as beneficial owner, and his land agent, making statutory declarations that they knew of no negotiation of any kind with the land company having reference to any extension of time under the building agreements. The conveyance was expressed to be subject, so far as the premises were affected thereby, to the building agreements. The land company subsequently obtained compensation from the railway company in respect of their interest in the lands taken.

Held (affirming the decision of Kekewich, J., 62 L. T. Rep. N. S. 393), that in the absence of fraud, neither under the statutory declarations nor under the covenant for title supplied by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, were the railway company entitled to be recouped the compensation they had paid the land company.—London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Boulton, C.A.—63 L. T. 727.

BUILDING SOCIETY:—

1. Arbitration—Power to direct arbitrators to state a case—Building Societies Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), s. 36—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), ss. 19, 24.—By section 36 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, the decision of arbitrators appointed under the Act is to be final, but power is given to them, at the request of either party, to state a special case for the opinion of the court on any question of law.

By section 19 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, power is given to the court to direct arbitrators to state a case on any question of law arising in the course of the reference; and, by section 24, the provisions of the Act are made applicable to all arbitrations under any Act passed before the Act, "except in so far as this Act is inconsistent with the Act regulating the arbitration."

Held (reversing the decision of the Queen's Bench Division), that the two Acts are not inconsistent, and that there is, therefore, power under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, to order arbitrators appointed under the Building Societies Act, 1874, to state a special case for the opinion of the court on a question of law.—In re Knight and the Tabernacle Permanent Building Society, C.A. 507 —[1891] 2 Q. B. 63.

2. Liability of director—Advance of money on security of scrip—Building Societies Acts, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32), s. 4, and 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), ss. 13, 15.—A., the director of a building society, was party to a resolution that advances should in future be made to members on the deposit of their scrip. In pursuance of this resolution, advances were from time to time made on this security, but A. was not a party to any of the resolutions to make such advances: a loss having been sustained by the society in consequence of these advances,

Held, that, under the Building Societies Acts, the resolution authorizing the advance was invalid, but that, since the real cause of the loss was the advance, and not the resolution authorizing it, A. was not liable to the society for the loss.—Cullerne v. London and Suburban Benefit Building Society, C.A. 88—25 Q. B. D. 485; 59 L. J. Q. B. 525; 63 L. T. 511.

3. Winding up—Losses—Liability of past members —Borrowing power—Method of calculation—Building Societies Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), s. 15, sub-section 2.—Advanced or investing members of a building society who have redeemed or withdrawn under the rules are no longer members for any purpose or liable to contribute in the event of a winding up.

In ascertaining the limits of a power of borrowing under a rule similar to section 15, sub-section 2, of the Building Societies Act, 1874, "the total amount borrowed" must be taken to include all moneys borrowed from any source whatsoever, notwithstanding subsequent loans of the same moneys to non-members, and "the amount for the time being secured to the society by mortgages from its members" must extend to and be limited by the amount so secured, whether advanced in respect of shares or not.—In re West Riding of Yorkshire Permanent Benefit Building Society, Ex parte Pullman, Ex parte Charnock, Ex parte Johnson and Greenwood, CH.D. CHI., J. 74—45 Ch. D. 463; 59 L. J. Ch. 823; 63 L. T. 483.

4. Winding up—Unregistered company—Vesting order—Official liquidator—General powers—Motion in name of liquidator—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 95, 203.—A motion was made in the name of the official liquidator of an unincorporated building society, which was in course of being wound up compulsorily under the Companies Act, 1862, as an "unregistered company," for an order, pursuant to section 203 of that Act, vesting in the liquidator certain property then vested in the sole surviving trustee of the society; and that the liquidator might be at liberty to exercise any of the powers conferred on him by section 95 of the same Act without the sanction or intervention of the court.

Held, that, subject to the notice of motion being amended by making it in the name of the society instead of in that of the official liquidator, the usual vesting order should be granted.

But held, that the right to exercise the powers conferred by section 95 of the Companies Act, 1862, without the sanction or intervention of the court could not be allowed, it being improper to make the order in such general terms, notwithstanding the order made in In re Ebsworth and Tidy's Contract, 42 Ch. D. 23, 60 L. T. N. S. 841.—In re Britannia Permanent Benefit Building Society, CH.D. KAY, J.—63 L. T. 304.

See also COUNTY COURT, 11.

BURIAL.—See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW, 1, 2.

CANADA, LAW of:—

Quebec—C. C. P. 1034 and 1035—31 Vict. c. 25—Letters patent of incorporation—Fraud—Annulment of letters patent—Writ of scire facias.—Where it appeared that the defendants and others had been incorporated by letters patent issued under the great seal of the province, which letters had been obtained by a fraudulent representation that the defendants and others had petitioned for the same, and a writ of scire facias was issued on an information by the Attorney-General against the company, its liquidator, and its judgment creditor, to show cause why the letters patent should not be declared fraudulent, null, and void, "at least in so far as the said defendants were concerned."

Held, under C. C. P. 1034 and 1035, that the code does not authorize a partial annulment of letters patent as had been directed by the Court of Queen's Bench, and they ought to be entirely annulled, and that the terms of the prayer were wide enough to authorize an order to that effect.—La Banque d'Hochelaga v. Murray and Others, P.C.—15 App. Cas. 414; 59 L. J. P. C. 102; 63 L. T. 63.

CEYLON, LAW of:—

Fiscal sale—Ejectment.—In an action of ejectment it appeared that the plaintiff had derived title by purchase from the mortgage of the estate in question, and had covenanted with his vendor to pay all sums due on the mortgage; while the defendant had derived title and possession by a subsequent purchase at a fiscal sale obtained by the mortgagee in possession in proceedings to which the plaintiff was not a party.

Held, that whether the plaintiff was bound by the fiscal sale or not, he could not in justice or in law eject the defendant without at least paying to him the moneys due on the mortgage, and that, whether he was entitled to redeem or not, there being no prayer for relief of that character, it could not be decreed to him in this action.—Murugaser Marimuttu v. De Soysa, P.C.—[1891] A. C. 69; 60 L. J. P. C. 26.

CHARGING ORDER.—See LUNATIC, 2; PRACTICE, 13; PRACTICE (IRELAND), 4; SOLICITOR, 1, 2.

CHARITY:—

1. Charitable bequest—Legacy to Society for Abolition of Vivisection—Legacy to Society for the Protection of Animals—Uncertainty—Perpetuity.—A testator gave a legacy of £500 to the Society for the Abolition of Vivisection, and he bequeathed the residue of his property to the Society of Carlsruhe for the Protection of Animals, to be paid in each case to the treasurer of the society. The objects of the first-named society was to procure by legislation the entire suppression of vivisection. The rules provided that the secretary should receive all moneys contributed to the society and expend the same on its behalf in his discretion; and that all moneys exceeding the sum required for use by the society should be invested. The objects of the Carlsruhe Society was to prevent the ill-treatment of animals, to protect all useful animals, especially birds, and whenever necessary to provide them with food, and such like objects. Neither of the societies was incorporated.

Held, (1) that the legacies were charitable legacies; (2) that even if not charitable, they were not void for uncertainty or as creating perpetuities.—Armstrong v. Reeves, V.C. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 325.

2. Charitable bequest—Memoranda in favour of—Invalid declaration of trust—Abortive instruments.—A testator about eight years before his death, which occurred in 1889, called on H., a friend of his, and stated that he was about to dispose of his property in case of his death, and that after making provision for his relations he should give certain bonds to H. and another friend C. to distribute amongst different charitable institutions, and asked H. to assist him in making out a list. The testator and H. and C. subsequently met together, and a memorandum was written by C. at the dictation of the testator, to the effect that the testator had handed over to H. and C. the securities named on the other side of the paper, to be given by them to the various charitable institutions specified. The testator signed this memorandum, and his signature was witnessed by an independent witness, and the securities, which were all payable to bearer, were handed over and placed by C. in a safe. The testator, however, received the interest on the securities, and also withdrew some of the securities, and at various interviews with C. varied the names of the charitable institutions, and the amounts payable to them, and the memorandum was accordingly altered or in part re-written in pencil. Some short time before the testator's death, C., at the testator's instance, wrote another memorandum as a final expression of the testator's wishes concerning the securities which were remaining, but did not ask the testator to sign such memorandum, being of opinion that it was highly probable that after so many changes the testator would withdraw the remaining securities, and the whole thing would end. Neither C. nor H. made any claim to the securities, but the charitable institutions contended that the memoranda operated as a declaration of trust.

Held, that there was unquestionably no valid declaration of trust; and that the memoranda were imperfect testamentary documents of an informal character.

Held, therefore, that the property which the memoranda purported to affect passed to the executors as part of the property belonging to the testator at his death.—In re Smith, Champ v. Marshallsay, CH.D. CHI., J.—64 L. T. 13.

3. Charitable bequest—Validity of—"Advancement and propagation of education in economic and sanitary science in Great Britain."—A testator by his will gave £200,000 to trustees, to be paid exclusively out of such part of his personal estate as might by law be bequeathed for charitable purposes; and he directed that his trustees should stand possessed of the said legacy upon trust to apply the same "for the advancement and propagation of education in economic and sanitary science in Great Britain."

Held, that this was a perfectly valid charitable bequest.

Decision of Stirling, J. (62 L. T. N. S. 365), affirmed.—In re Berridge, Berridge v. Turner, C.A.—63 L. T. 470.

4. Failure of particular charity after testator's death, but before payment of legacy—Lapse—Cy-près.—A testator bequeathed a legacy to a charitable institution, which was an orphanage voluntarily maintained by a lady at her own expense. The institution was in existence at the date of the testator's death, but it came to an end shortly afterwards, and before the legacy was paid.

Held (reversing Stirling, J., 39 W. R. 284, [1891] 1 Ch. 373), that the legacy had not lapsed, but had become the property of the orphanage; and that, as the ophanage had ceased to exist, the legacy became applicable by the Crown for charitable purposes cy-près.

Clark v. Taylor, 1 W. R. 476, 1 Drew. 642, and Hayter v. Trego, 5 Russ. 113, considered.—In re Slevin, Slevin v. Hepburn, C.A. 578—[1891] 2 Ch. 236; 60 L. J. Ch. 439; 64 L. T. 311.

5. Lease — Consent of Charity Commissioners — Effect of lease for more than twenty-one years without consent—Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 124), s. 29.—A lease of charity property for more than twenty-one years, made without the consent required by section 29 of the Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855, does not enure for any purpose, but is absolutely void.—Bishop of Bangor v. Parry, Q.B.D. 541—[1891] 2 Q. B. 207.

6. Mortmain—Bond of municipal corporation—Borough fund—Interest in land—Mortmain Act (9 Geo. 2, c. 36)—Municipal Corporations Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), s. 92—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50). Part VII., ss. 139-143—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 175.—Section 92 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, provides that (inter alia) the rents and profits of all hereditaments belonging to any corporate body shall be carried to an account to be called the "borough fund," and that such fund, saving the rights of all persons in or upon any real or personal estate of any body corporate, by virtue of any mortgage or otherwise, shall be applied to various specified purposes, including the payment of the salaries of the mayor, recorder, and police of the borough; and that, in case the borough fund shall be more than sufficient for such purposes, the surplus thereof shall be applied for the public benefit of the inhabitants of the borough. The Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, contains a similar provision.

Held, that a bond of a municipal corporation creating a mortgage of the "borough fund" as constituted under either of the above Acts does not create an interest in, or a charge upon an interest in, land within the meaning of 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, because such bond can only operate to charge the surplus (if any) of the fund remaining as moneys in the hands of the body corporate after the payments specified in section 92 have been made out of the fund.

The clause in section 92 of the Act of 1835 saving the rights of any person claiming under any mortgage applies only to rights existing at the date of the passing of that Act, and not to prospective rights.

Section 175 of the Public Health Act, 1875, provides that lands acquired by any local authority under that Act, and not required for the purposes for which they were acquired, shall be sold, and the proceeds of sale carried to the account of the "district fund."

Held, that, in the absence of any evidence to show the existence of any such surplus lands, a mortgage of the "district fund" did not create an interest in, or a charge upon an interest in, land within 9 Geo. 2, c. 36.

Decision of Stirling, J. (38 W. R. 249), reversed,—In re Thompson, Bedford v. Teal, C.A. 50—45 Ch. D. 161; 59 L. J. Ch. 689; 63 L. T. 471.

7. Mortmain—Manchester Corporation stock—Interest in land—Manchester Waterworks and Improvements Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. xxxi.), s. 34.—The Corporation of Manchester were empowered by 35 & 36 Vict. c. xxxi., s. 34, to issue stock, "and the stock so created and issued shall be a charge upon the city rate, and all landed and other property vested in or belonging to the corporation, or which may be acquired by them, but shall be distributable, transmissible, and transferable as, and in other respects have the incidents of, personal estate."

Held, that the stock conferred an interest in land within the Mortmain Act (9 Geo. 2, c. 36), s. 3, and could not be bequeathed for charitable purposes.

Bedford v. Teal, 39 W. R. 50, 45 Ch. D. 161, distinguished.—In re Holmes, Holmes v. Holmes, CH.D. KAY, J.—60 L. J. Ch. 267; 63 L. T. 477.

8. Mortmain — Interest in land — Mortgage of borough "rents, rates, and waterworks"—"Undertaking"—Mortmain Act (9 Geo. 2, c. 36).—A corporation, by virtue of their powers under two private Acts, and under the Local Government Supplemental Act, 1861, to secure the sum of £150 paid by the testatrix for the purposes of these Acts, mortgaged to her, "her executors, administrators, and assigns, such proportion of the rents, rates, and waterworks which, by the said Acts, . . . the corporation are authorized to charge, levy, purchase, and make, . . . as the principal sum doth or shall bear to the whole sum which is or shall be borrowed."

Held, that this was a mortgage of the undertaking as a going concern.

Held, also, that the mortgage did not create an interest in land within the Mortmain Acts, and that the mortgage debt was, in consequence, pure personalty.

The principles of Walker v. Milne, 11 Beav. 507; Gardner v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co., 15 W. R. 325, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 201; Holdsworth v. Davenport, 25 W. R. 20, 3 Ch. D. 185; Attree v. Hawe, 26 W. R. 871, 9 Ch. D. 337; and In re Yerbury's Estate, Ker v. Dent, 62 L. T. N. S. 55, 38 W. R. Dig. 217, followed and applied.—In re Parker, Wignall v. Parker, CH.D. STI., J. 346—[1891] 1 Ch. 682; 60 L. J. Ch. 195; 64 L. T. 257.

See also TRADE UNION; WILL, 26.

CHEQUE:—

Crossing—Negotiability—Words restricting negotiability—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), ss. 8, 29, 35, 73, 81.—A cheque payable to order or bearer can only be rendered not negotiable by writing across the face of the cheque a direction, in clear and unambiguous language, that the cheque is not negotiable.

[illegible]

City of London Court.—[illegible] —The City of London Court has jurisdiction to try an action where the defendant has employment within the City of London, although he does not live or carry on business therein, and although the cause of action arose therein, as section 31 of the London City Small Debts Extension Act, 1852, which gave this extended jurisdiction, has not been repealed by any of the subsequent County Court Acts [illegible] 2 Q. B. [illegible] 61 L. J. Q. B. 365; 64 L. T. [illegible].

CLUB.—

[illegible]—Member—Expulsion—Injunction.—In [illegible] where the members of a club have a right of property in the club, any member who is improperly expelled can obtain relief by injunction. In the case of a proprietary club where the members have no right of property in the club, but have merely a licence in consideration of a certain payment to use the club, in accordance with certain rules, the remedy of a member improperly expelled is damages for breach of contract, but he cannot obtain relief by injunction.—Bond v. Hotten, Ch.D. STIRLING, J. 61—44 Ch. D. 661; 59 L. J. Ch. 676; 63 L. T. 612.

See also NUISANCE, 1.

COKE.—See METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 5.

COLLEGE.—See UNIVERSITY, 1, 2.

COMMONS, RIGHTS of.—See COPYHOLDS.

COMPANY:—

BORROWING POWERS—

1. Debentures—Receiver—Principal and interest payable—Non-interest unpaid.—Where debentures include all the property of the company, and the company is insolvent, the debenture-holders are entitled to the appointment of a receiver of the property and assets of the company, although the principal secured by the debentures is not immediately payable, and there is no interest in arrear.—[illegible] Limited, CH.D. [illegible] 60 L. J. Ch. 372; [illegible].

[illegible] receiver.—In a debenture-holder's action for foreclosure, where the debentures included all the property and uncalled capital of the company and the shares which had been called were fully paid up, and almost all the assets and the whole of the debentures belonged either to the chairman or the proposed manager, the chairman with the assent of the company, appointed the chairman and the company to be receiver and manager of the property and business of the company in the undertaking of the plaintiff to pay the debenture expenses, to be responsible for the receipts of the receiver till he should give notice and realize the property as soon as possible.—[illegible] Sons (Limited), [illegible] 1 Ch. 133; 60 L. J. Ch. [illegible].

[illegible] Barrett's, & Bonus, [illegible]—[1891] 1 Ch. 136 n.

See also [illegible] WINDING-UP, 36, 37.

[illegible] to secure proceedings by directors—[illegible].—A limited company, incorporated in [illegible] which one object was [illegible] borrow money by mortgage or otherwise, receive money on deposit, and issue [illegible] and other bonds and mortgage debentures, and any other securities founded or based upon all or any of the real and personal assets or upon the credit of the company," was in liquidation under an order of the 16th of February, 1889. In [illegible] the company had obtained an overdraft from a bank on security of two joint promissory notes, payable on demand, given by two directors, M. and G. These notes were renewed at various times down to [illegible]. M. and G. also executed guarantees to two railway companies. In April, 1882, the board resolved that under article 81 of the company's articles, the directors should be indemnified, and in March, [illegible] a similar resolution was passed, and also that they should be secured by means of charge on the uncalled capital. In May, 1886, a mortgage by way of indemnity to M. and G. was executed "of the uncalled-up amounts of £4 per share on 5,000 shares." M. and G. had made payments to the bank and to the railway companies, and now claimed the benefit of their security.

Held, upon the evidence, that it was part of the agreement that M. and G. should be indemnified by a charge upon the uncalled capital, and that the overdraft being a borrowing of money, the transaction was a borrowing on the security of the uncalled capital, and to that extent the mortgage was valid.

Held, also, that clause 3 (L) authorized the issue of securities founded upon uncalled capital.

Held, also, that, under the articles, the indemnifying of a director was a legitimate business purpose of the company.—In re Pyle Works (Limited), CH.D. STIRLING, J. 235—[1891] 1 Ch. 173; 60 L. J. Ch. 114; 63 L. T. 628.

DIRECTORS—

4. Appointment—Validity of—Practice—Motion to stay action—Costs—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26

Vict. c. 89), s. 67; Table A, arts. 35, 52, 53, 58, 62, 71.—Article 58 of Table A to the Companies Act, 1862, does not apply to mere de facto directors, nor to subscribers to the memorandum of association, who, by article 53, are "deemed to be directors," no directors having been appointed by them under article 52; but only to directors who have been duly appointed under the articles.

Where no directors have been appointed by the subscribers to the memorandum of association, nor have they themselves acted as directors, persons who have constituted themselves directors de facto cannot retire from office under article 58, and then continue in office as "vacating directors" under article 62.

The power of appointing directors given to the subscribers of the memorandum of association under article 52 remains in force until an appointment has been made and reasonable notice only is required for calling a meeting of subscribers of the memorandum of association.—John Morley Building Co. v. Barras, CH.D. STI., J. 619—[1891] 2 Ch. 386; 60 L. J. Ch. 496; 64 L. T. 856.

5. Remuneration—Net profits for the year—Voluntary winding up—Reconstruction—Profits on sale of undertaking to new company.—A provision in a company's articles remunerating the directors for their services by a percentage on the net profits of each year applies only to profits made by the company as a going concern, and not to a profit realized on the sale of its undertaking to a new company in a voluntary winding up, with a view to reconstruction.

Rishton v. Grissell, L. R. 5 Eq. 326, 16 W. R. Ch. Dig. 86, approved.—Frames v. Bultfontein Mining Co. (Limited), CH.D. CHI., J. 134—[1891] 1 Ch. 140; 60 L. J. Ch. 99; 64 L. T. 12.

6. Resignation—Regulations of company—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 15; Table A, art. 55.—In the absence of a special provision in the articles of association the directors of a company have no power to accept the resignation of a co-director; the resignation must be made to the company.

Article 55 of Table A gives the directors no such power.—Municipal Freehold Land Co. v. Pollington, CH.D. KEK., J.—59 L. J. Ch. 734; 63 L. T. 238.

MEETING—

7. Amendment to resolution—Rejection by chairman—Conduct of member—Waiver—Terms of notice convening meeting.—The rules of a company provided that no shareholder should be qualified to vote unless he had held five shares for six months before the meeting, but the number of the votes of a qualified proprietor depended on the number of his shares, without regard to how long he had held the other shares. Notice was given of an extraordinary meeting for the 4th of April, 1889, with a view "to alter the scale of voting by giving to every qualified proprietor one vote for each share." On the 1st of April the directors circulated the resolution to be proposed, which was to the effect that every proprietor should have one vote for each share, but should have no vote for any share unless he had held it six months. H., a proprietor, attended the meeting and proposed that to qualify a person to be a director he must have held shares for a certain period. The chairman ruled this out of order, upon which H. moved an amendment that the qualification of six months as to shareholders should be expunged. He did not put the amendment in writing, or in very clear terms. The chairman, however, understood the motion in the above sense, and asked whether anyone seconded it, and, it having been seconded, he was about to put it to the meeting; but after consulting the solicitor of the company he said he was advised that no amendment could be put, and that the proposed resolution must either be accepted as it stood or rejected. He therefore refused to put the amendment. The original resolution was then passed, H. moving its rejection and voting against it. It was confirmed at a subsequent meeting at which H. attended, and protested on the grounds that the resolution was not within the notice calling the meeting, and that the chairman had refused to put his amendment. On an action by H. to set aside the resolution on the above grounds,

Held by Chitty, J., that the conduct of the plaintiff at the meeting amounted to a waiver which precluded him from bringing an action against the company of which he was a member, on the ground of any irregularity in the notice; that any member wishing to insist upon his right to move an amendment, or to protest against the ruling of the chairman, ought to formulate and put before the chairman, either orally or in writing, the terms of his amendment, and should also put the chairman on his guard, by cautioning him that his ruling was objected to, so as to give him an opportunity of reconsidering his position; and that on these grounds the plaintiff's action failed, and must be dismissed.

Held, on appeal, that H. had moved an amendment which was sufficiently definite, and that the chairman was wrong in refusing to put it to the meeting; that, as the chairman after consulting the solicitor of the company had deliberately ruled that no amendment could be put, H. was under no obligation to contest that ruling or to leave the meeting, but was justified in voting against the resolution; that his so doing could not be deemed acquiescence in the ruling; and that as the chairman's refusal to put the amendment had withdrawn a material and relevant question from the consideration of the meeting, the resolution must be set aside.

Whether the resolution was within the scope of the notice calling the meeting, quære.

Per Cotton and Fry, L.JJ., semble, that it was.—Henderson v. Bank of Australasia, C.A.—45 Ch. D. 330; 59 L. J. Ch. 794; 63 L. T. 597.

MEMORANDUM—

8. Alteration of memorandum—Business—Objects—Main purpose—Extending range of investments—Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 62), s. 1 (2), (4), (5) (a) (b).—A company formed for the purpose of investing in Government stock or other securities guaranteed by Government cannot alter its memorandum of association under the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890, so as to extend its power of investment to non-Government securities, such alteration neither "enabling it to carry on its business more economically or more efficiently," nor "to attain its main purpose by new or improved means" within the meaning of the Act.

Observations on the duty of the court in exercising its discretion under the Act.—In re Government Stock Investment Co., CH.D. CHI., J. 375—[1891] 1 Ch. 649; 60 L. J. Ch. 477; 64 L. T. 339

9. Alteration of memorandum—New business—Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 62), s. 1, sub-sections 3, 5 (d).—The court has power, under sub-section 5 (d) of section 1 of the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890, to confirm, either wholly or in part, resolutions of a company extending the powers of investment in its memorandum of association; but, in exercising its discretion, the court, under subsection 3 of section 1, may impose such conditions as it may think necessary.

In re Government Stock Investment Co., 39 W. R. 375, [1891] 1 Ch. 649, distinguished.—In re Foreign and Colonial Government Trust Co. (Limited), CH.D. STI., J. 699—[1891] 2 Ch. 395.

10. Alteration of memorandum — Extension of objects mentioned in memorandum—Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 62)—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63).—A petition was presented by a company, under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890, asking for the sanction of the court to certain proposed alterations in, and additions to, the memorandum of association of the company resolved on by special resolutions. The company was registered in May, 1888, with a nominal capital of £2,000,000, but it had not been brought out, nor had it carried on business. It had no creditors nor debenture-holders. and only seven shareholders—viz., the seven subscribers to the original memorandum of association—all of whom joined the company as co-petitioners. The company had no articles of association. The objects of the company as contained in its memorandum of association were those of an investment and loan company. It was proposed to add to these the objects of a guarantee and finance company with increased borrowing powers.

The evidence showed that the business of the company could be more conveniently carried on with less restricted borrowing powers; and that the proposal to give to the company the additional powers of a guarantee and finance company would enable the company to carry on business more efficiently, and attain its purpose by improved means, and also conveniently and advantageously combine other business with its original business.

Held, that the court ought to sanction the proposed alterations.

Held also, that, although there had been no advertisements of the petition or application in chambers relating thereto, advertisements would, under the circumstances, be dispensed with.—In re The Empire Trust (Limited), CH.D. CHI., J.—64 L. T. 221.

11. Certificate of incorporation—Memorandum of association—Number of signatories—Evidence—Winding up—Jurisdiction—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 6, 17, 18, 145.—The registrar's certificate of incorporation of a company is not conclusive evidence that the memorandum of association was in fact signed by at least seven persons; evidence can be adduced to show that in fact the memorandum was signed by less than seven persons, and, if that fact be established, the court has no jurisdiction to make a winding-up order.

In re Northumberland and Durham District Banking Co., 2 De G. & J. 357, approved.

Peel's case, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 674, and Oakes v. Turquand, L. R. 2 H. L. 325, distinguished.—In re National Debenture and Assets Corporation, C.A. 707—[1891] 2 Ch. 505; 60 L. J. Ch. 533; 64 L. T. 512.

PROSPECTUS—

12. Misrepresentation—Action of deceit—Fraud—Directors—Prospectus.—An action of deceit will not lie in respect of a negligent, as distinguished from a fraudulent, misrepresentation.

Derry v. Peek, 38 W. R. 33, 14 App. Cas. 337, followed.

The directors of a gold mining company issued a prospectus containing a statement that "full reports of the property have been prepared for the directors by eminent engineers" (naming four). None of the reports in question had in fact been prepared on the instructions of the directors or on their behalf, and, although one of the reports was addressed to the directors, it had been in fact prepared, before the formation of the company, on behalf of a vendor of the property.

At the trial of an action for damages for misrepresentation. brought against the directors by a person who had taken shares in the belief, induced by the prospectus, that the reports had been prepared on behalf of the directors, the judge, in effect, found, (1) that the above statement was untrue in any fair sense of the words used, (2) that none of the defendants gave any satisfactory explanation of the meaning they attributed to the statement, and (3) that they were not justified in allowing the statement to be inserted in the prospectus. There was, however, no finding that the defendants, or any of them, had been guilty of fraud.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, on these findings, and on investigation of the evidence with respect to each defendant separately (which the court held to be necessary in an action of deceit), that fraudulent, as distinguished from negligent, misrepresentation had not been proved, and consequently that the action could not be supported against any of the defendants.

Decision of Romer, J. (39 W. R. 252), reversed.

Quære, whether the misstatement in the prospectus could be held material in the absence of proof that the reports themselves were in fact untrue.—Angus v. Clifford, C.A. 499—[1891] 2 Ch. 449; 60 L. J. Ch. 443.

13. Misrepresentation — Rescission of contract to take shares—Removal of name from register of shareholders.—The name of a shareholder ordered to be removed from the register of shareholders on the ground that he had been induced to take shares on the faith of a statement which was untrue in the prospectus that certain persons were members of the council of administration, and that the council consisted of members of the company. — In re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association, Wainwright's case, C.A.—63 L. T. 429.

14. Misrepresentation—Rescission of contract—Acquiescence—Attending meeting after repudiation of shares—Inquiring price of shares.—The prospectus of a company contained a statement that certain persons would form a council of administration from which would be selected an executive and financial committee, which should constitute the board of directors. E. applied for shares in the company, relying upon the representation that those persons were members of the council of administration, and in the belief that they would be responsible for the management of the company. Those persons were not, in fact, members of the company, and, upon discovering this, E. gave notice of motion to remove his name from the register of members. Shortly afterwards E. attended a meeting of the company, but did not vote or take any other part in the meeting. Some months after giving notice of motion E. wrote to the secretary of the company and inquired at what price the shares of the company were then quoted.

Held, that there was a material misrepresentation, on which E. relied, and that he was entitled to have his name removed from the register of members.

Held, that E. had not, by attending the meeting, or inquiring the price of the shares, acted as a shareholder towards the company so as to disentitle him to insist on his repudiation of his shares.—

In re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association, Edward's case, CH.D. KEK., J.—64 L. T. 561.

15. Misrepresentation — Rescission of contract — Winding-up order—Practice—Statement of claim—Amendment after commencement of winding up.—In an action against a company for rescission of a contract to take shares, the plaintiff cannot, after the commencement of the winding up of the company, raise, by amendment of his statement of claim, a ground for relief distinct from those raised in his original statement of claim.—Cocksedge v. Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association, CH.D. KEK., J. 636—64 L. T. 826.

REDUCTION OF CAPITAL—

16. Preference and ordinary shares—Resolution for reduction of ordinary shares only—Confirmation by court—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), ss. 9, 11—Companies Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 26), s. 3.—Under the Companies Acts, 1867 and 1877, the court has power to sanction a special resolution for the reduction of the ordinary capital only of a company, the preference capital remaining unreduced.

In re Union Plate Glass Co., 37 W. R. 792, 42 Ch. D. 513, not followed.

In re Gatling Gun Co., 38 W. R. 317, 43 Ch. D. 628, and In re Barrow Hæmatite Steel Co., 37 W. R. 249, 39 Ch. D. 582, followed.—In re Agricultural Hotel Co. (Limited), CH.D. KEK., J. 218—[1891] 1 Ch. 396; 60 L. J. Ch. 208; 63 L. T. 748.

17. Preliminary expenses — "Lost capital" or "capital unrepresented by available assets"—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), ss. 9, 11—Companies Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 26), s. 3.—A company is not entitled to reduce its capital by the amount expended on preliminary expenses, as such expenditure is not "lost capital" or "capital unrepresented by available assets" within section 3 of the Companies Act, 1877.—In re Abstainers' and General Insurance Co., CH.D. NOR., J. 574—[1891] 2 Ch. 124; 60 L. J. Ch. 510; 64 L. T. 256.

18. Sinking fund—Contract in memorandum—Payment off of preference shares—Companies Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 26), s. 4—General Orders, March, 1868, rr. 2—20.—The memorandum and articles of a company contained a contract binding the ordinary shareholders to set apart, and the preference shareholders to accept, a sinking fund for the payment off of their preference shares. The fund having been set apart, and a petition presented for reduction of capital, according to the contract,

Held, that the reduction of capital so to be effected did not involve "the payment to any shareholder of any paid-up capital" within section 4 of the Companies Act, 1877, and, consequently, that creditors (if any) were not entitled to object; and Order made without the usual inquiries as to creditors. — In re Dicido Pier Co., CH.D. CHI., J. 486—[1891] 2 Ch. 354; 60 L. T. 695.

REGISTER—

19. Rectification—Motion for rectification of register—Service on solicitors of company—Insufficiency of service—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 35, 62.—A motion was made under section 35 of the Companies Act, 1862, to rectify the register of members of a company by the insertion therein of the name of the applicant as the holder of certain shares. Correspondence had passed between the solicitors of the company and the solicitors of the applicant with reference to the applicant's claim to be a shareholder of the company, and the notice of motion had been served on the company's solicitors, they accepting service on behalf of the company in the usual manner. At the hearing the company did not appear.

Held, that service on the solicitors of the company was not sufficient; and that no order could be made until the company had itself been served at its registered office, or until it appeared.—In re the Denver United Breweries (Limited), CH.D. NOR., J.——63 L. T. 96.

REGISTRATION—

20. Private partnership—Company formed for mere purpose of registration—Company "otherwise duly constituted by law—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 4-6, 180.—Seven persons, constituting a firm which had for some years carried on a publishing business, executed a deed reciting that the partners had sold their business to a limited company in consideration of certain fully paid-up shares in the company, which formed the only assets of the partnership, and that they were desirous of modifying their partnership with a view to its registration as an unlimited company under Part VII. of the Companies Act, 1862; and containing mutual covenants between the present partners and any future members of the company, that they should be subject to certain provisions therein contained. The sole object of the deed was, in fact, to obtain registration as a company under Part VII. of the Act. The deed was produced to the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, and an application made to him to register the company.

Held, reversing the decision of the Divisional Court (Cave and Charles, JJ.), that the application could not succeed.—Reg. v. Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, C.A. 708.

SHARES—

21. Allotment—Allotment before application—Subsequent application by allottee—Withdrawal of application—Removal of name from register.—A company allotted shares to H., who had not applied for them. Subsequently H., being unaware of the previous allotment, applied for shares. H. having withdrawn his application, Held, that the allotment prior to the application was invalid, and H. was entitled to have his name removed from the register.—In re Northern Electric Wire, &c., Co., Ex parte Hall, CH.D. KAY, J.—63 L. T. 369.

22. Allotment — Directors — Allotment by unauthorized directors—Ratification by company—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 67.—A. and B. had applied for shares in a mining company, and on October 24, 1888, two of the four directors of the company met and allotted shares to A. and B. and other applicants. The allotments so made were invalid, the two directors not having authority to make allotments. Letters of allotment, were, however, sent out, and were received by A. and B. on October 25. A. returned his allotment letter, but the secretary refused to receive it back, and both A. and B. immediately wrote complaining of the manner in which the allotments had been made, and asking to be relieved from taking the shares, but neither of them expressly repudiated the shares. On October 31 B. paid the allotment money to the company's bankers under protest, as he alleged, but there was no evidence that any protest had been communicated to the company. On December 24 the company brought an action against A. for the allotment money payable by him. On January 7, 1889, at a meeting of directors, at which two were present, it was resolved that certificates be sealed of the shares allotted to A. and B., and this was accordingly done and notice thereof given to A.

and B. There was no evidence that the meeting of January 7 was in any way irregular or invalid. On January 16, at a meeting of all the four directors, the minutes of the prior meeting of January 7 were signed.

A. and B. subsequently applied to have their names removed from the shareholders' register.

Held, (1) that the invalid allotments made to A. and B. on October 24 were capable of being ratified by the company, and had been so ratified as regards A. on December 24, when the action to recover the allotment money was brought against him by the company, and had also been so ratified as regards both A. and B. either on January 7, 1889, or on January 16 at the latest; (2) that, under the circumstances of the case, and in the absence of any prior repudiation of the shares by A. or B., the ratification had been made within a reasonable time; and, consequently, that neither A. nor B. were entitled to have their names removed from the register.

Bolton v. Lambert, 37 W. R. 434, 41 Ch. D. 295, followed.

Decision of North, J., affirmed.—In re Portuguese Consolidated Copper Mines, Badman's and Bosanquet's cases, C.A. 25—45 Ch. D. 16; 63 L. T. 423.

23. Transfer—Blank transfer—Executor—Broker—Pledge — Certificates — Estoppel — Domicil — Foreign law.—The executors of a registered owner of shares in a New York railway company signed blank transfers, which were indorsed on the certificates, and handed them to their brokers, with the intention of having the shares registered in their own names. The brokers deposited the transfers, by way of security, with their bankers, and were afterwards adjudicated bankrupts. The documents themselves were quite consistent with the fact that the executors had signed merely to complete their title.

Held (affirming the Court of Appeal), that the executors were not estopped, as against the banks, from asserting their title to the shares and certificates as part of the testator's estate.

Transactions as to share certificates taking place in England between persons domiciled there are to be decided by English law; but what is effectual to transfer the shares in a foreign country, by the laws of that country.—Colonial Bank v. Cady; London Chartered Bank of Australia v. Cady, H.L. (E.) 17—15 App. Cas. 267; 60 L. J. Ch. 131; 63 L. T. 27.

24. Transfer—Blank transfer—Pledge of certificates—Fraudulent transfer—Stockbroker—Mercantile usage—Estoppel—Proof in bankruptcy.—A. employed B., a stockbroker in Dublin, to purchase certain shares in the Northern Pacific Railway Co., which B. did through a stockbroker in London. The certificates of these shares had indorsed on them an assignment in blank and a power of attorney; and by the custom of the Stock Exchange they were treated by brokers and bankers as transferable by delivery. No deed of transfer was ever executed. B. deposited the certificates, without the knowledge of A., with the defendants as security for an advance. B. was adjudicated bankrupt, and the plaintiff, as the administrator of A., who had died, proved in the bankruptcy for a sum which included the value of the shares. The plaintiff at this time did not know that the certificates had been pledged to the defendants. In an action to have the defendants declared trustees of the shares for the plaintiff, Held, (1) that the defendants had no notice, nor any reason to believe, that the shares were not the property of B.; and that as A. was not the registered owner, and as his name did not appear anywhere in connection with the shares, the shares were "in order" in the hands of B., and that consequently the defendants were bonâ fide purchasers for value without notice of any defect in the title; (2) that the plaintiff was estopped by the proceedings in the Bankruptcy Court from pursuing his remedy by action.

Goodwin v. Robarts, 1 App. Cas. 476, followed.

Sheffield v. London Joint-Stock Bank, 13 App. Cas. 333; Colonial Bank v. Cady, 15 App. Cas. 267; and Simmons v. London Joint-Stock Bank, [1891] 1 Ch. 270, distinguished.—Hone v. Boyle, Low, Murray, & Co., C.A. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 137.

25. Transfer—Non-registration of transfer—Pre-existing equitable title to shares.—As between two persons claiming title to shares registered in the name of a third person in a company formed under the Companies Act, 1862, with articles of association regulating the transfer of its shares, the title prior in date prevails unless the claimant second in point of time can show that, as between himself and the company, he has, before the receipt by the company of notice of the prior title, acquired the full status of a shareholder, or, at all events, that all the formalities have been complied with, and that some purely ministerial act alone remains to be done by the company which, as between himself and the company, the company would be bound to do forthwith.—Moore v. North-Western Bank—[1891] 2 Ch. 599; 64 L. T. 456.

25a. Transfer—Sale of shares—Certificate issued to transferee—Sale of shares by transferee—Denial by company of transferee's title—Estoppel—Representation contained in certificate—Measure of damages.—P., being the owner of certain shares in the defendant company, executed a blank transfer thereof, and, having procured a certification from the secretary of the company, deposited the transfer so certified with the plaintiffs as security for an advance of £250. P. then sold the same shares to M. and B., and they were registered as owners. Subsequently the plaintiffs, having executed their transfer, sent it to the company for registration, and received a certificate in the usual form. They then contracted to sell the shares on the Stock Exchange, the market price being £426, and, having repaid themselves the sum owing to them from P., handed over to him the balance of the purchase-money. The company refused to recognize the plaintiffs' purchasers, on the ground that the plaintiffs never had a good title to the shares. The plaintiffs, being bound to carry out their contract with their purchasers, bought other shares, the market price then being £717.

Held, that the company, having given the plaintiffs a certificate, were estopped from denying the plaintiffs' title; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the company the sum of £717.—Tomkinson v. Balkis Consolidated Co., C.A. 693—60 L. J. Q. B. 558; 64 L. T. 816.

26. Transfer — Sale of shares — Certification of transfer—Want of title of transferor—Ultra vires act—Estoppel—Representation as to credit and ability—Lord Tenterden's Act (9 Geo. 4, c. 14), s. 6.—A., who was a shareholder in the defendant company, sold his shares, and the purchaser was entered on the register as the owner of the shares. Subsequently A. purported to transfer some of these shares to another person, from whom the plaintiffs bought them. Before the transfer was executed by the plaintiffs or the price paid, the transfer form was taken to the defendants' office, and the defendants' secretary wrote upon it the words "certificate lodged." No certificate had in fact been lodged. The plaintiffs, relying upon this "certification," paid the price of the shares. The defendants subsequently discovered that the transferor had no title to the shares, and refused to recognize the plaintiffs' title. The plaintiffs then brought an action to recover the value of the shares.

Held, that the "certification" amounted to a representation that the transferor had produced to the person certifying such documents as on the face of them showed a primâ facie title in the transferor to transfer the shares, but did not amount to a warranty of the title of the transferor to the shares; that the giving of the "certification" by the secretary of the company was not ultrà vires, and, though the company were estopped from denying the truth of the facts certified, they were not estopped from denying the title of the transferor to transfer the shares; and that, as the company could not be held liable for a mere careless misrepresentation, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover.

Held, further, that the "certification" was not a representation as to the credit and ability of the transferor within section 6 of Lord Tenterden's Act.

Judgment of Vaughan Williams, J. (38 W. R. 750, 25 Q. B. D. 77), affirmed, but not for the reasons given in his judgment.—Bishop v. Balkis Consolidated Co., C.A. 99—25 Q. B. D. 512; 59 L. J. Q. B. 565; 63 L. T. 601.

WINDING UP—

27. Arrangement with creditors—Sanction of court—Debenture-holders—Scheme depriving creditors of their security—Joint-Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 104), s. 2.—The power given by the Joint-Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870, s. 2, to sanction a scheme of arrangement between a company in liquidation and its creditors extends to debenture-holders and other secured creditors, and enables the court to sanction a scheme, although it deprives debenture-holders of their security wholly or in part.

In re Empire Mining Co., 44 Ch. D. 402, approved.

In exercising the power of sanctioning a scheme of arrangement conferred on it by the Act, the court will not only ascertain that all the statutory conditions have been complied with, but will also consider whether the class of creditors summoned to the meeting was fairly represented by those who attended, and whether the statutory majority who approved of the scheme were acting bonâ fide, or were seeking to promote interests adverse to those of the class whom they professed to represent, and generally whether the arrangement is such as a man of business would reasonably approve.

The decision of North, J., affirmed. — In re Alabama, New Orleans, Texas, and Pacific Junction Railway Co., C.A.—[1891] 1 Ch. 213; 60 L. J. Ch. 221; 64 L. T. 127.

28. Compulsory order — Right of creditor to — Voluntary winding up—Second petition, with notice of first—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 145—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63).—The fact that, under the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, the court has larger powers than formerly in a compulsory winding up, has not the effect of entitling a creditor to a compulsory order which he would not have been entitled to before the Act, unless he can show that his rights will be prejudiced by a voluntary winding up; but if a case for investigation is made out, it constitutes a stronger reason than existed before the Act for a compulsory order.—In re Russell, Cordner, & Co., CH.D. NOR., J. 635.

29. Compulsory order—Supervision order—Discretion of the court—Companies Act, 1862, s. 145.—A petition was presented by creditors to wind up the company compulsorily. Previously to the presentation of the petition, an order was made in a debenture-holder's action for the appointment of a receiver and manager of the company's undertaking and property. The debentures comprised the whole of the assets of the company, including the uncalled capital. After the presentation of the petition the company passed resolutions for a voluntary winding up. The company now asked for a supervision order.

Held, that, as the petitioners would not be prejudiced within the meaning of section 145 of the Companies Act, 1862, there must be an order that the voluntary winding up of the company should be continued under the supervision of the court.—In re The Electrical Engineering Co. (Limited), CH.D. KEK., J.—64 L. T. 658.

30. Contributory—Certificate—Application to remove name—Time—Companies Act, 1862, s. 124—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 55, r. 70.—There is no definite limit of time within which an application must be made to remove a name from the list of contributories settled by a certificate in the winding up of a company. Neither section 124 of the Companies Act, 1862, nor ord. 55, r. 70, definitely limit the time in such a case. Therefore, where no injury has been caused by the delay, an application may be made after the expiration of twenty-one days from the making of the certificate.—In re Liverpool Household Stores Association, Ex parte Weld-Blundell, CH.D. KEK., J.—63 L. T. 383.

31. Contributory — Paid-up shares — Payment in cash—Contributory—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.—Shares which have been allotted to, and accepted by, a creditor of a company as fully paid up, in consideration of the extinguishment of the company's debt, cannot, in the liquidation of the company, be treated as having been paid for "in cash" within the meaning of section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, as expounded by Spargo's case, 21 W. R. 306, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 407, because a contract to take fully paid-up shares creates no liability to pay money, and consequently the transaction cannot amount to an extinguishment of existing cross-debts of the company and the allottee. —In re Johannesburg Hotel Co., Ex parte Zoutpansberg Prospecting Co., C.A. 260—[1891] 1 Ch. 119; 60 L. J. Ch. 391; 64 L. T. 61.

32. Contributory—Allotment of shares made without authority—Sham transaction to deceive the public —Companies Act, 1862, s. 23.—Directors of a company arranged among themselves to enter on the register as allottees of shares the names of persons handed in by the directors, in order to make it appear that a number of shares in fact unallotted had been allotted, so as to induce the public to apply for shares. In pursuance of this arrangement A., a director, sent to the company a form of application for 200 shares, purporting to be an application by A.'s son, and signed in the son's name by A., but in fact without the son's knowledge or authority. The 200 shares were accordingly registered in the son's name, but no certificates were ever issued, and no application or allotment money ever paid, nor any call ever made or dividend paid on the shares. The son never at any time ratified A.'s act, nor in any way held himself out as the holder of the shares.

The company went into liquidation, and then A., and subsequently the son, died. After the son's death the liquidator placed the names of A.'s executors on the list of contributories in respect of the 200 shares.

Held (reversing the decision of Kay, J.), that, upon the facts as above stated, no contract to take shares, either for himself or his son, had ever been entered into between A. and the company, and, therefore, that A.'s executors could not be placed on the list of contributories.

Pugh's case, L. R. 13 Eq. 566, 20 W. R. Ch. Dig. 45, and Cox's case, 12 W. R. 92, 4 De G. J. & S. 53, distinguished.—In re Britannia Fire Association, Coventry's case, C.A. 328—[1891] 1 Ch. 202; 60 L. J. Ch. 186; 64 L. T. 185.

33. Contributory—Calls—Balance order—Action to enforce—Action for debt in respect of calls—Merger of debt in order—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 101, 102, 120.—By a balance order made in the winding up of a company, a contributory was ordered to pay to the liquidator the amount of calls made previous to the winding up. The liquidator was unable to serve the balance order upon the contributory, who was out of the jurisdiction, and brought an action in the name of the company for the amount of the calls.

Held, that the original obligation of the contributory to pay the calls was not merged in the balance order, and that the action was maintainable.

Chalk, Webb, & Co. v. Tennent, 36 W. R. 263, discussed.—Westmoreland Green and Blue Slate Co. v. Feilden, CH.D. KEK., J. 379—60 L. J. Ch. 301; 64 L. T. 286.

34. Contributory—Calls—Agreement to pay unpaid capital at future dates—Right of liquidator to immediate call of whole sum—"Liability"—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 7, 102.—By an agreement made on the reconstruction of a company it was provided that the new company should allot to the shareholders shares in proportion to their paid-up capital in the old company, and that the sums remaining unpaid on such new shares should be paid to the new company on certain fixed dates, the last two of which had not yet arrived. The agreement was confirmed, and, in response to a circular by the new company inviting applications for shares on the terms of the agreement, the respondents applied for and received allotments of shares. In the memorandum of association of the new company it was stated that one of the objects of the company was to carry out the agreement; it was adopted by and scheduled in full to the articles. The new company was now being wound up compulsorily, and the liquidator applied for an order for the immediate payment of all the unpaid instalments.

Held, that the contract had been superseded by the statutory rights of the liquidator, and that he was entitled to an immediate call.—In re Cordova Union Gold Co. (Limited), CH.D. KEK., J. 536—[1891] 2 Ch. 580; 64 L. T. 772.

35. Contributory—Director—Qualification shares—Allotment notice—Agreement to take shares—Acquisition within reasonable time.—I. became a director, on the 25th of October, 1888, of a company, the articles of association of which provided that a director's qualification should be forty shares. On the same day forty shares were, without his knowledge, allotted to him, and his name placed on the register. He first acted as a director on the 24th of November, 1888, and acted again on the 16th of January and the 18th of January, 1889. On the 19th of January, 1889, he himself acquired forty fully paid-up shares, which were duly registered in his name. I. retired from the directorship on the 28th of January, 1889, and the company was, in the same year, ordered to be wound up, whereupon I. first discovered that the original forty shares had been allotted to him. He took out a summons to have his name removed from the list of contributories, upon which he had been placed in respect of the original forty shares. North, J., refused to order his name to be removed from the list of contributories.

Held, on appeal, without deciding that the mere circumstance that the original forty shares were standing in I.'s name was notice to him of the fact that the shares had been allotted to him, that I. must be taken to have known that it was his duty to qualify by acquiring forty shares, as required by the articles of association, and that he was bound to qualify within a reasonable time; and that, if a reasonable time had not actually elapsed by the 24th of November, 1888, it certainly had before January, 1889; and, consequently, that I. was not entitled to have his name struck off the list.—In re Portuguese Consolidated Copper Mines (Limited). Ex parte Lord Inchiquin, C.A. 610—60 L. J. Ch. 556; 64 L. T. 841.

36. Debenture-holders—Execution creditor—Sheriff—Mistake in law—Goods seized, but not sold, by sheriff before winding up—Priority of debenture-holders.—Goods consisting of the theatrical properties of a company carrying on the business of a theatre were seized by the sheriff under writs of fi. fa. issued by two judgment creditors of the company. On the day following the seizure a creditor's petition was presented to wind up the company, and a winding up order was subsequently made and a liquidator appointed. Between the date of the presentation of the petition and that of the winding-up order, the sheriff, of his own accord, took the moneys paid by the public at the doors of the theatre, and thereout paid the two execution creditors the amount of their judgment debts. After the winding-up order had been made the sheriff withdrew from possession without selling the goods he had seized, and these goods were taken possession of by the liquidator, and subsequently sold by him. The sheriff, under an order made in the winding up, having been obliged to pay the whole amount of the moneys taken by him at the doors of the theatre to the liquidator, made an application that the liquidator might be ordered to repay the sheriff out of the proceeds of sale of the goods seized by the sheriff, but given up to, and sold by, the liquidator, the sum paid by the sheriff to the two execution creditors. The sheriff's application was opposed by the liquidator, and also by debenture-holders whose debentures constituted a floating charge, payable on demand, on the undertaking and all the property, present and future, of the company.

Held (reversing on this point the decision of Kekewich, J., reported 39 W. R. 398, [1891] 1 Ch. 154), that the goods seized, but not sold, by the sheriff were covered by the debentures, and that the debenture-holders were entitled to be paid out of the moneys in the hands of the liquidator arising from the sale of such goods in priority to the two execution creditors, and therefore in priority to the claim for repayment made by the sheriff.

In re Standard Manufacturing Co., 39 W. R. 368, [1891] 1 Ch. 627, at p. 641, discussed and approved. —In re Opera (Limited), C.A. 705.

37. Debenture-holders — Liquidator — Receiver. — Where a company is being wound up, and an application is made by debenture-holders to appoint a receiver, and another application is made by the creditors in the winding up to appoint a liquidator, the court, in order to avoid trouble and expense, will usually appoint the same person liquidator and receiver.

But, in a case where the only outstanding property of the company consisted of a sum of £180, and the debenture-holders had obtained an order for the appointment of a receiver in a debenture-holders' action previously to the appointment of a liquidator in the winding up,

The Court of Appeal (Lindley and Kay, L.JJ.) (affirming the decision of Kekewich, J., 39 W. R. 200) refused to appoint the liquidator receiver, in the place of the receiver already appointed in the debenture-holders' action.

In re Henry Pound, Son, & Hutchins, 38 W. R. 18, 42 Ch. D. 402, distinguished.—In re Stubbs & Co., Barney and Birmingham Banking Co. v. Stubbs & Co., C.A. 617—[1891] 1 Ch. 475; 60 L. J. Ch. 190; 64 L. T. 306.

See also COMPANY (BORROWING POWERS), 1, 2.

38. Estate of deceased director—Misfeasance—Payment of dividend out of capital—Delay—Stale demand.—The articles of association of a limited company provided (1) that interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum should be payable half-yearly on all money paid on the shares until otherwise determined by the directors, and (2) that no dividend or bonus should be payable except out of the profits arising from the business of the company, including the income arising from paid-up capital. No profits were ever earned by the company From 1869 to 1878, when the Board of Trade interfered, the directors made half-yearly payments of interest or dividend at the rate of five per cent. per annum on the amount of shares paid up. These payments, which amounted to £4,500, were made out of capital. The company was ordered to be wound up in 1886. This action was commenced in 1890 against the representatives of two deceased directors. Certain moneys were recovered from the estate of one of the deceased directors under a compromise effected with the sanction of the court. Certain moneys had been also recovered from the surviving directors.

Held, that the payments were made by way of dividend, and that the estate of a deceased director was liable to the liquidator for so much of the £4,500, with interest at four per cent., as had not been already recovered.

Held, that the delay was not such as to disentitle the liquidator to succeed.—In re Sharpe, In re Bennett, Masonic and General Life Assurance Co. (Limited) v. Sharpe and Others, CH.D. NOR., J. 636.

39. Liquidator, to what extent trustee—Voluntary winding up—Companies Act, 1862, s. 138.—A liquidator in a voluntary winding up is an agent of the company, but not, strictly speaking, a trustee for, nor liable as such to, the creditors or contributories; and an action for damages will not lie against him for delay in handing over to a contributory his proportion of the surplus assets of the company, unless fraud, mala fides, or personal misconduct can be proved against him.

Dicta of Lord Selborne, L.C., in Black & Co.'s case, 21 W. R. 249, L. R. 8 Ch. 254; of James and Mellish, L.JJ., in In re Oriental Inland Steam Co., 22 W. R. 810, L. R. 9 Ch. 557; and of James, L.J., in In re London and Caledonian Marine Insurance Co., 27 W. R. 713, 11 Ch. D. 140 explained.—Knowles v. Scott, CH.D. ROM., J. 523—[1891] 1 Ch. 717; 60 L. J. Ch. 284; 64 L. T. 135.

40. Liquidator—Voluntary winding up—Committee of inspection—Creditors—Restrictions imposed on voluntary liquidator—Companies Act, 1862, ss. 95, 96, 133 (sub-section 7), 149, 151—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, ss. 6, 9, 12.—The court may impose the same restrictions upon a voluntary liquidator as a liquidator in a compulsory winding up would be subject to, and also dispense with restrictions imposed upon a liquidator in a compulsory winding up.

The Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, can be made use of by the court, by way of analogy, for the purpose of placing restrictions upon a voluntary liquidator's powers.

Form of order continuing a voluntary winding up under supervision, subject to the control of a committee of inspection.—In re Watson & Sons (Limited), CH.D. CHI., J. 633—[1891] 2 Ch. 55; 60 L. J. Ch. 473.

41. Official receiver — Liquidator — Carrying on business—Manager—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), ss. 5, 12.—A petition was presented by a creditor to wind up the company. The objects for which the company was established included the sale of perishable goods. It was asked that the order might contain a direction that the official receiver might be at liberty to carry on the business as a going concern. There appeared to be no provision for carrying on the business of a company pending applications under sections 5 and 12 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890.

The court made the usual winding-up order, with the addition of a direction that the official receiver should be at liberty, if he thought fit, to carry on the business of the company so far as necessary for the purposes of the winding up.—In re General Service Co-operative Stores (Limited), CH.D. KEK., J.—64 L. T. 228.

42. Order for dissolution — Action by creditors against late directors—Fraud—Companies Act, 1862, s. 111.—After a company has been completely wound up, and an order for dissolution of the company obtained, a creditor, in the absence of fraud, has no cause of action against the late directors to recover assets alleged not to have been got in pending the winding up.—Coxon v. Gorst, CH.D. CHI., J. 600—[1891] 2 Ch. 73; 60 L. J. Ch. 502; 64 L. T. 444.

43. Petition—Voluntary winding up—Petition for supervision order—Amendment of petition by adding prayer for compulsory order—Advertisement—Companies Act, 1862, General Order, November, 1862, r. 2, Schedule 3, Form 1—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, General Rules, 33, 34.—Resolutions were passed to wind up the company voluntarily, appointing a liquidator, and to apply to the court for a supervision order. A petition was presented by a shareholder and the liquidator asking for an order continuing the voluntary winding up subject to the supervision of the court. The petition was subsequently amended by adding a statement that difficulties had arisen, and a prayer, in the alternative, for a compulsory winding-up order.

Held, that the petition must be readvertised.—In re National Wholemeal Bread and Biscuit Co., CH.D. KEK., J. 380—[1891] 2 Ch. 151; 60 L. J. Ch. 350; 64 L. T. 285.

44. Proof—Wrongful forfeiture of shares—Claim to prove for damages—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 38, sub-section 7.—A shareholder, whose shares had been irregularly forfeited, claimed to prove in the winding up of the company for damages for the loss of his rights as a member.

Held, that section 38, sub-section 7, of the Companies Act, 1862, did not apply to preclude the shareholder from proving in competition with the other creditors, as this sum was not due to him "in his character of a member," but rather in his character of a non-member; and his claim must be admitted by the liquidator.

Whether sub-section 7 of section 38 applies to a past member, quære.—In re New Chile Gold Mining Co. (Limited), CH.D. STI., J. 59—45 Ch. D. 598; 60 L. J. Ch. 90; 63 L. T. 344.

44a. Purchase of shares after date of order—Order for compulsory winding up—Right of purchaser to be placed on list of members—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 35, 98, 153.—A person who purchases shares in a company after an order has been made by the court for the compulsory winding up of the company is not entitled, under section 35 of the Companies Act, 1862, to be placed on the register of members of the company, as section 35 is not applicable to transfers after the date of a winding-up order made by the court.—In re Onward Building Society, Q.B.D. 718—[1891] 2 Q. B. 463.

45. Rent—Sequestration for rent by Scotch landlord—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 87, 163.—An English company leased a shop in Scotland from a Scotch landlord, but, before the first quarter's rent was payable, an order to wind up the company was made and a liquidator appointed, who took possession of the shop. The Scotch landlord thereupon, without obtaining the leave of the court under section 87 of the Companies Act, 1862, took proceedings for a sequestration to secure the payment of the rent of the shop.

Held, on the motion of the liquidator, that the sequestration was void by virtue of section 163 of the Companies Act, 1862; but the court gave leave to the landlord, under section 87 of that Act, to enforce his hypothec for the rent by proceeding with the sequestration, unless security was given for payment thereof, on the terms of paying the costs of the motion.—In re Wanzer (Limited), CH.D. NORTH, J. 343—[1891] 1 Ch. 305; 60 L. J. Ch. 492.

46. Staying actions against company—Companies Act, 1862, s. 85—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 24, sub-section 5—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63)—General Order of the 29th of November, 1890.—When a petition has been presented in the Chancery Division to wind up a company, an application to stay an action against the company in the Queen's Bench Division must still be made in the division in which the action is pending, the practice in this respect not being altered by the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, and the General Order under it.

Decision of Kekewich, J., affirmed.—In re General Service Co-operative Stores, C.A.—[1891] 1 Ch. 496; 60 L. J. Ch. 586; 64 L. T. 272.

47. Surplus assets—Shares fully paid up—Shares issued at a discount—Mode of distribution of surplus.—The original shares in a limited company incorporated in 1859 were shares of £10 each, on which the whole amount had been paid up. In 1861 a special resolution was passed by the company, whereby the capital of the company was increased by the issue of a number of additional shares of £10 at a discount of £7 per share. The company continued to carry on business until 1889, when it was wound up voluntarily. After payment of all creditors a large surplus remained for distribution among the contributories.

Held (affirming the decision of North, J., reported 39 W. R. 5), that the holders of the fully paid-up original shares should first receive out of the surplus a sum of £7 per share, and that the balance of the surplus should then be divided equally among the holders of the original shares and the holders of the additional shares alike.

In re Hodge's Distillery Co., Ex parte Maude. 19 W. R. 113, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 51, approved.—In re Weymouth and Channel Islands Steam Packet Co., C.A. 49—[1891] 1 Ch. 66; 60 L. J. Ch. 93; 63 L. T. 686.

48. Surplus assets—Contributories, rights of, inter se—Ordinary and preference shareholders—Reserve funds—Profits—Undrawn profits—Capitalization—Capital—Income—Valuation.—The articles of association of a canal company formed under the Companies Acts authorized the company by resolution to increase its capital, but, save as specified in any such resolution, all new capital was to be subject to the same provisions as the original capital; and the articles also provided that the directors might, in priority to any dividend, set aside out of "profits" any sum as a "reserve fund" for certain specified purposes, or "any other contingencies or purposes of the company," and might invest the same; that any interest derived from such investment should be dealt with as profits; and that, subject thereto, "the entire net profits of each year" should belong to the shareholders. Subsequently the company increased its capital by the issue of new shares carrying a preferential dividend. Year by year part of the profits of the company's business was carried to three reserved funds to meet (a) depreciation of steamers, (b) insurance, and (c) canal improvements; and the remaining profits, after providing for the preferential dividend, were distributed among the ordinary shareholders. These reserve funds were not represented by any separate or specific investments, but were merely book-keeping entries represented in the company's balance-sheets by property of various kinds.

The company's undertaking was eventually sold by special Act of Parliament at a price which left a surplus in excess of the liabilities of the company and the capital paid up on the ordinary and preference shares. The sale was completed during the currency of a financial year. On the completion of the sale the company passed resolutions for a voluntary winding up. It had never been found necessary to resort to any of the reserve funds while the company was a going concern, and part of them had been in fact divided among the ordinary shareholders in the form of a bonus; and at the date of the sale three funds representing these reserve funds were still standing in the company's books.

Held (varying order of North J.), that all three reserve funds represented undrawn "profits," uncapitalized, and to be therefore treated as income to which, subject to the preferential dividend for the broken financial year, the ordinary shareholders were exclusively entitled, and not as "capital" or "assets" distributable among both the ordinary and the preference shareholders; also that in taking the accounts for the broken year, the value of the plant and book debts should be taken at the actual ascertained values as stated in the stock books, and not at the lower value at which the company had, according to their regular custom and from motives of prudence, estimated them in a previous annual balance-sheet on which a dividend had been declared; and that the difference between the two values represented undrawn profits to which, subject to preferential dividend, the ordinary shareholders were exclusively entitled.

The question as to when undrawn profits can be treated as capital discussed.

Bouch v. Sproule, 12 App. Cas. 385, considered.—In re Bridgewater Navigation Co., C.A.—[1891] 2 Ch. 317; 60 L. J. Ch. 415; 64 L. T. 576.

49. Transfer to new company—Dissentient shareholder.—A shareholder in a company which had by special resolution resolved that the company should be wound up and its assets transferred to a new company to be formed, had notice of resolutions which gave her the option of exchanging within a limited time her shares for shares in the new company at a fixed rate. She also had notice of an agreement between the liquidator of the old company and new company, in which no date was fixed for exercising the option, and of a deed-poll by which the new company covenanted to perform the agreement. She did not exercise the option, and protested against the proposed arrangement, and took proceedings unsuccessfully to prevent it from being carried out. Some months afterwards, when the shares in the new company had risen considerably in value, she applied for an allotment of shares, and, on being refused, brought the present action claiming an allotment of shares or damages.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below) that the action could not be maintained.—Weston v. New Guston Co., H.L. (E.)—64 L. T. 815.

See also BILL OF SALE, 4; BUILDING SOCIETY, 4; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1; COUNTY COURT, 11; TENANT FOR LIFE AND REMAINDERMAN, 1, 2.

CONFIRMATION of SALES ACT.—See TRUSTEE, 5.

CONFLICT of LAWS:—

1. Company — Winding up — Uncalled capital—Debenture — Scotch arrestment — Priority—Notice.—The Queensland Mercantile and Agency Co. issued debentures to the Union Bank of Australia charging the uncalled capital in respect of some of its shares. After call, but prior to payment, the Australasian Investment Co. obtained in Scotland an arrestment on the unpaid calls of shareholders resident in Scotland. Such shareholders had no notice of the debentures.

Evidence was given that a Scotch arrestment was equivalent to an assignment with notice, and had priority to an assignment without notice.

The Queensland Co. was being wound up in Queensland and England, the law in both countries being the same.

Held, that the Australasian Investment Co. had priority, as Scotch law regulated priority on the proceeds of Scotch shares.—In re Queensland Mercantile and Agency Co., Ex parte Australasian Investment Co., Ex parte Union Bank of Australia, CH.D. NOR., J. 447—[1891] 1 Ch. 536; 60 L. J. Ch. 579.

2. Foreign bankruptcy—Discharge by—Contract—Stay of proceedings—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 24, sub-section 5; s. 39.—A party to a contract made and to be performed in England is not discharged from liability under such contract by a discharge in bankruptcy or liquidation under the law of a foreign country in which he is domiciled.—Gibbs & Sons v. Société des Metaux, C.A.—25 Q. B. D. 399; 63 L. T. 503.

3. Power of attorney—Construction.—Where an authority is given in a foreign country to an agent to transact business for his principal in other countries, it must be construed, in the absence of any evidence of a contrary intention, according to the law of the place where the business is to be transacted.—Chatenay v. Brazilian Submarine Telegraph Co., C.A. 65—[1891] 1 Q. B. 79; 60 L. J. Q. B. 295; 63 L. T. 739.

4. Ship—Port of distress—Sale of cargo—Law of the flag.—The plaintiffs, who were British subjects, shipped pepper at Singapore on board the German ship August, to be carried with other cargo to London. The ship met with bad weather, and was obliged to put into Cape Town, the ship and portions of her cargo having sustained damage. The master, acting on advice of surveyors, sold a portion of the plaintiffs' pepper with other cargo. In an action for breach of contract and for conversion, Held, that the conduct of the master, in selling the pepper in question, was to be determined by German law, that being the law of the flag.—The August, P.D. & A.D.—60 L. J. P. D. & A. 57.

CONSPIRACY and PROTECTION of PROPERTY ACT, 1875.—See MASTER AND SERVANT, 2.

CONTEMPT of COURT:—

Newspaper comments—Pending proceedings—Motion to commit.—A paragraph inserted in a newspaper commenting on a case pending before the court, and foretelling the result of the case, is a contempt of court.—Ex parte Crown Bank, In re O'Malley, CH.D. NOR., J. 45—44 Ch. D. 649; 59 L. J. Ch. 767; 63 L. T. 304.

CONTRACT:—

1. Joint contract—Judgment recovered against one co-contractor—Setting aside judgment and adding co-contractor as defendant—Res judicata.—The plaintiffs, a firm of printers, sued the defendant for the cost of printing for him a certain newspaper of which they supposed him to be the sole proprietor. There being no defence to the action, the defendant consented to final judgment being signed against him. After judgment had been so signed, the plaintiffs received information that at the time the work was done one T. was a partner of the defendant, and joint proprietor with him of the newspaper. They accordingly, with the consent of the defendant, applied for an order that the judgment should be set aside, and that the writ should be amended by adding T. as a defendant in the action.

Held, that the consent of the defendant to the setting aside of the judgment could not enable the plaintiff to evade the rule that judgment recovered against one of two joint contractors is a bar to an action against the other, and that there was consequently no jurisdiction to make the order.—Hammond v. Schofield, Q.B.D.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 453; 60 L. J. Q. B. 539.

2. Joint contract—Separate liability—Res judicata.—The rule in Kendall v. Hamilton, 28 W. R. 97, 4 App. Cas. 504, that a judgment (althouh unsatisfied) against one of two joint contractors for breach of the contract is a bar to a subsequent action for the same breach against the other joint contractor, applies where that other is a married woman, and therefore bound only as to her separate estate.—Hoare v. Niblett, Q.B.D. 491—[1891] 1 Q. B. 781; 60 L. J. Q. B. 565; 64 L. T. 659.

3. Personal service—No negative covenant—Specific performance—Injunction.—An agreement entered into by H. to act as manager to the W. Chemical Co. for a term of years provided that he should "give the whole of his time to the company's business," but contained no negative covenant by him.

H. intimated to the company his intention of forming and becoming director of a rival company in the immediate neighbourhood, though still willing to act as manager of the original company, who now applied for an injunction to restrain H. from committing any breach of his agreement to give the whole of his time to them.

Held (reversing Kekewich, J.), that, the contract being one for personal service, of which specific performance would not have been granted, and there being no express negative covenant by the defendant, no injunction could be granted.—Whitwood Chemical Co. v. Hardman, C.A. 433—[1891] 2 Ch. 416; 60 L. J. Ch. 428; 64 L. T. 716.

4. Tramway company—Conductor—Forfeiture of wages—Certificate of company's manager.—The plaintiff became a conductor of the defendant company under a written agreement on the terms, amongst others, that, for a breach by him of the rules of the company, the company's manager might decide that wages owing to him might be retained by the company as liquidated damages for the breach, and that the manager's certificate in writing to that effect should be binding and conclusive evidence between the company and the conductor in all courts of justice. The plaintiff, having been dismissed by the manager for a breach of the rules, brought an action to recover the wages due to him. After the action was brought the manager, without hearing anything that the plaintiff might wish to say, signed a certificate which declared the wages then due to the plaintiff to be forfeited to the company.

Held, that the certificate was no defence to the action, as the manager had not given the plaintiff an opportunity of being heard on the question of forfeiture.—Armstrong v. The South London Tramways Co. (Limited), C.A.—64 L. T. 96.

5. Validity — Illegal consideration — Stifling a prosecution.—The secretary of a building society who had made default and was threatened by the society with a prosecution for embezzlement applied for assistance to the plaintiffs, and they gave a written undertaking to the society to make good the greater part of the debt due from the secretary, the expressed consideration being the forbearance of the society to sue the secretary for the amount, for which the plaintiffs made themselves responsible, and in pursuance of that undertaking they gave two promissory notes to the society. The plaintiffs in giving the undertaking were actuated by the desire to prevent the prosecution, and this was known to the directors of the society.

Held, that it was an implied term of the agreement that there should be no prosecution, that the agreement was founded on an illegal consideration and void, and that the promissory notes ought to be set aside.

Ward v. Lloyd, 6 Man. & G. 785, and Flower v. Sadler, 10 Q. B. D. 572, explained and distinguished. — Jones v. Merionethshire Permanent Benefit Building Society—[1891] 2 Ch. 587; 60 L. J. Ch. 564.

See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, 1; RESTRAINT OF TRADE, 1, 2, 3.

CONVERSION:—

Petition by tenant in common for sale—Order for sale—Landed Estates Court (Ireland) Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 72), s. 64.—One of several tenants in common of an unincumbered estate, who had presented a petition as owners and obtained an order for sale, died intestate before sale. Part was afterwards sold, and part remained unsold.

Held, that the order for sale operated as a conversion into personalty of the share of the deceased in the estate.—In re Beamish's Estate, L.J. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 326.

See also WILL, 8.

CONVEYANCING ACT, 1881.—See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 2, 8, 9; MARRIED WOMAN, 7.

COPYHOLDS:—

Enfranchisement — Fishing, right of — Common, right of—Right appurtenant—Profit à prendre—Custom—Prescription—Interruption—Acquiescence—Extinguishment—"Owners and occupiers"—Indefinite class—Right of action—Legal origin—Lost grant—Presumed grant—River—Soil ad medium filum—Grant—2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, ss. 1, 4, 6.—The practice in a manor was for the lords to grant copyholds for three lives, and to renew at a fine upon the dropping of any of the lives; but there was no custom binding them to renew. The copyhold grants did not mention a right of fishing; but from time immemorial the copyholders had enjoyed a right of angling in a stream which formed the boundary of the manor, and of passing along the bank over the lands of other tenants of the manor for that purpose. Subject to this the right of fishing was in the lords. In 1845 the lords enfranchised a copyhold belonging to S., which adjoined the river, and released in the most ample terms all rights of fishing and all other rights they had over the enfranchised tenement. After this various other copyholds were enfranchised, and for nearly forty years the copyholders and the enfranchised copyholders exercised the same right as before of angling and going over the land of S. for that purpose. T. was the owner of several tenements formerly copyhold of the manor, which had been enfranchised since 1845. In 1885 S. set up a gate which prevented T. from passing over his land to fish. T. acquiesced in the interruption until 1888, when he commenced an action, on behalf of himself and all other the owners and occupiers of copyholds or enfranchised copyholds, to establish the right of angling and of passing over the land of S. for that purpose.

Held (affirming Kay, J.), that by the enfranchisement deed of 1845 the lords gave up all their rights over the land of S., and that no reservation or exception of a power to make to other tenants grants giving rights over that land could be implied, as there was no obligation on the lords to make such grants; that the rights given up included the reversionary right of the lords to grant rights of fishing on the expiration of the lives for which the copyholds were held; that the lords, therefore, had no power to give to T. by his subsequent enfranchisement deeds any rights over the land of S. and that T. had no title to maintain the action; also that lost grants of the rights to the enfranchised copyholders could not be presumed.

Held, also, per Kay, J., that the interruption of T.'s alleged right, acquiesced in by him, for five years before action brought, was a bar to that right under section 4 of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71; and that such right, being in the nature of a profit à prendre, could not be claimed by prescription on behalf of a large and indefinite class such as "owners and occupiers."

Where a privilege has been exercised as of right for a long series of years, the court will make every presumption in favour of its legal origin, but the circumstances of the enjoyment must be carefully looked to; and as in the present case they were copyholders whose right of way and of fishing was not disputed, the court considered the case not to stand on the same footing as if the persons exercising the privilege formed only one class.

Per Kay, J.: The general law of conveyancing—that, where a riparian owner, who is also owner of the soil under the river ad medium filum, makes a grant of his land on the banks of the river, the soil ad medium filum passes by the grant—applies to land of any tenure, whether freehold, copyhold, or leasehold.

Goodman v. Mayor of Saltash, 7 App. Cas. 633, as to presuming legal origin for an immemorial usage, distinguished by Kay, J.—Tilbury v. Silva, C.A.—45 Ch. D. 98; 63 L. T. 141.

COPYRIGHT:—

1. "Book" — "Sheet of letterpress" — Painted card — Proprietorship — Registration — Evidence — Certificate of registration — Injunction — Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), ss. 2, 11—Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68).—A motion was made by the plaintiffs to restrain the infringement of their copyright in a certain picture or publication which consisted of a gloved hand painted on a card cut to the exact size, and showing the back and palm of the hand. The card opened bookwise, and on the inside was represented on the palm of the hand the lines of life of palmistry, and on the back of the hand some verses. The picture had been painted, and the verses written by different persons. The entire work was published in May, 1889, for circulation as a Christmas card. It was registered in February, 1891, under the Copyright Acts, 1842 (books) and 1862 (works of art). The artist had assigned her interest to the plaintiffs, but it did not appear that there had been any assignment of the copyright in the verses. The certificates of registration were in the prescribed form, and in the one case gave as the title of the book "The Happy Hand," and the plaintiffs as publishers, and in the other, as a description of the work, "painting of the happy hand, hand marked with lines delineating character," stated the assignment, and gave the plaintiffs as proprietors of the copyright. The defendants had issued a similar card with advertisements of their goods printed on it.

Held, that the defendants' card was a copy of the plaintiffs'; that the plaintiffs' work was well registered under the Act of 1842 as a "sheet of letterpress," and under the Act of 1862 as a painting; and that the certificates of registration were primâ facie proof that the plaintiffs were proprietors.

Held, therefore, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an interim injunction to restrain the defendants from printing, publishing, or distributing imitations or copies of the plaintiffs' "work" until the trial or further order, the word "work" being used to avoid prejudicing the questions at issue.

Semble, that where a person has composed verses or other matter on behalf of another person—that is to say, as his agent or his servant—whether for pay or not, the person on whose behalf such verses or other matter are composed is properly registered under the Copyright Act, 1842, as the proprietor thereof, notwithstanding that there has been no assignment in writing, or indeed any assignment at all.—Hildesheimer & Faulkner v. Dunn & Co., CH.D. KEK., J.—64 L. T. 452.

2. Dramatic piece—Dramatizing a novel—Representation without consent of proprietor—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, ss. 1, 2—5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, ss. 20, 21, 24.—An action was brought by the executors of A. to restrain the defendant from representing a certain drama in infringement of the plaintiff's stage copyright. A. had first published a novel and afterwards had published a dramatized version of his own novel. The defendant's drama was dramatized directly from the novel, after the publication of the dramatized version by A., but not with the help of it.

Held, that A. having published the novel before the drama, any person had a right to dramatize the novel and represent the drama; and that therefore the action failed.

Toole v. Young, 30 L. T. N. S. 599, L. R. 9 Q. B. 523, followed.—Schlesinger v. Bedford, CH.D. KEK., J.—63 L. T. 762.

3. Dramatic piece—Dramatizing a novel—Representation without consent of proprietor—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, ss. 1, 2—5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, ss. 20, 21, 24.—An action was brought by the executors of A. to restrain the defendant from representing a certain drama in infringement of the plaintiffs' stage copyright. A. had first published a drama and afterwards a novel founded on it. The defendant's drama was dramatized directly from the novel, and not with the help of A.'s drama.

Held, that, A. having published the drama before the novel, no person had a right to infringe the stage copyright in the drama, even though the passages complained of were taken from the novel, and not from the drama of the author.

Held, therefore, that the plaintiffs were entitled to a perpetual injunction as claimed.

Reade v. Conquest, 11 C. B. N. S. 479, followed.

Toole v. Young, 30 L. T. N. S. 599, L. R. 9 Q. B. 523, distinguished.—Schlesinger v. Turner, CH.D. KEK., J.—63 L. T. 764.

4. International copyright—Musical composition—Foreign copyright—Protection in United Kingdom—"Subsisting and valuable rights or interests arising from or in connection with" the prior "lawful production" of foreign compositions in the United Kingdom—International Copyright Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 33), ss. 6, 11—Order in Council of the 6th of December, 1887.—A bandmaster who has purchased and lawfully produced in England, by means of his band, a piece of music by a foreign composer, before the date of the Order in Council making the International Copyright Act, 1886, applicable to England, has acquired a subsisting and valuable right or interest in the production within the meaning of the proviso in section 6 of that Act, and cannot be restrained by the proprietors of the foreign composition from the further production of it.—Moul and Another v. Groenings, C.A. 691—[1891] 2 Q. B. 443.

5. International copyright—Foreign painting—English copyright—Registration—Right to sue for infringement—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45)—International Copyright Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 12)—Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68)—International Copyright Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 33)—Berne Convention—Order in Council, Nov. 28, 1887.—In order to entitle the owner of the English copyright in a foreign painting to sue in this country in respect of an infringement of such copyright, it is not necessary for him to have registered his ownership under the International Copyright Acts, but he must have previously registered himself as proprietor of the copyright under section 4 of the Copyright Act, 1862.—Fishburn v. Hollingshead, CH.D. STI., J.—[1891] 2 Ch. 371; 64 L. T. 647.

6. Report of mining engineer—Publication—Injunction—Damages.—A mining engineer, K., made a report upon a mining property and handed it to a person engaged with a syndicate in bringing out a company. It was agreed between them that the report might be printed and shown to the syndicate, and, if they determined to proceed with the formation of the company and published the report, K. was to be paid £1,000 for it, but if the company was not proceeded with, the report was to be returned to him. Some 100 copies of the report were printed and shown to the syndicate. Copies were given to some of the members of the syndicate and to one or two other persons. The proposed company having been abandoned, the defendant company took up the property, and, having obtained a copy of the report, made use of it in the prospectus issued by them.

Held, that K. was entitled to an injunction against the company to restrain them from publishing the report, which remained his property, and also to an inquiry as to damages.—Kenrick v. Danube Collieries and Minerals Co., CH.D. ROM., J. 473.

See PRACTICE, 15, 16.

CORONER:—

Salary—Quinquennial period for which salary is fixed—Date from which period runs on appointment of coroner—Division of district—Effect of such division on salary—Appropriate remedy of coroner—Declaration of rights—Statutory mandamus—Prerogative writ of mandamus—The County Coroners Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 116), s. 4.—The quinquennial period of five years, for which a county coroner's salary is fixed under section 4 of the County Coroners Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 116), ends with the coroner's death, and his successor on his election is entitled to have a new settlement or fixing of his salary, and such salary so fixed continues for a period of five years from the time it is so fixed, without reference to the time when it was last fixed for his predecessor, and the coroner is entitled to the salary so fixed for the whole of the term of five years, even although in the meantime the district, to which the coroner was assigned has been, by order of the Privy Council, subdivided, and a new coroner appointed and assigned to a part of that district.

The coroner, however, cannot bring an action against the justices of the county, quâ justices, or any number of them acting for the whole, claiming a declaration of rights that he is entitled to the full salary fixed, or a mandamus to enforce those rights; the action is not such an action wherein, under the Judicature Act or otherwise, a declaration of rights may be made, or a mandamus granted, as a declaration of rights is only made, or a mandamus granted, where the action is such that relief can be given, and the rights claimed enforced, in that action, whereas in a case like the present the only appropriate remedy is the prerogative writ of mandamus to the justices.—Baxter v. London County Council, Q.B.D.—63 L. T. 767.

CORPORATION.—See APPRENTICE, 1; DEFAMATION, 1.

COSTS.—See PRACTICE, 15—22.

See also ADMINISTATION, 1, 2, 6; ADMIRALTY, 2, 3, 4; ARBITRATION, 1, 2; BANKRUPTCY, 14, 15; COUNTY COURT, 5—8; DIVORCE, 15, 16; HIGHWAY, 3; PARTITION ACTION, 1, 2; PRACTICE (IRELAND), 7; PROBATE, 21; SHIP, 36; SOLICITOR, 1—12.

COUNSEL, AUTHORITY of.—See PRACTICE (COMPROMISE), 14.

COUNTY COUNCIL.—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 2—6.

COUNTY COURT:—

1. Admiralty jurisdiction—County court having admiralty jurisdiction—District in which to commence action—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 21—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 51), s. 2.—A claim by a shipowner under the 2nd section of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act. 1869, arising out of an agreement in relation to the use or hire of a ship belonging to him, is properly brought in the county court having admiralty jurisdiction within the district of which such ship happens to be at the date of the commencement of the suit.—The County of Durham, P.D. & A.D. 303—[1891] P. 1; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 5; 64 L. T. 146.

2. Admiralty jurisdiction—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 21, sub-sections (1) (2)—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 74.—By the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 21:—"Proceedings in an admiralty cause shall be commenced (1) In the county court having admiralty jurisdiction within the district of which the vessel or property to which the cause relates is at the commencement of the proceedings; (2) If the foregoing rule be not applicable then in the county court having admiralty jurisdiction in the district of which the owner of the vessel or property to which the cause relates . . . resides."

By the County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 74, "Except where by this Act it is otherwise provided, every action or matter may be commenced in the court within the district of which the defendant . . . shall dwell or carry on his business at the time of commencing the action or matter."

The plaintiffs, owners of a steamship, brought an action in personam on the admiralty side of the county court within the district of which the defendants, charterers of the vessel, and consignees of the cargo, carried on their business, for damage for the detention of the vessel in unloading. The county court judge dismissed the action for want of jurisdiction, on the ground that, as the ship was not at the time of the commencement of the proceedings within the district, nor did the plaintiffs reside there, neither sub-section (1) nor sub-section (2) of section 21 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, had been complied with. On appeal,

Held, that the county court had jurisdiction, as the language of section 74 of the County Courts Act, 1888, was general in its terms, and therefore included defendants in an admiralty action who at the time of commencing the action carried on their business within the district.—The Hero, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 294.

3. Appeal—Notice of motion—Service of—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 59, rr. 10, 12.—Service of notice of motion upon the London agent of a country solicitor, on appeal from a county court, is not sufficient to satisfy ord. 59, r. 12.—Powell v. Thomas, Q.B.D. 224—[1891] 1 Q. B. 97; 63 L. T. 812.

4. Appeal—Extension of time for appealing—Discretion of court—Ord. 59, rr. 12, 16.—Under ord. 59, r. 16, the court has a discretion, which it will exercise on the particular circumstances of each case, to extend the time for appealing from the judgment of a county court.

Collins v. Paddington Vestry, 28 W. R. 588, 5 Q. B. D. 368, explained.—Cusack v. London and North-Western Railway Co., C.A. 244—[1891] 1 Q. B. 347; 60 L. J. Q. B. 208; 64 L. T. 45.

5. Costs—Action in High Court for more than £50—Recovery of less than £20 under order 14—Case remitted—Recovery of less than £50 altogether—

County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 65, 116.—In an action of contract brought in the High Court for more than £50, where less than £20 was recovered in proceedings under order 14, and, on the case being remitted to the county court, less than £50 was recovered altogether,

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to costs on the High Court scale in respect of any of the proceedings that had taken place in the High Court.—Wilson v. Statham, Q.B.D. 686—[1891] 2 Q. B. 261.

6. Costs—Particulars of claim—Signature of particulars by solicitor's clerk—Sufficiency of signature—Ord. 6, r. 10; ord. 27, r. 4 (County Court Rules, 1889)—Scales of Costs, Appendix.—In an interpleader action in a county court the particulars of claim were signed with the name of the claimant's solicitor by the solicitor's clerk, who had general authority to conduct his master's business. Upon an objection taken on the taxation of costs that the particulars ought to have been signed by the solicitor himself, to entitle him to costs under the rules,

Held (distinguishing Reg. v. Cowper, 38 W. R. 408, 24 Q. B. D. 533), that the signature of the solicitor's name by the clerk was a sufficient signature by the solicitor, and that the solicitor was entitled to his costs.—France v. Dutton, Q.B.D. 716—[1891] 2 Q. B. 208; 60 L. J. Q. B. 488; 64 L. T. 793.

7. Costs—Refresher—Adjournment for want of time—Continuous sittings—County Court Rules, 1889, Costs, item 78.—Where a county court is held from day to day, it rests with the judge to say whether the sittings shall be one continuous sitting or a succession of several sittings, so that, when a case which appears in the list is not reached on one day, but is heard in its turn upon another day, a refresher may be allowed by order of the judge as upon an adjournment for want of time under item 78 in the scale of costs of the County Court Rules, 1889.—Heap v. Peart, Q.B.D. 95—[1891] 1 Q. B. 110.

8. Costs—Solicitor and client—Amount claimed over £10—Amount recovered under £10—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 118, 119—County Court Rules, 1889, Appendix.—Where, in an action in a county court, the amount claimed is over £10, but less than £10 is recovered, there is a discretion to allow the taxation of costs, as between solicitor and client, on the higher scale.

Decision of the Queen's Bench Division (39 W. R. 110) reversed.—In re Langlois & Biden, C.A. 181—[1891] 1 Q. B. 349; 60 L. J. Q. B. 123; 63 L. T. 816.

9. Jurisdiction—Validity of patent—Patents Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 117—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 56.—A county court has no jurisdiction to entertain an action in which the validity of a patent is in question.

Decision of the Queen's Bench Division (39 W. R. 492, [1891] 1 Q. B. 793) affirmed.

The effect of the Patents Act, 1883, is to confine the jurisdiction in patent actions to the High Court.—Reg. v. Judge of Halifax County Court and Bairstowe, C.A. 545—[1891] 2 Q. B. 263; 60 L. J. Q. B. 550.

10. Remittal of counter-claim for trial—Discontinuance of action—Power to order trial of counter-claim in county court after discontinuance of action—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 65.—A counter-claim in an action cannot, after the action has been discontinued, be remitted for trial to a county court under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888.—The Queen v. The Judge of the City of London Court, Q.B.D.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 71; 60 L. J. Q. B. 575; 64 L. T. 869.

11. Winding-up petition—Transfer from county court to High Court—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 126.—The High Court has jurisdiction to order the transfer of a winding-up petition from the county court to itself, notwithstanding that the petition has been opened in the county court.—In re East Dulwich No. 295 Starr-Bowkett Building Society, CH.D. NOR., J. 32.

See also BANKRUPTCY, 8, 9; CITY OF LONDON COURT; PRACTICE (COSTS), 15, 18; PRACTICE (IRELAND), 14, 15, 16; SOLICITOR, 3.

COUNTY COURT (IRELAND):—

Equity civil bill—Annual value—Want of jurisdiction appearing during "progress" of suit—Transfer of action—40 & 41 Vict. c. 56, s. 37.—If the want of jurisdiction appears on the face of an equity civil bill, the only order that can be made is one of dismissal.

If want of jurisdiction does not appear on the face of the equity civil bill, but is made to appear afterwards, it is made to appear "during the progress of the suit," although objection be at once taken by the defendant by a notice challenging the jurisdiction.

If the plaintiff issues a civil bill with knowledge that the subject-matter exceeds the limits of the chairman's jurisdiction, but avers that it is within it, the suit should be dismissed, and not transferred; the onus of proving plaintiff's knowledge being on the defendant.—Morris v. Flynn, L.J. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 37.

COVENANT.—See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 2—6; RESTRAINT OF TRADE, 1, 2, 3.

CRIMINAL LAW:—

1. Attempt to pervert the course of justice—Manufacturing false evidence—No litigation in esse—Legal tribunal — Body of arbitrators for settlement of disputes.—A person may be convicted of a misdemeanour for manufacturing false evidence for the purpose of perverting the course of justice, although the evidence be never used in any legal proceedings, and no litigation be in esse at the date of the offence.

It is sufficient if the prisoner has done what was in his power to place the false evidence before a judicial tribunal. A body of arbitrators, provided for by a contract for the settlement of disputes arising out of it, is a judicial tribunal for this purpose.—Reg. v. Vreones, C.C.R. 365—[1891] 1 Q. B. 360; 60 L. J. M. C. 62; 64 L. T. 389.

2. Bankrupt—Petition presented by bankrupt himself—Act creating criminal offence—Prospective effect—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict c. 62), s. 11, sub-sections 14, 15—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 26.—The Debtors Act, 1869, s. 11, sub-sections 14, 15, makes certain acts misdemeanours if committed by a bankrupt "within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him." The Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (which received the Royal assent on the 18th of August, 1890, and came into operation on the 1st of January, 1891), by section 26 substitutes for the above words in section 11 of the Debtors Act, 1869, the words "within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition by or against him."

The defendant committed certain of the acts specified in sub-sections 14 and 15 in the year 1890; and within four months, but after the 1st of January, 1891, presented his petition and was adjudged bankrupt.

Held, that he could not be convicted of offences under the above sections, for that section 26 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, was not retrospective, and that, to constitute an offence under that section, the acts must have been committed after the 1st of January, 1891.—Reg. v. Griffiths, C.C.R. 719—[1891] 2 Q. B. 145; 60 L. J. M. C. 93.

3. Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 4—Carnal knowledge of girl under the age of thirteen years—Evidence.—In order to prove the offence of carnally knowing a girl under the age of thirteen years, under section 4 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, it is not necessary to prove emission.—Reg. v. Marsden, C.C.R. 703—[1891] 2 Q. B. 149.

4. Larceny — Fraudulent misappropriation — "Broker, attorney, or other agent"—"Security for the payment of money"—Bill of exchange without drawer's name—Larceny Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 75—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 18.—A document which is complete as a bill of exchange, except that it is not signed by the drawer, is "a security for the payment of money" within section 75 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. It is a question for the jury whether a person who had some interest in a bill-discounting transaction, beyond that of a broker or agent only, was intrusted with the bill "as a broker or agent."—Reg. v. Bowerman, C.C.R. 207—[1891] 1 Q. B. 112; 60 L. J. M. C. 13; 63 L. T. 532.

5. Offence against Parliamentary Registration Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 18), s. 51—Indictment—Parliament—Registration—Duties of overseer—Misconduct—Indictable misdemeanour.—An offence by an overseer within the meaning of section 51 of the Parliamentary Registration Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 18), is not an indictable misdemeanour.—Reg. v. Hall, C.C.C.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 747; 60 L. J. M. C. 124; 64 L. T. 394.

See also CRUELTY TO ANIMALS; EXTRADITION; SCHOOL BOARD.

CRIMINAL LAW (IRELAND):—

1. Error in law apparent upon record—Form of record—Appeal—Habeas corpus—Practice—Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 20)—Winter Assizes Act (39 & 40 Vict. c. 57); Order in Council.—The trial of a prisoner was transferred, under the Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887, from the county where the offence was committed to another county before a special jury. The jury having disagreed the case was adjourned to the next assizes. By an Order in Council under the Winter Assizes Act the case was transferred to the county of Tipperary, where the prisoner was convicted. The three counties were all in the Munster Circuit.

Held, that the trial legally took place in Tipperary before a special jury.

It is not necessary that the record should state the names of the jurors, or that the number of the jury amounted to twelve, if it appears, either expressly or by manifest implication, that the jury consisted of twelve.

Where there is an averment on the record of a proper and legal adjournment of the sessions from day to day, it is not necessary that the record should state the day or days upon which the trial took place.

An appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from the judgment of the Crown side of the Queen's Bench Division upon a writ of error; and the proceeding is by way of appeal, and not by writ of error.

When it becomes necessary to bring up a prisoner to be present at the argument of an appeal from the decision of the Queen's Bench Division on a writ of error, application for a writ of habeas corpus should be made to the Divisional Court.—O'Brien v. The Queen, C.A. (Ir.)—26 L. R. Ir. 451.

2. Unlawful conspiracy—Absence of some of several defendants during part of proceedings—Overt act—Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887—Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), s. 10, sub-section 4.—D. with others was prosecuted before a court of summary jurisdiction, constituted under the Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887, for having taken part in an unlawful conspiracy to induce certain tenants not to pay their rents. During the trial two of the accused, who had been admitted to bail, left the country.

Held, that, notwithstanding their absence, it was competent for the court to proceed with the trial of D. and others.

Held, also, that there being evidence of the continuance of the alleged conspiracy within six months of the conviction was sufficient to satisfy section 10, sub-section 4, of the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, although no overt act of D. within six months was proved.

A combination of several individuals to induce persons not to pay rent to a landlord constitutes a criminal conspiracy, it being a combination to effect a private wrong, though the inducement be not effected by compulsion or undue influence.—Ex parte Dalton, EX.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 36.

CROWN:—

Recognizance—Estreatment—Crown debt—Reduction or remission of amount—57 Geo. 3, c. 56.—The Exchequer Division has no jurisdiction to reduce or remit the amount payable at foot of recognizances ordered by justices to be estreated.—Reg. v. Dillon and O'Brien, EX.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 276.

See LIGHT, 1; MINE, 1.

CRUELTY to ANIMALS:—

Dishorning cattle—12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, s. 2.—Dishorning cattle, if performed with care and skill, and for the purpose of rendering the animals more profitable to farmers and exporters, is not cruelty to animals within 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, s. 2.

Ford v. Wiley, 23 Q. B. D. 203, and Brady v. M'Argle, 14 L. R. Ir. 174, not followed.

Callaghan's case, 16 L. R. Ir. 325, and Renton v. Wilson, 15 Court of Justiciary Cases, 4th Series, 84, followed.—Reg. v. M'Donagh, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 204.

DAMAGES:—

Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93)—Pecuniary loss by death of deceased—Evidence—Onus of proof.—In an action under Lord Campbell's Act by a father to recover damages for the death of his daughter, aged ten, who was killed by the negligence of the defendants, it was proved that the deceased, who lived with her parents and was maintained by them, rendered services to her parents which enabled them to dispense with a servant, whom they had previously employed; and that in consequence of the girl's death the parent's had been obliged to employ a servant again. No evidence was given as to the exact value of her services or as to the cost of her maintenance.

Held, that there was evidence to justify the jury in finding that the services of the deceased were of a pecuniary value exceeding the cost of her maintenance and education.—Wolfe v. Great Northern Railway Co., C.A. (Ir.)—26 L. R. Ir. 548.

See also DEFAMATION, 10; LANDLORD AND TENANT, 6; NEGLIGENCE, 1, 7; SHIP, 16.

DEBTORS ACT:—

1. Judgment debt—Order for payment by instalments—Receiving order previously made against debtor—Jurisdiction—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 5.—An order for payment by instalments, under section 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, cannot be made in the High Court upon a judgment summons after a receiving order has been made against the judgment debtor.—In re Nuthall, Ford v. Nuthall, C.A.—64 L. T. 241.

2. Solicitor — Attachment — Non-compliance with order to pay a sum of money in his character of an officer of the court—Bankruptcy of solicitor—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 4 (4)—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 9.—The court has jurisdiction to attach a solicitor for default in payment of a sum of money which he has been ordered to pay in his character of an officer of the court, although he has subsequently become a bankrupt.

In re Wray, 36 W. R. 67, followed.

In re Simes, 38 W. R. 570, not followed.—In re Edye, CH.D. CHI., J. 198—63 L. T. 762.

See also CRIMINAL LAW, 2.

DECEIT, ACTION of.—See COMPANY, 12—15.

DEED:—

Setting aside—Mortgage—Transfer—Execution of deed—Fraud—Negligence—Validity of deed.—The mortgagee in possession of certain copyhold property was, by the fraud of her solicitor, induced to sign, without knowing the contents thereof, a deed which, after falsely reciting that the solicitor had agreed to pay to the mortgagee the amount due to her upon the mortgage, purported to transfer the mortgage debt, and the securities for the same to the solicitor. The solicitor then deposited the deeds of the property with the plaintiff as security for money lent to him. The solicitor absconded, and the trustee of his estate executed a deed mortgaging the property to the plaintiff.

The original mortgagee thought when she signed the deed that she was only signing a lease of the property, and she did not intend to deal with her mortgage or with her possession thereunder.

Held, that the mind of the mortgagee did not go with the deed which she signed, and as she had not been guilty of any negligence the deed was void.—Favell v. Wright, Q.B.D.—64 L. T. 85.

DEFAMATION:—

LIBEL—

1. Corporation—Personal charges made against a corporation—Right of action.—A corporation, as distinguished from its individual members or officials, cannot sue for a libel merely affecting personal reputation.—Mayor, &c., of Manchester v. Williams, Q.B.D. 302—[1891] 1 Q. B. 94; 60 L. J. Q. B. 23; 63 L. T. 805.

2. Innuendo—Reasonable meaning of words used—Question for jury.—The respondent, a member of Parliament, asked a question in the House of Commons implying that one C. had been guilty of improper conduct. C. wrote to the respondent to complain of the imputation on his character, and subsequently published his letters in a newspaper of which the appellants were proprietors. One letter contained the following passage: "Supposing, for example, I sent a question . . . based on hearsay evidence to the effect that I heard, from a gentleman whom I would not think of doubting, that 'you' were in a state of delirium tremens. . . . Or suppose I had added to that further stories I had heard that" you were "utterly intoxicated" in the streets. The respondent brought an action for libel against the proprietors of the newspaper.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the words were capable of being reasonably understood in a libellous sense, and that therefore there was a question to go to the jury.—Ritchie & Co. v. Sexton, H.L. (Sc.)—64 L. T. 210.

3. Privileged occasion—Misdirection—Onus probandi.—Wherever a communication is privileged, it is not necessary for the defendant in an action for libel to prove bona fides; the onus is on the other side to show malice.

There is no distinction in this respect between different classes of privileged communications.

Where a jury was told that the existence of privilege depended on their finding that the defendant honestly believed his statement to be true,

Held, a misdirection.—Jenoure v. Delmege, P.C. 388—[1891] A. C. 73; 60 L. J. P. C. 11; 63 L. T. 814.

4. Privileged occasion—Railway company—Publication to company's servants of offences committed by other servants, with names of offenders and punishments inflicted.—The plaintiff was a guard in the service of the defendants, a railway company. The defendants dismissed him, on the ground that he had been guilty of gross neglect of duty, and published his name in a printed monthly circular addressed to their servants, stating in it that he had been dismissed, and the ground of his dismissal. The plaintiff brought an action for libel against the defendants.

Held, affirming the decision of Stephen, J., that the statement was made on a privileged occasion, and that the defendants were not liable.—Hunt v. Great Northern Railway Co., C.A.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 189; 60 L. J. Q. B. 498.

5. Publication—Letter applying to plaintiff derogatory remarks made by third person on privileged occasion.—The defendant published in a newspaper, under the heading "Parochial Matters at Eversley," a letter containing the words, "I refer all readers of the letters on this subject to the Primate's speech on the Clergy Discipline Act." The Primate's speech contained serious allegations against an unnamed clergyman. Three paragraphs of the statement of claim in an action for libel brought by the rector of Eversley against the defendant set out the defendant's letter and the portion of the Primate's speech which contained the allegations, and alleged that the defendant intended by his letter that the plaintiff was the object of the Primate's allegations.

Held, upon an application to strike out the three paragraphs, that the matters therein alleged amounted to a publication of a libel by the defendant upon the plaintiff, and disclosed a cause of action.—Lawrence v. Newberry, Q.B.D. 605—64 L. T. 797.

6. Publication—Privileged occasion—Letter dictated by manager of company to clerk—Type-writer—Press copy—Letter sent to plaintiff's place of business.—The manager of a company, in the course of business, dictated to a type-writer employed in the office of the company a letter to be sent from the company to the plaintiffs. The letter having been written in type, a press copy was made by an office boy. It was then directed to the office of the plaintiffs' firm, where it was opened and seen by three clerks.

Held, in an action of libel against the company, that, assuming the letter to be libellous, there was a publication both at the defendants' office and at the plaintiffs' office, and that neither publication took place on a privileged occasion.—Pullman v. Hill & Co., C.A. 263—[1891] 1 Q. B. 524; 60 L. J. Q. B. 299; 64 L. T. 691.

7. Words not libellous per se—Onus of proof—Postcard.—A dispute having arisen between the defendants and the plaintiff, their Dublin agent, as to an item in the accounts, the defendants sent the plaintiff a postcard as follows:—"Settlement. If you do not remit by return, the matter will be handed to our Dublin solicitors." In an action of libel the plaintiff was nonsuited.

Held (affirming the judgment of the Exchequer Division), that the nonsuit was right.—McCann v. Edinburgh Roperie Co., C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 24.

SLANDER—

8. Privileged occasion—Evidence of malice.—The defendant, who was Mayor of Newcastle-on-Tyne, was entertaining at the Mansion House the African explorer Stanley, who was accompanied by the plaintiff, his valet. The defendant received from the Chief Constable of Newcastle a letter, which had been sent to the latter by the Chief Constable of Edinburgh, stating that suspicion had fallen on the plaintiff of having stolen a watch in an Edinburgh hotel. The defendant told Stanley privately of this just before he was leaving Newcastle, and Stanley discharged the plaintiff a few days later.

In an action for slander,

Held, by the Court of Appeal (Lindley and Kay, L.JJ.; Lopes, L.J., dissenting), that the occasion was privileged, and, there being no evidence of malice in fact to be left to the jury, that judgment ought to be entered for the defendant.

Decision of Wills, J., reversed.—Stuart v. Bell, C.A. 612—[1891] 2 Q. B. 341; 64 L. T. 633.

9. Privileged occasion—Meeting of board of guardians—Presence of reporters—Words spoken in bonâ fide belief of their truth.—The defendant, a member of a board of guardians, made a speech which would have been privileged if the meeting of the board at which it was made had been a private one.

Held, that the presence of reporters at the meeting, who were not in any way brought there by the defendant, did not destroy the privilege.—Pittard v. Oliver, C.A. 311—[1891] 1 Q. B. 474; 60 L. J. Q. B. 219; 64 L. T. 758.

10. Special damage—Unauthorized repetition—Imputation of unchastity—Remoteness of damage.—The defendant uttered an imputation upon the chastity of the plaintiff, an unmarried woman, to the plaintiff's mother. The mother repeated the slander to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff repeated it to the man to whom she was engaged to be married. In consequence thereof the man refused to marry the plaintiff.

In an action of slander,

Held, that in the absence of evidence that the defendant authorized or intended the slander to be repeated, or that the repetition was the natural consequence of the defendant's act, the action could not be maintained.—Speight v. Gosnay, C.A. —60 L. J. Q. B. 231.

See also PRACTICE (INJUNCTION), 38, 39.

DISCOVERY.—See PRACTICE, 26—33.

See also DIVORCE, 17; PRACTICE (IRELAND), 5, 6.

DISTRICT REGISTRY.—See PRACTICE, 34; SOLICITOR, 4.

DIVORCE:—

1. Access to children—Guilty wife—Discretion of judge—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 35—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 61), s. 4.—There is no general rule of practice to compel a judge of the Divorce Division to refuse a mother, who has been divorced on account of her adultery, access to the children of the marriage. The judge of that division is, by section 35 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, given the fullest discretion in the matter.

In January, 1886, a decree for dissolution of marriage on account of the wife's adultery was made absolute, and the custody of the children—two boys, now aged respectively eleven and thirteen years—was given to the father, but the decree contained no declaration as to access by the mother.

The mother (who in February, 1886, married the co-respondent) did, in fact, however, from time to time visit the children, with the permission of the father, until June, 1890, when the father, who had then recently married again, withdrew such permission.

An application to the court by the mother for an order for access was refused by Hannen, P., and the Court of Appeal now affirmed this decision.

Symington v. Symington, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 415, followed.—Handley v. Handley and Wroughton, C.A. 97—[1891] P. 124; 63 L. T. 535.

2. Alimony — Permanent maintenance to wife — —Dum sola et casta clause.—Where the amount allowed for maintenance of a wife guilty of adultery is not a large income, but only a bare allowance, the court will not necessarily insert a dum sola et casta clause in the order.—Lander v. Lander, P.D. & A.D. 416—[1891] P. 161; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 65; 64 L. T. 120.

3. Alimony—Permanent maintenance to wife—Counter-charges—Conditional decree—Motion to make decree absolute—Allowance to be made to respondent dum casta et sola vixerit—Order.—The petitioner obtained a decree nisi on the ground of his wife's adultery, but, at the time of pronouncing that decree, the learned judge intimated that an allowance must be made by the petitioner to his wife. The solicitors for the petitioner and respondent settled an agreement, which was signed by both the parties. One of the terms in the agreement was that the allowance should continue so long as the respondent should remain chaste and unmarried.

The court (Butt, J.), while expressing disfavour with the dum casta clause, made the decree absolute. —Weller v. Weller, Funnell, and Cass, P.D. & AD—63 L. T. 263.

4. Alimony—Permanent maintenance to wife—Clause dum sola et casta—29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, s. 1.—There is no rule that, in an order granting permanent maintenance to a divorced wife, the dum sola et casta clause ought to be inserted, unless there is some reason to the contrary, nor that it ought to be omitted unless there is some reason for inserting it. The court must in each case determine what is reasonable, having regard to (1) the conduct of the parties; (2) their position in life, and their ages and their respective means; (3) the amount of the provision made; (4) the existence or non-existence of children, and who is to have the custody of them; and (5) any other circumstances which may be important in any particular case. The wife of an officer in the army obtained a decree for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty. There was no child, and neither party had any property, the husband having only his pay. An order was made for permanent maintenance at the rate of £60 a year, and Jeune, J., directed the insertion of the dum sola et casta clause, considering that there was a general rule for inserting it, unless there was some reason for omitting it.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that there was no such general rule, and that, in the present case, having regard to the innocence of the wife, the misconduct of the husband, the fact that the wife had no property, and the smallness of the allowance, the clause ought not to be inserted.—Wood v. Wood, C.A.—[1891] P. 272; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 66; 64 L. T. 586.

5. Collusion—Cruelty and adultery of husband—Judicial separation—The husband having been found guilty upon the wife's petition for divorce of cruelty and adultery, the court pronounced a decree nisi. Subsequently, upon the intervention of the Queen's Proctor, the wife was found guilty of collusion.

The court refused to pronounce a decree for judicial separation upon the application of the wife. —Butler v. Butler and Burnham, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 256.

5a. Condonation—Wife's adultery—Direction to jury—Plea not established.—A husband who had received from his wife a confession of adultery, thereupon went home with her and they slept together upon that and the following night. He then sent her away to her relations, and they parted upon affectionate terms. The same day as he saw her off at the railway station he signed a petition praying for a divorce.

Upon the plea of condonation put forward by the wife, the learned judge directed the jury that the fact of the parties sleeping together was not conclusive, but that they must take that fact in conjunction with the other facts of the case in forming a conclusion as to whether the adultery had been condoned.—Hall v. Hall and Kay, P.D. & A.D. —64 L. T. 837.

6. Connivance—Wilful neglect—Conduct conducing to adultery—Desertion—Unreasonable delay—Conditional decree.—The petitioner married the respondent in 1873, and they lived together very happily till the birth of the only child, early in 1874, shortly after which event the respondent's mind became temporarily unhinged, and she was removed to an asylum, from which, towards the end of the same year, she was discharged as cured. The petitioner was, however, advised by his wife's medical attendant that further cohabitation, if it resulted in pregnancy, would probably prove dangerous to the respondent and any future offspring. By the consent of the families of both parties, it was arranged that they should live apart, the wife having the child with her, and the husband making her an allowance. The petitioner corresponded with his wife until 1880, when he refused all further direct communication, but continued the allowance through his solicitor; and throughout the separation he declined all private interviews with his wife, although urgently and repeatedly requested and begged for by her. In 1879 he wrote that she was not to inquire into his mode of life, and he would not interfere with hers.

Held, that he was not disentitled to a divorce, on the ground of his wife's subsequent adultery.—Lander v. Lander, Temple, Fox, and Fox, P.D. & A.D. —63 L. T. 257.

7. Cruelty—Husband's petition—Wife addicted to drink—Adultery—Counter-charge of cruelty—Degree of cruelty necessary to bar husband's right to relief—Decree nisi.—Upon a husband's petition for divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery, where the adultery is fully established against her, but where she countercharges cruelty as having been committed by her husband towards her, and where it appears that the wife is a woman of drunken habits, and that what she alleges as violence has been used upon her in consequence of her drunkenness,

The court requires a very strong case to be made out against the husband in order to bar his right to relief from the marriage tie. Unless it is proved that he has been guilty of such gross violence towards her as the court cannot allow to be excused on the ground that he was provoked to it by her intemperance, the decree in his favour should not be withheld.—Forsyth v. Forsyth, Eccles, and Foster, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 263.

8. Cruelty—Wife's petition—Absence of physical violence.—The respondent, who had not been guilty of any physical violence to his wife, had habitually insulted her, and behaved towards her with neglect and studied unkindness, whereby her health had been impaired.

Held, that this amounted to cruelty, which, coupled with adultery, entitled the petitioner to a decree for dissolution.

Kelly v. Kelly, L. R. 2 P. & M. 59, followed.—Bethune v. Bethune, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 205; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 18; 63 L. T. 259.

9. Custody of children—Innocent wife—Order for custody—Subsequent misconduct—Husband leading moral life—Order for change of custody—General principles.—No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to custody of children, but in every case the court is bound to do what it conceives to be best for their interests.

A wife, on a decree absolute for dissolution of the marriage with her husband for his adultery being made, obtained an order for the custody of the children, including a daughter aged eleven, who was the only child given up to her under the order. Subsequently she lived in the same house with a young man on such intimate terms that the registrar inferred immorality. She gave way to drink and neglected her daughter. The husband meanwhile had married again, and ample proof was given of his present fitness.

The court ordered the custody of the daughter to be taken from the wife and given to the husband.—Witt v. Witt, P.D. & A.D. 432—[1891] P. 163; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 63; 64 L. T. 121.

10. Custody of children—Judicial separation—Cruelty to wife and child—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 27), s. 7—Declaration annexed to decree.—The court, while declining to lay down any general principles which should guide the court in making, or refusing to make, at the suit of a successful petitioner, a declaration under section 7 of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, to the effect that the respondent is a person unfit to have the custody of the child or children of the marriage, made such a declaration in a suit by the wife for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, where the misconduct proved included the taking of the only child of the marriage, an infant at the time under a year old, out of the house in its nightdress, and of threats culminating in a murderous assault upon the petitioner and her mother, for which the respondent was sentenced to a term of penal servitude.—Handford v. Handford, P.D. & A.D. —63 L. T. 256.

10a. Custody of children—Judicial separation—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 27), s. 7—Order—Effect.—The wife petitioned for a judicial separation on the ground of her husband's cruelty, and she also prayed that the court would append to the decree a declaration, in terms of section 7 of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, that the respondent was a person unfit to have the custody of the children of the marriage. The cruelty proved was, substantially, that the respondent pinched and kicked the petitioner, and threw cold water over her, and told her that he did so in order to make her miscarry. One of the children was in bed with her at that time. The respondent put the petitioner out of the house at night in her nightdress, it was then raining; the children were very frightened and screamed, and a policeman afterwards went to the house and fetched them away, and took them to a neighbour's house, in which the petitioner had sought refuge. The respondent on many occasions ill-used the children and made them cry, he made use of filthy language in their presence, and used epithets to one of the children about the petitioner, or to the petitioner in presence of that child, and the boy himself afterwards used those epithets to the petitioner.

Held, that the respondent was a person unfit to have the custody of the children; and that the effect of declaring him so to be, under section 7 of the Act of 1886, was merely to put upon him the onus of affirmatively proving himself to be a reformed character, and fit to be intrusted with the children's custody, in case of any application which might be made in respect of their custody after the petitioner's death.—Webley v. Webley, P.D. & A.D.—64 L. T. 839.

11. Custody of children—Judicial separation—Ex parte application as to custody of only child—Interim order.—The court, upon affidavit that the petitioner believed her husband intended to remove the only child out of the jurisdiction of the court, made an order, ad interim, upon the petitioner's ex parte application, restraining the respondent from removing the child.—Harris v. Harris, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 262.

12. Desertion — Husband's adultery coupled with desertion—Husband willing to return to cohabitation—Decree of judicial separation.—In a wife's suit for dissolution on the ground of adultery coupled with desertion the adultery was proved; and with regard to the desertion it appeared that after twenty-one years' cohabitation it was, in August, 1886, agreed between the parties, who were then resident abroad, that the wife and the children of the marriage should come to live in England. They accordingly took lodgings at Bournemouth, and the wife pressed her husband to return with them, but he refused. She continued willing to receive him and renew cohabitation until February, 1887, when she was shown a letter which convinced her that her husband had been carrying on an adulterous intercourse. Upon this she resolved that she never would live with him again. He wrote several to her offering to return to cohabitation, to which she did not reply; but her solicitors, by her direction, informed him that she would never live with him again.

Held, that there being no proof that the husband's offers to live again with his wife were not bonâ fide, she could not treat the separation on which she insisted as desertion by him, and that she was only entitled, therefore, to a judicial separation on the ground of adultery.—Lodge v Lodge, P.D. & A.D.—15 P. D. 159; 59 L. J. P. D. & A. 84; 63 L. T. 467.

12a. Excuse for leaving wife—Wife's confession—Husband's separation thereupon—Subsequent adultery —Decree.—A bonâ fide confession of adultery by a wife to her husband, believed in by him, is sufficient excuse for his leaving her.

The husband, in 1881, found a letter in his wife's possession, and taxed her with adultery with a certain man. She admitted it, and he (the husband) left her.

He was a journeyman jeweller, and had no means at that time to commence proceedings. He, about 1890, found that she was living with another man as his wife, by whom she had four children.

The court, finding that he was justified in leaving his wife upon her confession of adultery in 1881, and that his explanation of want of means was sufficient to explain the delay in taking proceedings to have his marriage dissolved, granted him a decree nisi.—Faulkes v. Faulkes and Stainton, P.D. & A.D. —64 L. T. 834.

13. Husband formerly convicted of aggravated assault—Husband's petition—Separation and allowance granted thereon to wife — Wife's subsequent adultery—Discretional bar—Decree for dissolution.—Decree dissolving the marriage pronounced in favour of a husband who had been convicted by justices of an aggravated assault upon his wife, and against whom a separation order and an order for an allowance had been thereupon made.—Sergent v. Sergent and Weaver, P.D. & A.D.—64 L. T. 236.

14. Judicial separation—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 19), s. 4—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 43—Aggravated assault—Order—Wife not bound to cohabit with husband—Appeal.—A husband was convicted before justices of an aggravated assault on his wife under section 43 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, and they inflicted a fine of forty shillings. They also made an order under section 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, that the wife should be no longer bound to cohabit with her husband, and for maintenance. The husband appealed to this court.

Held, that section 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, gave no appeal from the conviction for the aggravated assault, but only from the order made under that section for separation and maintenance.—Lewin v. Lewin, P.D. & A.D. 575—[1891] P. 254; 64 L. T. 834.

15. Practice—Costs—Collusion—Decree nisi granted to wife—Queen's Proctor intervening—Collusion by both parties—Decree rescinded—Money paid into court for wife's costs to be paid out to Queen's Proctor.—At the trial of two cross-petitions for dissolution by husband and wife, the wife by arrangement obtained a decree nisi, and the husband was condemned in costs. The Queen's Proctor intervened, charging collusion. At the trial of the issue the jury found that the parties had been guilty of collusion. The husband had paid £140 into court to meet the wife's costs. The court had refused to allow any part of this sum to be paid out to the wife or her solicitors. The Queen's Proctor having applied for payment out of this sum to him to meet his costs,

The court made the order as prayed.—Butler v. Butler; Butler v. Butler and Burnham, P.D. & A.D.—15 P. D. 161; 59 L. J. P. D. & A. 86; 63 L. T. 260.

16. Practice—Costs—Collusion—Queen's Proctor, in- tervention by—Decree nisi rescinded—Costs against co-respondent—23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7; 41 & 42 Vict. c. 19, s. 2.—A husband having obtained a decree nisi in a petition for divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery, the Queen's Proctor intervened, and charged that the decree had been procured by the collusion of the respondent and co-respondent. The co-respondent was cited, but did not appear. At the hearing, the court having found the issues in favour of the Queen's Proctor, condemned the co-respondent in costs.—Taplen v. Taplen and Cowen, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 283; 64 L. T. 870.

17. Practice—Discovery—Affidavit of documents—Doctrine that "no one is bound to criminate himself," whether applicable where adultery is the charge—Jurisdiction—Infant—Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 68), s. 3—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 68, r. 1 (d).—Although section 3 of the Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869, does not relate to discovery at all, but merely to evidence given at the trial of divorce suits, yet it recognizes and is based on the existence of the doctrine that a person questioned as to the fact of his or her adultery is not bound to answer. A party cannot be compelled to discover that which, if discovered, may tend to subject him to any punishment, penalty, forfeiture, or ecclesiastical censure, and, though the fear of ecclesiastical censure is now practically obsolete, it is only natural that the doctrine that no one is bound to criminate himself should be applicable to a charge of such gravity as adultery, notwithstanding that it is not a criminal, but only an ecclesiastical offence.

Although, as a general rule, it is not a sufficient ground for refusing an order for discovery, or for an affidavit of documents, that it may tend to criminate the party against whom it is sought, or that he may thereby be rendered liable to a penalty or ecclesiastical censure, the proper course being to raise that objection, not on the summons for discovery, but in the affidavit made in answer thereto, and with respect to the particular interrogatories or documents as to which the objection applies; yet, if it is evident that the discovery or affidavit of documents is wanted solely for the purpose of proving adultery against the party against whom it is sought, the order ought not to be made.

The court, however, has power to order discovery or an affidavit of documents, even in divorce suits, upon issues other than adultery, subject to the doctrine that no one is bound to criminate himself and to the ordinary rules as to privilege.

Semble (per Lindley, L.J.), that the rule prevailing in the Chancery and Queen's Bench Divisions, not to grant discovery against an infant, never extended to the ecclesiastical courts, and does not now extend to proceedings in divorce, the invariable practice in which is inconsistent with that rule.

Mayor v. Collins, 38 W. R. 349, 24 Q. B. D. 361, distinguished.

Decision of Butt, J., affirmed, but on different grounds.—Redfern v. Redfern, C.A. 212—[1891] P. 139; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 9; 64 L. T. 68.

18. Practice—Petition by husband—No appearance by respondent—Verdict of jury against co-respondent—Examination of respondent by the court—Dismissal of petition against her—Co-respondent condemned in damages and costs.—In a petition by the husband for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of adultery, the respondent filed no answer and did not appear. The jury found a verdict against the co-respondent, and assessed the damages against him at £50. The court, not being satisfied with the evidence against the respondent, directed her to be summoned, and having heard her evidence, on which she was cross-examined, to the effect that she had been forced, came to the conclusion that the charge of adultery had not been established against her, and dismissed the petition as against her, but gave judgment against the co-respondent for the damages with costs.—Long v. Long and Johnson, P.D. & A.D.—15 P. D. 218; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 27.

19. Practice—Security for co-respondent's costs—Husband's petition.—The court, being satisfied that the petitioner had, as a fact, assets in this country upon which, if defeated in his suit, execution for any costs ordered to be paid by him could be levied, refused the application of one of the co-respondents that the petitioner be ordered to give security for his costs.

Semble, the court, if well assured that there is real necessity for it, will make an order, upon a co-respondent's bonâ fide application, that the petitioner give security for the costs of such co-respondent.—Redfern v. Redfern, Herbert, and Others, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 780.

20. Practice—Security for wife's costs—Husband's petition—Non-compliance with order for security for costs—Attachment refused.—In a petition by the husband for dissolution of marriage, the petitioner had been ordered to pay or secure a certain sum for the respondent's costs of the hearing of the cause. The petitioner failed to comply with the order, alleging want of means on his part.

The court, under the circumstances, refused to enforce the order by the issue of writ of attachment.—Clarke v. Clarke, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 278.

21. Restitution of conjugal rights — Husband petitioner—Wife entitled to separate estate—Application by husband for settlement out of separate estate—Evidence as to conduct of petitioner to respondent during cohabitation—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68), s. 3.—On an application for a settlement or allowance by virtue of section 3 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, out of the estate of the husband or wife against whom a decree of restitution of conjugal rights has been pronounced in an undefended suit, it is competent for the party making the application to tender evidence as to the conduct of the other party during cohabitation.

The husband's power of earning money must also be taken into account.—Swift v. Swift, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 129; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 14; 63 L. T. 711.

22. Restitution of conjugal rights—Refusal of wife to comply with decree—Restraint on anticipation—Settlement of wife's property for husband's benefit—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68), s. 3.—The court has no jurisdiction under section 3 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, to order a settlement to be made on the husband of property of the wife which is subject to a restraint against anticipation.

Swift v. Swift, 15 P. D. 118, [1891] P. 129, explained.

Norris v. Norris, 6 W. R. 640, 27 L. J. P. & M. 72, approved. — Michell v. Michell, C.A. 680—[1891] P. 208; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 46; 64 L. T. 607.

22a. Settlement—Husband's petition for settlement—Divorce Act, 1858 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 45—Refusal.—The husband obtained a divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent. He petitioned that certain jewellery belonging to his wife should be sold, and a settlement made of the proceeds, giving her a life interest in the income arising from the investment of those proceeds, with remainder to himself. His income was substantial, his wife's only £72 a year. The registrar reported against the petitioner.

The court confirmed the registrar's report, and refused to order any settlement. The petition was thereupon dismissed with costs. — Schofield v. Schofield and Cowper, P.D. & A.D. — 64 L. T. 839.

23. Settlement—Petition for variation—Respondent and surviving trustee bankrupt—Notice served upon official receiver—Dispensing with service of petition on bankrupts.—Where a decree absolute for dissolution of marriage was pronounced upon the petition of the wife, and the wife petitioned for a variation of the marriage settlement, the court dispensed with service of the petition to vary upon the husband and the trustee of the settlement, who were both bankrupts, notice of the application to dispense with such service having been given to the official receiver in bankruptcy.—Snelling v. Snelling, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 263.

24. Settlement—Variation—Scottish settlement—22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5.—The court has power, under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5, after a dissolution of marriage, to vary a settlement made according to the Scottish law, in contemplation of the marriage of a Scottish woman to a domiciled Englishman.—Nunneley v. Nunneley and Marrian, P.D. & A.D. 190—15 P. D. 186; 63 L. T. 113.

25. Settlement—Variation—Reversionary interests—Permanent maintenance in excess of one-third of joint income secured to wife in præsenti.—The wife obtained a decree absolute on the grounds of adultery and cruelty, and presented a petition for variation of the marriage settlements and for permanent maintenance. The present joint income of the husband and wife amounted to nearly £1,500 a year. Both were entitled to considerable property in reversion. The registrar recommended either that a present income of £700 a year should be secured to the wife for her life, or, in the alternative, that she should have secured to her an annual sum equal to one-third of the present joint income, such annual sum to be increased upon the falling in of the husband's reversionary interest.

On behalf of the husband it was stated that, if one of these two courses were to be adopted, he should, of the two, prefer the former.

The court therenpon ordered that the husband secure to the petitioner, by way of permanent maintenance, the sum of £700 a year for her life.—Warren v. Warren, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 264.

26. Settlement—Variation—Nullity of marriage—Colonial decree—Variation of settlements—Jurisdiction of the court—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 45—22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5.—A decree of nullity of marriage having been made by a colonial court, a petition was presented to the High Court for variation of settlements, the parties having returned to this country.

Held, that there was no jurisdiction to entertain the application.—Moore (falsely called Bull) v. Bull, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 279.

See INFANT, 1; PROBATE, 27.

DOWER.—See ADMINISTRATION, 3.

EASEMENT:—

1. Air—Prescription—Right of passage of air through defined channel.—The cellar of the plaintiffs' public-house was ventilated by means of a shaft cut therefrom through the rock into a disused well situated in an adjoining yard owned and occupied by the defendant, the air from the cellar passing through the shaft and out at the top of the well. The cellar had been so ventilated for more than forty years without interruption, and with the knowledge of the occupiers of the yard.

Held, that the plaintiffs could legally claim, as against the defendant, the easement of the free passage of air from the cellar, and that a lost grant of the right ought to be presumed.—Bass v. Gregory, Q.B.D.—25 Q. B. D. 481; 59 L. J. Q. B. 574.

2. Grant of adjoining tenements—Right of way—Unity of possession—Mortgage of servient tenement without reservation of right of way—Implied reservation—Reconveyance—Determination of right of way.—The owner of two adjoining tenements possessed a right of way from one tenement through the other. The right of way was not a way of necessity. Previous to the grant of these tenements to two respective grantees, the grantor had conveyed the servient tenement by way of mortgage without any reservation of the right of way. Subsequently, by will, the grantor devised the two tenements to the predecessors in title of the respective plaintiff and defendant. The defendant's predecessor paid off the mortgage, and took a reconveyance of all the interest of the mortgagee, and blocked up the passage creating the right of way.

Held, in an action to secure the original right of way, that, the plaintiff and defendant being both volunteers under the will, the plaintiff had no equity to deprive the defendant of what the defendant's predecessor had obtained by the reconveyance, which was not a mere release of a charge, but an estate larger than what the defendant's predecessor had acquired under the will of the testatrix.

Decision of the Queen's Bench Division (39 W.R. 512) affirmed.—Tawes v. Knowles, C.A. 675.

See also LIGHT; WATERCOURSE.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW:—

1. Burial—Faculty for—Reserved grave space—Order in Council closing churchyard except to members of families of parishioners.—By an Order in Council a churchyard was closed except as to burials in reserved grave spaces allotted to members of the families of parishioners.

Held, that a faculty for a reservation of a space in the churchyard for exclusive burial could be granted to a living non-parishioner, the member of the family of a parishioner.—In re Sargent, ARCHES COURT—15 P. D. 168.

2. Burial ground — Maintenance and repair — Churchwardens—Right to be repaid costs and expenses —Certificate—Burial Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 128), s. 18.—By section 18 of the Burial Act, 1855, which provides for the maintenance and repair of disused burial grounds by the burial board or churchwardens, it is enacted that "the costs and expenses shall be repaid by the overseers upon the certificate of the burial board or churchwardens, as the case may be, out of the rate made for the relief of the poor of the parish." A churchwarden had, with the authority of the vestry, received tenders for repairs to the wall of a burial ground, but had not actually paid any sum of money in respect thereof.

Held, that his written request for payment was a sufficient certificate within the section, and that he was entitled to a mandamus ordering the vestry to pay him on account a sum which was within the estimated cost of the repairs.—Reg. v. Vestry of St. Mary, Islington, Q.B.D. 10—25 Q. B. D. 523; 59 L. J. Q. B. 462; 63 L. T. 226.

3. Parish clerk — Sequestration — Bankruptcy of incumbent—Appointment by stipendiary curate—Injunction—34 & 35 Vict. c. 45, ss. 1, 5, 6.—The rights belonging to an incumbent by virtue of his benefice are not taken away or interfered with by the issue of a sequestration, except in so far as they are taken away or interfered with by the express terms of the Sequestration Act, 1871.

The office of parish clerk is a temporal office.—Lawrence v. Edwards, CH.D. CHI., J. 411—[1891] 1 Ch. 144; 2 Ch. 72; 60 L. J. Ch. 336; 64 L. T. 77, 343.

4. Pew—Right appurtenant to house—Evidence—Long user and acts of ownership—Presumption of legal origin—Prescription—Faculty.—A pew may be annexed to a dwelling-house in the parish by a faculty, and a faculty may be presumed upon evidence of exclusive possession and repair for a long period.

The owner of a freehold dwelling-house brought an action in respect of the disturbance of his possession of a pew in the parish church. There was evidence that for more than seventy years he and his predecessors in title had occupied the pew, kept it locked, and repaired it.

Held, upon the principle that a legal origin ought to be presumed if a legal origin be possible, that the grant of a faculty ought to be presumed, and that the action was maintainable, and that this was so though it appeared that 200 years ago the then lessee of the house (before he became the freeholder) first acquired possession of the pew in a manner which gave no legal title, the subsequent enjoyment not being more consistent with the illegal origin than with the presumption of a later faculty.

The decision of the Court of Appeal (37 W. R. 776, 23 Q. B. D. 48) affirmed.—Philipps v. Halliday, H.L. (E.)—[1891] A. C. 228; 64 L. T. 745.

5. Public worship—Bishop—Illegal practices in the celebration of Divine service—Rubrics—Communion service—Lighted candles—Mixing and administering water and wine — Eastward position — Performing manual acts before the people—Singing of hymn Agnus Dei—Making sign of the cross—Absolution.—A bishop of the Church of England was charged with having committed offences against the law ecclesiastical while officiating as principal celebrant at the service of Holy Communion.

As to the first charge, that the respondent permitted lighted candles to be used on the communion table when not required for the purpose of giving light,

Held, that the mere fact that two lighted candles, not required for the purpose of giving light, were kept standing on the table continuously through the service did not constitute a breach of the law.

As to the charge of allowing water to be mixed with the sacramental wine, and administering the wine and water so mixed to the communicants,

Held, that mixing water and wine in and as part of the service was unlawful, but that the use of a cup containing water and wine mixed beforehand was not an ecclesiastical offence.

As to the charge of standing during the Communion service down to the ordering of the bread and wine on the west side of the table, and not on the north side thereof,

Held, that the act above described was not illegal.

As to the charge of performing the manual acts whilst standing in such a position that they could not be seen by the communicants,

Held, that the manual acts must be performed so as to be visible to the communicants.

As to the charge of permitting the hymn Agnus Dei to be said or sung immediately after the prayer of consecration,

Held, that this was not an illegal addition to the service.

As to the charge of making the sign of the cross during the absolution and the benediction,

Held, that this action was a ceremony additional to the ceremonies of the Church, and was unlawful.

As to the charge of pouring the water and wine into the paten and chalice and drinking the said water and wine as part of the service,

Held, that the doing of the acts complained of by themselves was not a ceremony, and that, having been done after the benediction, and not as part of the service, they were not unlawful.—Read v. Bishop of Lincoln, C. OF A. OF C.—[1891] P. 9; 64 L. T. 149.

6. Reredos—"Representation" under Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), ss. 8, 9 — Second representation — Alleged similarity — Bishop's discretion—Mandamus.—In May, 1888, a "representation" had been made to the Bishop of London under sections 8 and 9 of the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874, that the Dean and Chapter had set up in St. Paul's Cathedral Church images or sculptured subjects which tended to encourage ideas and devotions which were alleged to be of superstitious kind and to be unlawful. The bishop refused to transmit this "representation" on the ground that the case was the same as the Exeter case: Phillpotts v. Boyd, 23 W. R. 491, L. R. 6 P. C. 435. A mandamus was granted by a divisional court directing the bishop to transmit the representation; but this decision was reversed by the Court of Appeal, and the matter is now pending before the House of Lords.

A second representation was presented to the bishop stating that the images had in fact encouraged ideas and devotions of an idolatrous kind, and that idolatrous regard had been in fact paid to them. The bishop refused to transmit this second representation, on the ground that it was in substance the same as the former.

On a rule for a mandamus to the bishop to transmit the representation,

Held, by Stephen J., that the mandamus ought to go as the second representation differed materially from the former, inasmuch as it asserted that the images had, in fact, led to idolatry, whereas the former representation only asserted that they tended to idolatry.

Held, by Hawkins, J., that the mandamus ought not to go, on the ground that if the new matter disclosed a new offence it was not within the Act at all; if it did not then it was substantially the same as the former. Further, that, as the bishop had stated in his answer that he "had considered the whole circumstances of the case," his opinion formed thereon was not open to appeal.

The court being divided in opinion, the rule for a mandamus was discharged.—Reg. v. Bishop of London (No. 2), Q.B.D. 141—[1891] 2 Q. B. 48; 63 L. T. 819.

EJECTMENT.—See LAND, ACTION TO RECOVER POSSESSION; LANDLORD AND TENANT, 7; PRACTICE (EJECTMENT), 35.

ELECTION LAW.—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 5; MUNICIPAL CORPORATION, 1, 2; PARLIAMENT, 1—13.

EMPLOYERS and WORKMEN ACT, 1875.—See MASTER AND SERVANT, 3, 6, 7,

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT, 1880. — See MASTER AND SERVANT, 4.

ENDOWED SCHOOL:—

Dismissal of schoolmaster—Injunction—Right to sue—Consent of Charity Commissioners—Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 17.—The deed of trust establishing an endowed school provided that the master of the school should be appointed by the vicars of three specified parishes, and power was given to the three vicars to remove the master for certain specified causes. The plaintiff was appointed master of the school in April, 1890, and in December, 1890, two of the vicars served on him a notice of dismissal signed by themselves, which stated certain reasons for his dismissal. No meeting of the vicars had been summoned to consider the question of the plaintiff's dismissal, and he had not had any opportunity of being heard in defence. There was no evidence that the third vicar had been consulted. The plaintiff commenced an action against the two vicars who had signed the notice, and moved for an interlocutory injunction to restrain them from removing, or purporting to remove, him from his office until after the holding of a meeting of the vicars, and until he should have had an opportunity of being heard at such a meeting in reply to any charge made against him.

Held, that the defendants could not remove the plaintiff without first affording him an opportunity of being heard in his own defence at a properly constituted meeting of the vicars, and that he was entitled to the injunction.

Held, also, that for the purpose of obtaining this relief it was not necessary, under section 17 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, to obtain the consent of the Charity Commissioners to the bringing of the action.—Fisher v. Jackson, CH.D. NOR., J.—[1891] 2 Ch. 84; 60 L. J. Ch. 482; 64 L. T. 782.

ESTOPPEL.—See COMPANY (SHARES), 23, 24, 25a, 26; MARRIED WOMAN, 1.

EVIDENCE:—

1. Documents — Proof of — Attesting witness — Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), s. 26.—In a case where all the parties are represented before the court it is not necessary to prove by the attesting witness a deed for the validity of which attestation is not necessary within the meaning of section 26 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854.—Worthington v. Moore, CH.D. CHI., J.—64 L. T. 338.

2. Marriage—Parochial register—Memorial of deed—Pedigree—Family reputation.—As evidence of the marriage of R. and M., an entry of the marriage of two persons of the same name (but not otherwise identified) in the parochial register of a Protestant parish, in which M. appeared to have resided, bearing date 1816, was produced by the existing incumbent of the parish, who also proved that the register had been retained in the church by permission of the Master of the Rolls. The entry purported to be signed by the then vicar, and entries in similar handwriting in the register appeared from 1791. The incumbent stated that as far as he knew it was the duty of the clergyman to make the entry, but he was not aware of any canon in force at the time requiring such entries to be made.

Held (by Harrison and Johnson, JJ., dissentiente O'Brien, J.), that the entry was not admissible.

A suit to establish a will and administer the estate, in which the executors and trustees were defendants, was compromised by a deed to which the executors and trustees were parties.

Held, that the production of this deed by the solicitors for the executors and trustees was production from the proper custody.

In an action for declaration of title where the plaintiff has to prove matters of pedigree, evidence of family reputation is admissible, including evidence of time.—Miller v. Wheatley, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 144.

3. Unstamped document—Promissory note—Insufficient stamp—Evidence for collateral purpose—Stamp Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 97), s. 54, sub-section 1.—The defendant tendered as evidence of a loan an insufficiently-stamped promissory note.

Held, that the receipt of the money was of the essence of the promissory note and inseparable from it; that to admit the note as evidence of the loan would not be to admit it for collateral purposes; and that it must be rejected.—Ashling v. Boon, CH.D. KEK., J. 298—[1891] 1 Ch. 568; 60 L. J. Ch. 306; 64 L. T. 193.

See also ADMIRALTY, 6, 7; LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 7.

EXCISE.—See REVENUE, 2.

EXECUTION.—See BANKRUPTCY, 25, 26; COMPANY, 36; SHERIFF.

EXECUTOR:—

1. Carrying on testator's business—Indemnity—Rights of creditors of testator and subsequent creditors of executors.—A testator's business was carried on for about three years by his executors after his death in accordance with the provisions of the will, and with the assent of the testator's creditors as well as of the beneficiaries, and was properly carried on.

Held, that the executors were entitled (in priority to claims by the testator's creditors) to be indemnified out of the testator's estate against the liabilities which they had properly incurred, and that the indemnity was not limited to that portion of the assets which had come into existence or changed its form since the testator's death.

The decision of the Court of Appeal (40 Ch. D. 536) varied accordingly.—Dowse v. Gorton, H.L. (E.)—[1891] A. C. 190; 64 L. T. 809.

2. Renunciation of probate by one executor—Power of selection of beneficiaries.—A testator by his will appointed three executors, and gave the residue of his estate to certain named charitable institutions, "or such others or additional as my executors herein named may select, to be divided in such proportions as they may approve of." One of the executors renounced probate.

Held (reversing the decision of Kekewich, J., 39 W. R. 412, 43 Ch. D. 643), that the executor who had renounced probate was not entitled to exercise the power, but that the power belonged to the two executors who had proved the will, in their official capacity, and was exercisable by them.

Keates v. Burton, 14 Ves. 434, approved.—In re Mainwaring, Crawford v. Forshaw, C.A. 684—[1891] 2 Ch. 261; 65 L. T. 32.

3. Residuary legatee—Distribution of residue—Shares in company—Liability for future calls—Indemnity—Executor's right to repayment—Married woman—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section (2)—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 16, 75.—Residue consisting of shares in a company, on which there was a liability for future calls, was handed over by the executor, with notice of such liability, to the residuary legatee, a married woman. Before a transfer of the shares was registered, a call was made, and the executor was compelled by the company to pay the call.

Held, that a liability for future calls was not a debt, and that, as no debt existed at the time the residue had been handed over, the executor was entitled to compel the residuary legatee to repay to the executor the amount of the calls.

Jervis v. Wolferstan, L. R. 18 Eq. 18, 22 W. R. Dig. 251, approved.

Held, also, that, although the residuary legatee was a married woman, and although her liability did not depend on any express or implied contract on her part, yet that she was liable to be sued as a feme sole by the executor, having regard to the words "or otherwise" in section 1, sub-section (2), of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, which enacts that "a married woman shall be capable of being sued either in contract or in tort, or otherwise."—In re Kershaw, Whitaker v. Kershaw, C.A. 22—45 Ch. D. 320; 60 L. J. Ch. 9; 63 L. T. 203.

4. Retainer—Receiver—Administration action by creditor.—The executor's right of retainer is not to be interfered with by the appointment of a receiver on the motion of creditors in an administration action, because the executor may and will probably exercise such right to the prejudice of the general body of creditors. To establish a case for the appointment of a receiver it must be shown that the assets are being wasted.

European Assurance Society v. Radcliffe, 26 W. R. 417, 7 Ch. D. 733, and Harris v. Harris, 35 W. R. 710, commented on and explained.—In re Wells, Molony v. Brooke, CH.D. STI., J. 139—45 Ch. D. 569; 59 L. J. Ch. 810; 63 L. T. 521.

5. Tenure of lands—Lease, whether chattel or freehold.—A demise of land for three lives named, "and afterwards with renewals of lives to subsist for and during the term of 150 years, and no longer, to be computed from 25th day of March, or 29th day of September, which would first or next happen after the death of the survivor or longest liver of the said cestuis que vies."

Held, after the death of the survivor to constitute a chattel interest.—In re O'Brien, V.C. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 372.

See also LANDLORD AND TENANT, 1; PROBATE, 15, 16; WILL, 22.

EXTRADITION:—

1. Description of offence—Foreign and English warrant—Embezzlement—Fraud by a bailee or agent—Money intrusted for safe custody—Extradition Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 52), Schedule—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), ss. 75, 76.—In proceedings under the Extradition Acts it is not necessary that the description of the offence in the English warrant should correspond in terms with the description in the foreign warrant. It is sufficient for the purposes of extradition if evidence has been brought against the prisoner in the foreign country establishing a crime by the law of that country, and the same facts establish a crime by English law.

An attorney or agent who has received money from a client on the understanding that he is to invest it when a suitable investment has been found, both attorney and client in the meantime seeking for such investment, has received the money "for safe custody," and, if he misappropriates it, is guilty of an offence under section 76 of the Larceny Act, 1861.

Remarks on the English and French criminal law.—In re Bellencontre, Q.B.D. 381—[1891] 2 Q. B. 122; 60 L. J. M. C. 83; 64 L. T. 461.

2. "Offence of a political character"—Habeas corpus—Jurisdiction of magistrate—Extradition Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 52), s. 3.—An offence of "a political character," for which a fugitive criminal is not to be surrendered under any treaty incorporating the provisions of the Extradition Act, 1870, s. 3 (1), is any criminal act, as specified within the section "incidental to and forming part of a political disturbance."

Upon an application for a writ of habeas corpus, the court before whom the application is made has power to review the whole evidence brought before it, whether such evidence was brought before the magistrate who committed the fugitive criminal or not.—Ex parte Castioni, Q.B.D. 202—[1891] 1 Q. B. 149; 60 L. J. M. C. 22; 64 L. T. 344.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT:—

Arrest by a servant—Manager of public-house bar—Liability of master.—The plaintiff, with a friend, went into a public-house, in which N., a servant of the defendant's, was barman and acted as manager of the bar. The plaintiff's friend gave to N., in payment of liquor supplied to him and the plaintiff, a German ten-mark piece in lieu of a half-sovereign. N. went for change, but, on discovering that the coin was a foreign one, brought it back and got an English half-sovereign in return. On the plaintiff and his friend leaving the public-house, N. followed them out and gave them both into custody for attempting to pass false coin. The charge was dismissed. Upon an action by the plaintiff against the defendant, as master of N., for false imprisonment, the only evidence of any authority in N. to give suspected persons into custody was the fact that he was manager of the bar.

Held, that there was no evidence of any liability in the defendant for the action of his servant.

Owston v. Bank of New South Wales (decided by the Privy Council), 4 App. Cas. 270, 27 W. R. Dig. 156, approved and adopted.—Abrahams v. Deakin, C.A. 183—[1891] 1 Q. B. 516; 60 L. J. Q. B. 238; 63 L. T. 690.

FEE FARM GRANT:—

Reservation of mines and minerals—Limestone—Compensation for damage.—By an indenture lands were granted in fee farm with the appurtenances, reserving to the grantor all mines and minerals.

Held, affirming the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor, that beds of limestone were included in the words "mines and minerals," whether got by quarrying or surface working; and that, though the deed did not contain any provision for compensation, that defect was supplied by the Irish Act 10 Geo. 1, c. 5.—Fishbourne v. Hamilton, C.A. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 483.

FERRY.—See FRANCHISE.

FISHERY ACTS:—

Fixed nets—Certificate—32 & 33 Vict. c. 92—Justices—Jurisdiction.—In the year 1870 the inspectors of Irish fisheries certified that certain fixed engines were legal, that they consisted of six draft nets of from 150 to 250 yards in length, situate in the tideway of the river M., as enumerated on the schedule thereunto annexed, and that A. and B. had the right to erect same in pursuance of the provisions of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 105. The schedule specified fixed draft nets used opposite twenty-eight named townlands in the counties of Mayo and Sligo, of the length opposite one townland of 150 yards, and opposite the remaining townland of 250 yards.

In 1890 the defendants, who were the successors in title to A. and B., fished at the places opposite the townlands included in the schedule with nets of the description specified, not using more than six nets at the same time, but shifting the nets to various fishing-stations in the tideway of the river M., according as the tide served from time to time. The defendants having been prosecuted at petty sessions by one of the public for such fishing, which the complainant alleged was illegal on the grounds (a) that the certificate was defective in form; (b) that even if valid it would not justify the shifting of the nets, the magistrate dismissed the complaint, but stated a case for the opinion of the Divisional Court.

Held, that it was not open to the magistrate to entertain any question as to the validity of the certificate; that defendants' mode of fishing was authorized by the certificate; and that the case had been properly dismissed by the magistrate.—Wilson v. Moy Fishery Co., Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 320.

FRANCHISE:—

Ferry — Charter. — A charter from the Crown granting "all our ferriages and passages" over certain rivers conveys only ferries existing at the date of the grant, and does not confer on the grantees a right to create new ferries over those rivers.

Hemphill v. M'Kenna, 8 Ir. L. R. 43, distinguished. — Londonderry Bridge Commissioners v. M'Keever, M.R. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 86.

See COUNTY COURT, 9.

FRANCHISE (ELECTORS).—See PARLIAMENT, 1—13.

FRAUDS, STATUTE of. — See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, 2.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE:—

Purchaser for value without notice—Interest under the deed—13 Eliz. c. 5, s. 6.—Section 6 of 13 Eliz. c. 5 includes a purchaser for value without notice of any interest under a fraudulent deed, whether that interest be legal or equitable, and prevents the deed from being void as against him. — Halifax Joint-Stock Banking Co. v. Gledhill, CH.D. KAY, J. 104—[1891] 1 Ch. 31; 60 L. J. Ch. 181; 63 L. T. 623.

FRIENDLY SOCIETY:—

1. Arbitration under rules of Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), s. 22—Motion to High Court to set aside award—Jurisdiction of the High Court—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 11, sub-section 2.—The appellant, a member of a friendly society, having met with an accident, applied to his society for relief. His claim was refused, and under the rules of the society the dispute was referred to arbitrators, who decided against him.

Held, on appeal, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to interfere in the matter.—In re Gollings and the Tradesmen's Friendly Society, Q.B.D. —64 L. T. 775.

2. Misappropriation by officer — Conviction and order for repayment—Imprisonment for default—Remedy by action—Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), s. 16, sub-section 9.—The defendant, an officer of a friendly society, was charged under section 16, sub-section 9, of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, with misappropriation of certain money. He was convicted and ordered to pay a penalty and to repay the money, and, in default of compliance with this order, he was imprisoned for two months, with hard labour. An action having afterwards been instituted against him to recover the misappropriated money,

Held, that his conviction and punishment under the statute were a bar to the remedy by action.—Vernon and Others v. Watson, C.A. 519—[1891] 2 Q. B. 288; 60 L. J. Q. B. 472; 64 L. T. 728.

GAMING:—

Betting—Bet—Lottery—Prize for naming winners of horse races—Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1, 3, 4—Betting Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 15), s. 3, sub-section (3)—42 Geo. 3, c. 119, s. 2—4 Geo. 4, c. 60, s. 41.—A newspaper proprietor published weekly a book of racing intelligence, which contained a coupon announcing that sums of money would be given to persons who correctly inserted the names of the winning horses in certain races (named on the coupon) which were to take place in the ensuing week. The book, with the coupon, was sold at the price of one penny.

Held, that the transaction was not a bet or a lottery within the Betting Acts, 1853 and 1874, or the Acts 42 Geo. 3, c. 119, and 4 Geo. 4, c. 60.—Reg. v. Hulton, Q.B.D. 540—64 L. T. 572.

See also BANKRUPTCY, 32.

GIFT:—

1. Assignment of chattels—Subsequent voluntary assignment of same chattels—Covenant for title—Known defect—Remedy on covenant.—By a deed of gift dated in 1886 A. B. assigned certain chattels to X. absolutely. By a subsequent voluntary deed dated in 1888 A. B. assigned the same chattels to Y. absolutely, and covenanted with Y. that he had good title to assign the same free from incumbrances, and that he would warrant and defend the same unto Y. against all persons whomsoever. At the time of the execution of the deed of 1888 Y. was aware of the existence of the prior deed of 1886. On the death of A. B., X. asserted her title to the chattels, and brought an action against the executors of A. B. for the recovery thereof, which was compromised on the terms of the executors giving up the chattels to X. To assist the executors in carrying out this compromise Y. surrendered to them the chattels comprised in her deed.

In an action to administer the testator's estate Y. claimed a sum of £686 as compensation for the loss of the chattels so surrendered by her.

Held, that, inasmuch as the deed of 1888 constituted an assignment of the chattels themselves, and not merely of A. B.'s estate and interest in them, there had been a breach of the covenants, and that Y. was entitled to damages in respect of such breach.

Held, also, that, as the covenants extended to the particular defect of title, they extended to it none the less because the defect was known to Y. at the time of the execution of the deed of 1888.

Held, therefore, that there must be a reference to chambers to assess the damages.—In re Ford, Gilbert v. Gilbert, CH.D. STI., J.—63 L. T. 557.

2. Delivery—Chattel capable of delivery—Passing of property to donee—Delivery first and gift afterwards.—Delivery first and gift afterwards of a chattel capable of delivery is as effectual as gift first and delivery afterwards.—In re Alderson, Alderson v. Peel, CH.D. CHI., J.—64 L. T. 645.

"GOLD MINE."—See MINE, 1.

GRAND JURY CESS:—

Distress between sunset and sunrise—Legality.—It is legal to distrain for grand jury cess between sunset and sunrise.

M'Namara v. Apjohn (13 Ir. L. R. 394) distinguished.—Moynihan v. Denny, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R Ir. 272.

HABEAS CORPUS.—See CRIMINAL LAW (IRELAND), 1; EXTRADITION, 2; MARRIED WOMAN, 5; PRACTICE (APPEAL), 8, 9.

HARBOUR DUES.—See BANKRUPTCY (IRELAND), 5.

HEIRLOOMS.—See SETTLED LAND ACT, 4.

HIGHWAY:—

1. Justices — Appeal — Dismissal of complaint by magistrate—Right of appeal by complainant against acquittal—Party "aggrieved"—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 105.—There is no right of appeal against the dismissal of a complaint under the Highway Act, 1835, for obstructing a highway, as the words of section 105 of that Act, which give a right of appeal to the quarter sessions to any person who shall think himself aggrieved by any order, conviction, or judgment, or determination made, or by any matter or thing done by a justice of the peace in pursuance of the Act, apply only to the case of a conviction, and do not give any right of appeal in case of an acquittal.—Reg. v. Justices of London, Ex parte Fulham Vestry, Q.B.D. 11—25 Q. B. D. 357; 59 L. J. M. C. 146; 63 L. T. 243.

2. Main road — Highway authority — Highway district or area—District commissioners incorporated under a local Act—Application to county authority—Highway and Locomotive Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), ss. 13, 14, 15. — The commissioners of a district in the Fens of Norfolk appointed and incorporated under various local Acts for draining and enclosing lands and providing roads, applied to the county council, as the county authority, for an order, under section 15 of the Act of 1878, declaring a certain road in their district to be a main road.

Held, that the Act was so framed as to include only the three highway areas mentioned in section 14 and the highway authority within those areas, and did not extend to include an exceptional area and an exceptional authority. Both the commissioners and their district fell within this category, and the county authority was not bound to make the order sought.—Reg. v. The County Council of Norfolk, Q.B.D.—60 L. J. Q. B. 379.

3. Obstruction—Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 109—Costs.—A public bridle road and footway, fifteen feet wide, had been set out by an award which provided that the same should also be used as a private carriage and drift way by the owners of certain adjoining allotments. The plaintiffs, owners of these allotments, placed a bar across eleven and a half feet of the width of the way in order to preserve their exclusive right to the use of the way as a carriage and drift way, and brought an action for injunction against the surveyor of highways who had removed the barrier for the purpose of repairing the way.

Held, that the public had the right to the use of the whole length and breath of the way as a bridle road and footway.

Held, further, that section 109 of the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50) did not apply to such an action as this so as to entitle the defendant to costs as between attorney and client.—Pullin v. Deffel, CH.D. ROM., J.—64 L. T. 134.

4. Trees overhanging—Right of surveyor to lop, but not to top, trees—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 65.—By section 65 of the Highway Act, 1835, power is given to the surveyor, under certain conditions, "to prune and lop" trees adjoining the highway.

Held, that this gave him no right to "top" the trees by cutting off their tops, but only allowed him to cut off lateral branches.—Unwin v. Hanson, C.A. 587—[1891] 2 Q. B. 115; 60 L. J. Q. B. 571.

See also LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 3, 4.

HOUSE DUTY.—See REVENUE (INCOME TAX), 7.

HUSBAND and WIFE.—See MARRIED WOMAN.

See also ADMINISTRATION, 5; DIVORCE; EXECUTOR, 3; INNKEEPER, 1; PROBATE, 17; SETTLEMENT, 3; WILL, 33.

INCOME TAX.—See REVENUE, 3-8.

INDEMNITY:—

Separate estate — Judgment in foreign country—Contract to indemnify against. — The defendants agreed to indemnify a firm carrying on business in the Argentine Republic against all claims against them by B., the defendants being at liberty to use the firm's name in defending any action. An action was brought in England against the firm by B., and was defended by the defendants in the name of the firm. Judgment was given against the firm, of which the plaintiff, a married woman, was the sole surviving partner. The plaintiff resided in the Argentine Republic, and had no property in this country. In an action to enforce the contract of indemnity,

Held, that as the plaintiff was carrying on a trade it must be assumed, until the contrary was shown, that she had separate estate, and would, therefore, be liable to B.; but that, as the plaintiff had no property in this country, and as no steps had been taken to enforce the judgment in the Argentine Republic, she was not damnified, and there had been no breach of the contract of indemnity.—Eddowes v. Argentine Loan and Mercantile Agency Co., C.A.—63 L. T. 364.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.—See POOR RATE, 6.

INFANT:—

1. Access to children—Divorce—Guilty wife—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 27).—A divorce decree was made upon the petition of the husband on the ground of the wife's adultery; and by the decree nisi it was ordered that the infant child should remain in the custody of the petitioner until further order.

A summons was taken out by the mother in the Chancery Division asking for an order under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, that she might be allowed access to the child.

Held, that the Divorce Court had full power to make orders as to access, and that, whether there was also a discretionary power in the Chancery Division or not, it would not be exercised in a case in which an order dealing with the matter had already been made by the Divorce Court.—Manders v. Manders, CH.D. STI., J.—63 L. T. 627.

2. Guardian—Religious education—Abandonment of father's right—Ante-nuptial agreement as to religion of the children—Wishes of deceased parents—Costs.—Before the marriage of a Protestant with a Roman Catholic wife the husband and wife signed an undertaking that all the children of the marriage should be brought up Roman Catholics. There was only one child of the marriage, a girl, who, with the father's consent, was baptized as a Roman Catholic. When the child was about three years old the father, who was in destitution, died at the house of Miss M., a Protestant cousin of the wife, who was in good circumstances, and had been kind to the family. The father on his deathbed had commended his wife and child to her, and appointed no guardian. Soon after his death the child, with the consent of the mother, who was statutory guardian, went to live with and was maintained by Miss M., with whom she remained till she was seven years old, and there was a strong attachment between them. The mother then died without appointing a guardian. After her death her brother, who was a Roman Catholic, insisted that the child should be brought up a Roman Catholic, took her away from Miss M. by force, and sent her to America, whence she was brought back under habeas corpus proceedings instituted by N., a Protestant brother of the father. Nothing had been said to Miss M. by either father or mother as to the religious education of the child.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (affirming the decision of Chitty, J.), that as the child had no parent or guardian the court had only to consider what was for her welfare, having due regard to the wishes of the father as to religious education; that the ante-nuptial agreement was not binding on the father, and that, though he acted during his life on the view that the child was to be brought up as a Roman Catholic, he was at liberty to change his mind, and that it could not be inferred that, in the events which had happened, he would have wished the child to be taken from Miss M. in order that she might be brought up a Roman Catholic—a course which, in the opinion of the court, would not be for her benefit. Miss M. and N. were, therefore, appointed guardians, and the child was delivered to Miss M., with liberty to bring her up as a Protestant.—In re Violet Nevin (An Infant), C.A.—[1891] 2 Ch. 299; 60 L. J. Ch. 542; 65 L. T. 35.

3. Maintenance—Contingent legacy—Income—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 43.—A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees in trust for sale, conversion, and investment, and out of the income of the investments to pay certain life annuities, and subject thereto the fund was to be held upon trust for all and every the present and future-born children of his two daughters respectively (except a specified son of one of them) who, whether in the testator's lifetime or after his death, being a son or sons, should have attained or should attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being a daughter or daughters, should have attained or should attain that age or should have married or should marry.

Held, that the whole surplus income belonged to those grandchildren who had attained twenty-one at the time it accrued, and that section 43 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, empowering trustees to apply for the maintenance of an infant the income of property held in trust for him contingently on attaining twenty-one, was not applicable to the case.—In re Jeffery, Burt v. Arnold, CH.D. NOR., J. 234—[1891] 1 Ch. 671; 60 L. J. Ch. 470; 64 L. T. 622.

4. Settlement—Confirmation or repudiation—Election—Compensation—Forfeiture—Infants' Relief Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 62), s. 2—Infants' Marriage Settlements Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 43).—A marriage settlement, dated the 16th of October, 1883, was made on the occasion of the marriage of two infants. The settlement was confirmed by the court on behalf of the wife, but not on behalf of the husband. By the settlement the husband's father covenanted with the trustees to pay £1,500 a year during the life of the wife and such further period as there should be any child or grandchild of the intended marriage, to be payable by equal quarterly instalments, such sum to be paid by them to the husband until he should assign, charge, or affect so to do, in which event there was a discretionary trust over. The settlement also contained a covenant by the husband that if, during the continuance of the annuity, he became entitled, under certain other settlements executed by his father, or under the will of either his father or his mother, to any property, he would assign the same to the trustees of his marriage settlement, in reduction of the amount of capital necessary to be set apart to meet the annuity.

The father, by his will dated the 22nd of November, 1878, gave the residue of his property equally between his two sons, one of whom was the husband in question. The testator died on the 14th of May, 1887. The husband attained his majority on the 19th of November, 1883, and received three instalments of the annuity, and paid over to the trustees of the settlement a sum received by him under one of the earlier settlements made by his father, but without prejudice to his right to repudiate the settlement. On the 31st of July, 1888, formal notice of repudiation by the husband, of the settlement of the 16th of October, 1883, was given to the trustees.

The trustees brought an action to have it declared that the husband could not repudiate, and that, if he could repudiate, compensation ought to be made by him out of any moneys payable to him under the settlement and out of the property which would have been comprised in his covenant if he had not repudiated.

Held, that the husband was entitled to repudiate the settlement, and had done so within a reasonable time of coming of age and acquiring a knowledge of his rights.

Held, that, as he had repudiated, he must make compensation out of his interests under the settlement and out of the property coming to him under his father's will.

Held, also, that such compensation, coming out of moneys payable to the husband under the settlement, operated as a forfeiture of his right to the annuity thereunder, and that the discretionary trust over took effect.

Codrington v. Codrington, 24 W. R. 648, L. R. 7 H. L. 854, followed.—Carter v. Silber, Carter v. Hasluck, CH.D. ROM., J. 552—65 L. T. 51.

5. Settlement—Covenant to settle after-acquired property—Infants' Settlement Act, 1855—Property in expectancy—Husband's covenant—Married Women's Property Act, 1882, ss. 2, 19.—By a marriage settlement made in 1883 the intending husband and wife each covenanted to bring into the settlement all the wife's after-acquired property. At the time of the marriage the wife was an infant, and the settlement was executed under the provisions of the Infants' Settlement Act, 1855. The wife, under her mother's will, became entitled in 1888 to the sum of £3,900.

Held, that the £3,900 was bound by the wife's covenant to settle her after-acquired property, under the Infants' Settlement Act, 1855.—In re Johnson, Moore v. Johnson, CH.D. NOR., J. 509—60 L. J. Ch. 499; 64 L. T. 696.

6. Settlement — Power of appointment — Absolute appointment—Failure of limitations of settlement—Resulting trust—Death of appointor under twenty-one—Infants' Settlement Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 43), ss. 1, 2.—A testatrix gave property to trustees upon trust to pay the income to her illegitimate daughter for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, and after the daughter's decease upon trust for such persons as the daughter should appoint, and, on default of appointment, in trust for the daughter's children.

After the death of the testatrix, the daughter, while still an infant, upon her marriage, made, with the sanction of the court under the Infants' Settlement Act, a settlement, by which, in exercise of the power of appointment given her by the testatrix, she appointed the property to trustees, who were not the same persons as the trustees of the testatrix's will, upon trust to pay the income to herself during the joint lives of her husband and herself, and to the survivor of them for his or her life, and after the death of the survivor upon trust for the children of the marriage as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and, in default, as the survivor should appoint, and, in default of children, for such persons as the wife should appoint, and, in default of such appointment, if the wife should survive the husband, in trust for the wife absolutely, and if she should not survive him, in trust for such persons as, under the Statutes of Distribution, would have become entitled thereto upon the death of the wife, had she died possessed thereof intestate and without having been married.

The wife died while still an infant and intestate, without having exercised the general power of appointment reserved to her by the settlement, and the husband took out letters of administration to her estate. There were no children of the marriage.

Held, that the power conferred on an infant by section 1 of the Infants' Marriage Settlement Act enables an infant to make an appointment which, on failure of the limitations of the settlement, will take effect in favour of the infant, and that section 2 of the Act, which invalidates a settlement by an infant on the subsequent death of the infant before attaining twenty-one, only applies to an infant tenant in tail, and, therefore, that the appointment made by the illegitimate daughter by her marriage settlement, being absolute in terms, operated, on failure of the limitations of the settlement because of the fact that the daughter, being illegitimate, could have no next of kin, to make the property her own absolutely; and that, consequently, her husband was entitled to it as her administrator, and not the next of kin of her mother.—In re Scott, Scott v. Hanbury, CH.D. NOR., J. 264—[1891] 1 Ch. 298; 60 L. J. Ch. 461; 63 L. T. 800.

7. Ward of court—Entering convent.—A female ward of court should not become a postulant or novice in a convent without the consent of the Lord Chancellor.—In re Gills (Minors), L.C. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 129.

8. Ward of court—Sergeant-at-arms—Officer attending the Chancery Division of the High Court.—The sergeant-at-arms attending the court is the proper officer to whom an order for the delivery up of the person of a ward of court should be directed. Such an order should be countersigned by the Lord Chancellor.—In re An Infant, CH.D. CHI., J.—64 L. T. 732.

See also APPRENTICE; BANKRUPTCY, 28; DIVORCE, 1, 9—11, 17; MARRIED WOMAN, 11.

INNKEEPER:—

1. Lien—Husband and wife guests at inn—Credit given to husband—Lien on wife's goods belonging to her as her separate property.—Where a husband and wife have come to an inn to stay as guests, bringing goods with them, the innkeeper's lien for his charges attaches to the whole of such goods, including any that are the wife's separate property, although the innkeeper may be unable successfully to sue the wife in respect of her separate estate, by reason of his having giving credit to the husband alone.—Gordon v. Silber, Q.B.D. 111—25 Q. B. D. 491; 59 L. J. Q. B. 507; 63 L. T. 283.

2. Loss of guests' property—Liability—Onus of proof—26 & 27 Vict. c. 41, s. 1.—The plaintiff arrived early in the morning at the defendants' hotel (which was entitled to the benefit of 26 & 27 Vict. c. 41) and asked for a bedroom. He was told that the hotel was full, but that there was one room then vacant, which had been engaged by a lady and gentleman who were expected to arrive in the course of the day, and that he could make use of it for the purpose of washing and dressing. He was then shown to the room, and his luggage, including a dressing bag, was taken into it by the hotel porter. After entering the room the plaintiff opened the bag and took out of it a stand which contained brushes and other articles of the toilet. In the drawer of the stand were some valuable trinkets. The plaintiff placed the stand on the dressing table in the room. When he had finished washing and dressing he went downstairs to the coffee-room and had breakfast. He left the door of the bedroom unlocked, and he left the stand of the dressing bag just as it was on the table. He paid for his breakfast, left the hotel, and did not return till about midnight. About nine p.m. the lady and gentleman who had engaged the room arrived, and were shown to it by the page boy of the hotel. By the direction of the head porter the boy moved all the plaintiff's luggage, including the stand, out of the room into the corridor, and left it there. When the plaintiff returned to the hotel another bedroom, which had meanwhile become vacant, was given to him, and his luggage was moved from the corridor into this room. The next morning the plaintiff discovered that his trinkets had been stolen from the drawer of the stand. He brought an action against the defendants for damages for the loss of the trinkets. There was no evidence to show whether the trinkets were stolen while the stand was in the bedroom or after it had been placed in the corridor.

Held (by Lord Esher, M.R., and Bowen, L.J.), that the plaintiff was received as a guest into the hotel, and that the relation of innkeeper and guest continued until a reasonable time after the plaintiff's goods had been placed in the corridor, and that, if the trinkets were stolen while the stand was in the bedroom, there was contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff; but that if they were stolen while the stand was in the corridor, the loss was due solely to the negligence of the defendants in placing it there.

But, held, that inasmuch as it was not proved whether the trinkets were stolen in the bedroom or in the corridor, the defendants were, under section 1 of the Act, liable up to the amount of £30, because they could not discharge the onus which lay on them of showing that the plaintiff's negligence had contributed to the loss.

Held, also, that beyond the amount of the £30 the defendants were not liable, because, for the same reason, the plaintiff could not discharge the onus which was cast upon him by section 1 of showing that the loss had occurred "through the wilful act, default, or neglect" of the defendants.

Held, by Fry, L.J., that the plaintiff was not a guest in the hotel at the time when the loss occurred, and that, therefore, the defendants were not liable at all.

enlarged holding has not the effect of destroying the present tenancy or the rights attached thereto.

But as in such a case there are separate and distinct tenancies existing in the newly-acquired parcel of land and in the original holding, they cannot be included in the same originating notice. —Jackson v. Fagan, LAND COM. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 326.

8b. "Present tenancy"—Lease made after passing of Act and before January 1, 1883—Tenancy existing at passing of Act—Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, ss. 8, 57.—A tenant holding under a lease executed between the 22nd of August, 1881, and the 1st of January, 1883, of lands in which a tenancy was subsisting on the 22nd of August, 1881, is a "present tenant," and entitled to apply to have a fair rent fixed.

Ronaldson v. La Touche, 24 L. R. Ir. 344, discussed.—Magner v. Hawkes, LAND COM. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 365.

9. Rent—Fair rent fixed after Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887—Originating notice served before Act—Time for commencement of judicial rent.—A judicial rent, fixed after the passing of the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887, upon an originating notice served prior to the passing of the Act, runs from the gale-day next after the service of the originating notice.—Sutton v. Walsh, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—26 L. R. Ir. 629.

10. Rent—Fair rent—Letting for agricultural purposes—Power in landlord to resume portion of holding for building purposes—Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, s. 58, sub-section 7—Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887, s. 1.—A lease of sixty-five acres of agricultural lands for thirty-one years contained a proviso for resumption of possession by the landlord during the lease of five acres in any part of the holding for building purposes at a certain reduction of rent per acre. The landlord did not resume possession of any part of the lands.

Held, that the tenant was entitled to serve an originating notice to fix a fair rent.

Butterly v. Carroll, 26 L. R. Ir. 93, and Leonard v. Barry, MacDev. Rep. 240, distinguished.—Mooney v. Willcocks, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 113.

11. Rent—Fair rent—Tenant bonâ fide in occupation of entire holding—Prior sub-letting of part—Subsequent change of tenancy—Proviso permitting subletting—Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 49), ss. 21, 27.—In 1841 a lease of two-thirds of a farm was executed, which lease expired in 1878. In 1844 a lease to the same tenant of the remaining one-third of the farm was executed, and in 1869 this lease was renewed for sixty years. Both leases contained a provision enabling the lessee to sublet without the consent of the landlord. The interest of the tenant became vested in M., who held the two-thirds as tenant from year to year after the expiration of the lease of 1841 in 1878, and the one-third under the lease of 1869. Prior to 1841 B. was in possession of five acres of the farm as tenant from year to year, and he died before 1866, when his son entered and paid rent, but no personal representative was raised to B. In 1886 M. served notice to fix a fair rent of the two-thirds, and in 1887 he served notice to fix a fair rent of the one-third.

Held, that B. having died more than twenty years before the notice to fix a fair rent, the tenancy from year to year vested in him was extinguished by the Statute of Limitations; that the tenancy from year to year vested in B.'s son must be deemed a new subletting by M. with the consent of the landlord (the consent being given by permission to sublet in the original leases); and that M. was, therefore, bonâ fide in occupation of the holding.—Jackson v. M'Master, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 176.

12. Sale of tenancy—Execution creditor—Purchase-money—Arrears of rent—Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, s. 1.—Where a tenant's interest in his holding is sold under section 1 of the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, in pursuance of a writ of fi. fa., the landlord is entitled to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale all arrears of rent due to him in priority to the execution creditor.—Waldron v. Sutcliffe, C.A. (Ir.) —26 L. R. Ir. 444.

13. Sale of tenancy—Sale of portion of holding—Landlords' right of pre-emption—Specific performance—Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, ss. 1, 2.—The plaintiff agreed to purchase from the defendants a portion of certain lands held by them under a judicial tenancy, together with another portion of the lands, subject to a condition of sale that, under the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, the landlord of the holding for sale had a right of pre-emption, and also a right to object to the purchaser on reasonable grounds; and that if the landlord should claim the right of pre-emption, or make a valid objection to the purchaser, the sale should be of no effect. The landlord having claimed to exercise his right of pre-emption, and having served a notice objecting to the purchaser, the defendants refused to carry out the sale. In an action for specific performance, Held, that section 1 of the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, applies to the sale of a portion of a holding, and that the landlord may claim a right of pre-emption; that such a sale comes within section 2, and is illegal without the consent of the landlord; and that specific performance must be refused.—Murtagh v. Allen, V.C. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 118.

14. Sale of tenancy — Landlord's right of pre-emption—Notice by tenant to sell—Notice by landlord to purchase—Equities created by tenant—Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 49), s. 1, sub-sections 1, 2, 3; s. 8, sub-section 5.—If a tenant, who has had a fair rent fixed under the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881, serves notice on the landlord of his intention to sell his tenancy in the holding, and the landlord serves notice of his intention to exercise his right of pre-emption, the tenant cannot withdraw his notice of intention to sell, or defeat the landlord's right to purchase, and any equities created by the tenant, such as an ante-nuptial agreement made after the order fixing a fair rent to assign the holding to his wife at his death, cannot interfere with the landlord's rights.—Farrelly v. Waller, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 122.

15. Surrender by middleman—Trustees having no power of sale—Appointment of trustees—Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887, s. 8—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2 (8), 38.—A tenant for life desired to exercise the power of surrender given to a middleman by section 8 (6) of the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1887, but the trustees of the settlement had no power of sale.

The court appointed new trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1882, limiting the appointment to the lands intended to be surrendered. —In re Mulcahy's Estate, M.R. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 78.

LANDS CLAUSES ACT:—

1. Purchase-money — Minerals — Settled estate — Tenant for life unimpeachable for waste — Remainderman — Apportionment — Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), ss. 7, 9, 69, 70.—A tenant for life, though unimpeachable for waste, is not entitled to any portion of the corpus of the compensation-money paid in respect of minerals sold by him to a railway company under the powers conferred by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 7.

In re Barrington, Gamlen v. Lyon, 35 W. R. 164, 33 Ch. D. 523, distinguished.—In re Robinson's Settlement Trusts, CH.D. CHI., J. 632.

2. Purchase-money—Payment of purchase-money into court—Payment out to person in possession—Land sold as freehold—Leasehold title adduced—Absence of claim by reversioner—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 79.—G., whose house had been compulsorily taken in 1865 by a public body in pursuance of powers conferred upon them by Acts of Parliament, had claimed to be the owner of the house in fee, but could only adduce a title to the residue of a long term of years expiring in 1878, and the purchasers paid into court a sum representing the value of the reversion in fee. G., after the expiration of twelve years from the end of the term, claimed to be entitled to have the money in court paid to him (he having already received the value of the leasehold interest) as being the person "in possession" of the house within the meaning of section 79 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, it not being known who the reversioner was.

Held, that G., never having been in possession of the reversion, was not so entitled.

Ex parte Chamberlain, 28 W. R. 565, 14 Ch. D. 323, doubted.

Decision of North, J. (35 S. J. 295), affirmed.—Gedye v. Commissioners of Public Works, C.A. 598—[1891] 2 Ch. 630; 60 L. J. Ch. 587.

See also POOR RATE, 2, 3; UNIVERSITY, 1, 2.

LEGACY DUTY.—See REVENUE, 9.

LEGITIMACY DECLARATION ACT:—

Legitimacy Declaration Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 93)—Motion for directions—Practice.—The court dismissed, with costs, an application, made upon motion, by the petitioner in a legitimacy declaration suit, asking for leave to cite a certain person, other than the Attorney-General, and for directions; such motion being contrary to the practice in such cases, as settled in Brinckley v. Attorney-General, 14 P. D. 83, 60 L. T. N. S. 935.—Bain v. The Attorney-General, P.D. & A.D.—64 L. T. 837.

LICENSING ACTS:—

1. Beerhouse — Indoor beer licence — Renewal — Notice of opposition—Conviction as evidence of bad character—Jurisdiction of justices—Limitation to four grounds—32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, s. 8.—O., the holder of an indoor beer licence which existed before 1869, received due notice before the general annual licensing meeting of opposition to the renewal on the ground merely that he had been convicted. The justices having refused the renewal on the first ground set forth in 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, s. 8, O. appealed to quarter sessions and produced witnesses who gave evidence of his good character. The quarter sessions dismissed the appeal, though they expressed the opinion that O. had proved his good character.

Held, that the notice of opposition was sufficiently definite; that, as the conviction was some evidence on the first of the aforesaid four grounds, there was no sufficient reason for ordering by mandamus that the quarter sessions should hear and determine the matter again.—In re O'Brien, Reg. v. Justices of Lancashire, Q.B.D.—64 L. T. 562.

2. Licence—Change of occupation—Licence to new tenant under the Licensing Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 14—Application for a second licence under same section—Jurisdiction of justices.—J., the tenant of a beerhouse licensed previous to 1869, being about to go out of possession, abstained from applying for a renewal at the annual general meeting held on the 30th of August, 1890. R. came into possession of the house as new tenant on the 5th of September, when J. left. Upon the 27th of September R. applied to the justices in special session for a licence to him as "new tenant" under section 14 of the Licensing Act, 1828, up to the ensuing 10th of October, but omitted to apply to the adjourned general brewster sessions, held on the same day, for a renewal to him of J.'s annual licence subsequent to the 10th of October. At the next special session, on the 3rd of January, 1891, R. again applied for a licence under the same section 14.

Held, affirming the Divisional Court (A. L. Smith and Grantham, JJ.), that R. was no longer, on the 3rd of January, 1891, a "new tenant" within section 14 of the Licensing Act, 1828, nor could he claim the benefit of that section on the other ground, that the former tenant had failed to apply, since he himself had neglected to apply, as he might have done, at the adjourned general meeting; and that the justices were right, therefore, in holding that their jurisdiction under that section had already been exhausted in R.'s case.—Reg. v. Justices of Swansea, C.A. 630.

3. Licence—Provisional grant — Final order — Variation in approved plans—Substantial variation—"In accordance with the plans"—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 37—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 22.—A provisional licence was granted upon plans which had been approved, and it became necessary, owing to the slope of the ground, to make certain alterations in the plans. The premises, having been completed, the justices refused an application for a final order on the ground that the house was not built "in accordance with the plans" within section 22 of the Licensing Act, 1874, and that they had no jurisdiction to grant the final order.

Held, that "in accordance with the plans" means in substantial accordance, and that the premises, having been completed as nearly as possible under the circumstances in accordance with the plans, the justices had power to grant the final order.—Reg. v. Pownall and Others, Q.B.D.—63 L. T. 418.

4. Licence—Renewal—Discretion of justices—Licensing Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 1—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 42—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 26.—Licensing justices have an absolute judicial discretion to grant or refuse an application for the renewal of a licence under the Licensing Acts, 1828, 1872, and 1874.—Sharpe v. Wakefield, H.L. (E.) 561—[1891] A. C. 173; 60 L. J. M. C. 73; 64 L. T. 181.

5. Offence—Sale of beer in measure not marked as an imperial measure—Conviction—Licensing Act, 1874 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 8.—A publican supplied to a customer, at the request of the customer, what was known as a "blue" of beer, which was a quantity of beer in a blue jug, more than half a pint and about one-third of a quart. At the time of the sale there were conspicuously posted up in the room notices that the vessel called a "blue" was not represented as containing any amount of imperial measure, or as being a measure of imperial standard, and in fact the vessel was not an imperial measure or marked as such.

Held, that the publican had, under section 8 of the Licensing Act, 1872, committed the offence of selling intoxicating liquor, not being a quantity less than half a pint, in a measure not marked according to the imperial standards, and that he was properly convicted of the same.—Payne v. Thomas, Q.B.D. 240—60 L. J. M. C. 3; 63 L. T. 456.

LIEN. — See INNKEEPER, 1; SALE OF GOODS; SOLICITOR, 13, 14, 15.

LIGHT:—

1. Crown—Crown land — Sale by trustees—Prerogative—Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), ss. 1-3.—Land was held in trust for the Crown from a period prior to the Prescription Act. The Crown is not named in section 3 of that Act.

Held, that no prescriptive right to the access of light over the land to adjoining buildings had been acquired against the Crown during its beneficial ownership, although the legal estate therein was not vested in the Crown, and that purchasers from the Crown were entitled to build thereon so as to interfere with the access of light.—Perry v. Eames, Salaman v. Eames, Mercers' Co. v. Eames, CH.D. CHI., J. 602—[1891] 1 Ch. 658; 60 L. J. Ch. 345; 64 L. T. 438.

2. Derogation from grant—Grant of vacant land—Building contemplated by parties to grant—Covenant as to windows looking out on land of grantor—Implied obligation not to obstruct lights.—In 1875 W. conveyed land to the trustees of a religious body who were desirous of erecting a chapel thereon. The deed of conveyance set forth fully the trusts upon which the grantees were to hold the land, including trusts to erect a chapel in such manner as the grantees should, with the sanction of the religious body, deem necessary or expedient, and trusts in certain events to let, sell, or mortgage the land and buildings; the conveyance also contained a covenant by the grantees with W. that all windows in the chapel looking out on other land of W. should be of fluted or ground glass.

There were no buildings upon the land at the date of the grant, and no plans or specifications of the proposed chapel were submitted to W. for his approval.

In February, 1878, the grantees commenced to build a chapel, having windows looking out upon the land retained by W. In November, 1878, W. entered into an agreement to sell this land; and it was shortly afterwards conveyed by him to the defendants, who in May, 1890, commenced to build thereon in such a manner as to obstruct the light of the chapel.

Held, that W. had, in effect, given permission to the trustees of the chapel to erect such a building as they thought fit; and that, the chapel having been erected in a reasonable manner, neither W. nor his assigns could complain of the position of the chapel or of the way in which it was lighted.

Held, that, it having been within the contemplation of the parties to the conveyance of 1875 that a chapel would be built on the land conveyed, having windows looking out on the land retained by W., W. and his assigns were under an implied obligation not to do anything to obstruct such windows. —Bailey v. Icke, CH.D. KEK., J.—64 L. T. 789.

3. Obstruction—Probable future damage—Injunction.—Where ancient lights are obstructed so as to cause damage, not present, but likely to accrue within a reasonable time, the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction, and not merely to damages; and the possible future use of the house must be taken into consideration in determining the question.—Dicker v. Popham, Radford, & Co., CH.D. KEK., J.—63 L. T. 379.

See also PRACTICE (INJUNCTION), 41.

LIMITATIONS, STATUTE of:—

1. Conversion—Accrual of cause of action—Title deeds. — The plaintiff's son, having wrongfully obtained possession of a lease of certain premises of which the plaintiff was in possession, deposited it in 1881 with B. to secure an advance. B. having afterwards become bankrupt, his trustee in 1889 transferred the lease to the defendant. The plaintiff demanded the return of the lease, and the defendant refused to give it up.

Held, that the cause of the action against the defendant did not accrue to the plaintiff until the demand and refusal to give up the lease; and therefore that the Statute of Limitations was no bar to the action.

Wilkinson v. Verity, 19 W. R. 604, L. R. 6 C. P. 206, explained.—Miller v. Dell, C.A. 342—[1891] 1 Q. B. 468; 60 L. J. Q. B. 404; 63 L. T. 693.

2. Interest on legacies charged on land—Time from which interest is to be computed—Statute of Limitations (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 47), s. 42—102*nd General Order in Chancery*, 1843.—In an action to raise the amount due on an equitable mortgage, instituted by the mortgagee, the lands were sold and realized more than sufficient to pay the plaintiff's claim and costs.

An order having been made directing inquiries as to other incumbrances on the lands sold and their priorities, claims were brought in by legatees entitled to legacies charged on the lands. The question being as to the date from which interest on these legacies should be computed,

Held, that under the 102nd General Order in Chancery, 1843, the claim of the legatees was a proceeding by way of suit within section 42 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 47, and that the legatees were only entitled to interest on the legacies for six years prior to the commencement of the action.—Archdall v. Anderson, V.C. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 433.

3. Legacy—Assent of executor—Implied trust—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 8.—The time for bringing an action or other proceeding to recover any legacy is limited by section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, to a period of twelve years next after the accruer of a present right to receive the same; and neither the fact that the executor has assented to the legacy, or that the legacy is coupled with any implied trust, prevents the operation of the statute.—In re Davis, Evans v. Moore, C.A. 627.

4. Mortgage of reversionary interests in personal estate—Covenant for payment of mortgage debt—Personal remedy on covenant—Remedy against property forming security—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), ss. 2, 8.—In 1870 A., B., and C. mortgaged certain reversionary shares in a fund in court to which B. and C. were entitled under a will to secure the repayment by A. of a sum of £70. The mortgage contained a joint and several covenant by A. and C. for repayment of principal and interest. In 1873 the mortgagee recovered judgment against C. on her covenant. In 1889 the reversionary interests fell into possession. No interest had ever been paid on the mortgage or judgment, nor had any acknowledgment been given.

Held, that although the personal remedy against

C. was barred by the Statute of Limitations, the assignment of the property comprised in the mortgage was nevertheless good.

Held, therefore, that the mortgagee was entitled to C.'s share of the property under the will.—In re Lake's Trusts, CH.D. STI., J.—63 L. T. 416.

5. Petition for sale in Landed Estates Court—Effect of—Dismissal—Extension of receiver.—The Statute of Limitations ceases to run, pending a petition for sale in the Landed Estates Court, against all claims properly put forward in the petition. It does not cease to run when the claim is made in some other independent suit or action.

When a petition is dismissed the statute must be taken to have been running all the time, as if the petition had not been filed.

The extension to a receiver to an incumbrance, without any payment thereon, has no greater effect than has the order for sale.—Irish Land Commission v. Davies, L.J. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 334.

6. Simple contract debt—Cause of action—Accruer of—21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3.—By an agreement in writing, dated the 25th of April, 1880, the defendant, in consideration of a sum of money advanced by the plaintiff, stipulated to pay interest thereon by equal quarterly payments, and the plaintiff stipulated not to call in the principal sum for five years if the defendant should so long live and should duly pay the interest. The agreement contained a proviso that, if the defendant died before the expiration of the five years, it should be lawful for the plaintiff to call in the principal upon giving six months' notice to the defendant's executors; and a further proviso that, in case the defendant made default in any payment of interest for twenty-one days after the same became payable, the plaintiff, immediately upon the expiration of the twenty-one days, might call in the principal and all interest owing in respect thereof.

No payment, either of interest or principal, was ever made by the defendant. On the 13th of February, 1891, the plaintiff brought an action to recover the principal sum and also so much of the interest as had accrued thereon since the 13th of February, 1885 (being a period of six years before the issue of the writ). The defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), s. 3.

Held, that the cause of action arose on the expiration of twenty-one days from the 25th of July, 1880, the date when the first quarterly payment of interest became payable, and that the plaintiff's claim was, therefore, barred by the statute.

Hemp v. Garland, 4 Q. B. 519, approved.—Reeves v. Butcher, C.A. 626—[1891] 2 Q. B. 509.

See also PARTNERSHIP, 3; PRACTICE (WRIT), 63; TRUSTEE, 3.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT:—

1. "Buildings" — New building — Bye-laws by urban authority—Ground enclosed by hoardings erected for advertisements—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 157.—An advertising company surrounded on three of its sides a piece of ground within a borough with boarded walls or hoardings raised to a height of from thirteen to nineteen feet. These hoardings were stayed, fastened, and tied together, and strengthened on the inner side. The space enclosed was used for the preparation of wood for other hoardings.

Held, that this structure was not a new building within a bye-law in force within the borough made in pursuance of section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875.—Slaughter v. Mayor, &c., of Sunderland, Q.B.D.—60 L. J. M. C. 91.

2. County council—Borough rate—County fund—Costs of quarter sessions and petty sessions in boroughs with populations of 10,000 or upwards having a separate court of quarter sessions — Costs of quarter sessions and petty sessions in boroughs with populations under 10,000 having a separate court of quarter sessions—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 169, 248, sub-sections 2, 5—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 35, sub-sections 2, 5; s. 38, sub-section 5; s. 100.—Held, that under the Local Government Act, 1888, where the population of a borough having a separate court of quarter sessions is 10,000 or upwards, the expenses of quarter and petty sessions are payable out of the borough rates; where the population is less than 10,000, out of the county rates.—Ex parte County Council of Kent and Council of Dover; Ex parte County Council of Kent and Council of Sandwich, Q.B.D.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 389; 60 L. J. Q. B. 314; 64 L. T. 421.

NOTE.—This case went to the Court of Appeal, but the appeal was dismissed on the ground that no appeal lay: see PRACTICE, 10.

3. County council—Main road—Roadside wastes—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 11, sub-sections 1, 6.—Strips of waste land adjoining a main road are "roadside wastes" within the meaning of sub-section 1 of section 11 of the Local Government Act, 1888, and are not, like the main road, vested in the county council by sub-section 6 of that section; and, consequently, the county council have no right to the herbage of such strips of waste land.—Curtis v. Kesteven County Council, CH.D. NOR., J. 199—45 Ch. D. 504; 60 L. J. Ch. 103; 63 L. T. 543.

4. County council—Main road—Road authority—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 3—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 11.—A county council continues to be the road authority under the Tramways Act, 1870, over main roads, notwithstanding a contract made by the county council with a highway board for the repair of such roads by the board.—Stockport and Hyde Highway Board v. County Council of Cheshire, Q.B.D. 606.

5. County council—Qualification of member—Election of women—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 41, 73—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41).—By section 73 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (which is made applicable to the elections of county councillors by the Local Government Act, 1888), every election not called in question within twelve months after the election shall be deemed to have been to all intents a good and valid election. By section 41 penalties are imposed on any person acting in a corporate office without due qualification.

The defendant, a woman, was elected a member of a county council, and, twelve months after her election, which had not in the meanwhile been called in question, she took part in the proceedings of the council.

Held, that, even if the effect of section 73 were to render her election valid, she was nevertheless disqualified as a woman from acting, and was therefore liable to the penalties imposed by section 41.—De Souza v. Cobden, C.A. 454—[1891] 1 Q. B. 687; 60 L. J. Q. B. 533.

6. County council—Quarter sessions—Standing joint committee—Police districts—Police Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 88), ss. 3, 27—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 3, 9, 28, 30, 81.—The power of altering police districts, which, under the Police Act, 1840, was vested in quarter sessions, is transferred by the Local Government Act, 1888, to the standing joint committee.—In re Local Government Act, 1888, Ex parte Leicestershire County Council, Q.B.D. 160—[1891] 1 Q. B. 53; 60 L. J. M. C. 45; 64 L. T. 25.

7. Insanitary dwellings—Demolition of—Compensation—Basis of arbitration—Liverpool Sanitary Amendment Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. lxxiii.) ss. 5-13—Local Government Board Provisional Orders Confirmation Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. cir.)—By a presentment of the grand jury at the Liverpool City Sessions, under the provisions of the Liverpool Sanitary Amendment Act, 1864, certain houses were condemned as unfit for human habitation. In the proceedings which followed to determine the amount of compensation to be paid to the owner, the arbitrator made his award on the basis of the value of the site and materials of the houses only.

Held, that the houses ought to have been valued as they stood before demolition, and without reference to the fact of their approaching demolition, as premises which might have been let; and that their value was unaffected by the presentment of the grand jury.—Gough v. The Corporation of Liverpool, Q.B.D.—64 L. T. 596.

8. Line of buildings—Buildings in streets—House in course of erection—"Front main wall of building"—"On either side thereof"—"In the same street"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 156—Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 52), s. 3.—In considering which is the "front main wall" of a house or building for the purpose of section 3 of the Public Health (Building in Streets) Act, 1888, and whether such house or building is "on either side of" or "in the same street" as a house or building in course of erection, for the purpose of the same section, all the circumstances of the case must be taken into consideration. The building must be looked at as a whole; its character, its position, its distance from the house or building which is being erected or brought forward in alleged contravention of section 3, must be considered; a particular wing or other projection must not be selected, the front of which is to be treated as the "front main wall" which is to give the governing line; nor are two buildings necessarily "in the same street" for the purpose of the section because one faces on the same road or street, or a continuation of the same road or street, as the other.—Attorney-General v. Edwards, CH.D. ROM., J.—[1891] 1 Ch. 194; 63 L. T. 639.

8a. Demolition of unhealthy dwelling-house—Notice to owner—Definition of "owner"—The Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 70), s. 29, Form C., schedule 4.—The definition of "owner" in Part II. of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, is that given by section 2 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 18), as "the person or corporation entitled to sell or convey" the property in question, and notice to such person or corporation of proceedings for demolition under the above Act of 1890 is sufficient, notwithstanding that the Form C. in schedule 4 is drawn as applicable to an owner under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 4—namely, a person in receipt of the rack-rent.—Osborne v. Skinners' Co., Q.B.D. 715.

9. Nuisance—Smelting works—Right of local board to sue as owners of property affected—Right of local board to act as relators in respect of public nuisance—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 334.—A local authority may act as relators in an action brought by the Attorney-General for the purpose of abating a public nuisance, and may themselves maintain an action for damages for a nuisance affecting property of which they are the actual owners.

The provision in section 334 of the Public Health Act, 1875, that nothing in that Act shall extend to certain businesses therein specified, exempts their proprietors only from the liabilities created and penalties imposed by that Act, and does not relieve them from liability for a public nuisance in a suit brought by the Attorney-General for its abatement, nor from their ordinary common law liability to an owner whose property is injuriously affected by it.—Attorney-General v. Logan, Q.B.D.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 100.

10. Paving expenses—Street—Building used partly as a chapel and partly for secular purposes—Liability of trustees as "owners"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 150, 151, 257.—The defendants were the trustees of a chapel consisting of two floors. The upper floor was exclusively appropriated to public religious service, and the building as a whole was registered as a place of religious worship. Upon the lower floor were a lecture-hall and other rooms. The lecture-hall was used as a Sunday-school, and as an institute, and for lectures and concerts in connection with the institute, and for other purposes. The defendants had no beneficial interest in the building. The justices having made an order for the repayment of the expense of paving the portion of the street upon which the building abutted under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875,

Held, that the defendants were the "owners" of the building within the meaning of section 257, and that they were not exempt by section 151 as "the incumbent or minister of any church, chapel, or place appropriated to public religious worship"; and that, therefore, the order was rightly made.—Hornsea Local Board v. Brewis, Q.B.D.—60 L. J. M. C. 48; 64 L. T. 288.

11. Paving expenses—Street—Recovery of expenses—Public highway—Liability of frontager—Order of Local Government Board declaring road to be a street—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 150, 276.—The appellant was summoned under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for non-payment of expenses incurred by the rural authority in sewering, paving, &c., a road on which his premises abutted. An order of the Local Government Board, under section 276, had declared section 150 to be in force as to the road in question, which the order also declared to be a street. The road ran from a turnpike road to a bridge, where it passed into another parish, and was from that point repaired by the local board of that parish as a highway. It was about 900 feet long. It had on the south side several houses, including the appellant's house, abutting on it; on the north there were none for 785 feet from the turnpike road. For the rest of its course it was bounded on that side by a sewage farm belonging to the rural authority, on which were two buildings. It was a public highway. There was no evidence of formal dedication of the road, but there was evidence of its use as a public highway since 1835, and some evidence before 1835, but none inconsistent with its having been then an occupation road or footpath.

The justices held the order of the Local Government Board conclusive that the road was a street, and further held that, although in their opinion it was not a street in the popular acceptation of the word, it was a street within the meaning of section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

On a case stated,

Held, that the justices were wrong in holding that the order of the Local Government Board was conclusive that the road was a street, but that by the definition in section 4 it was a "street" within the meaning of section 150, and the appellant was liable.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal in Corporation of Portsmouth v. Smith, 13 Q. B. D. 184, and in Jowett v. Local Board of Idle, W. N., 1888, p. 187, followed.

Reg. v. Burnup, 50 J. P. 598, not followed.—Fenwick v. Rural Sanitary Authority of Croydon Union, Q.B.D.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 216.

12. Rates—Rural authority—Powers for lighting district—Order of Local Government Board—Assessment of railway company—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 161, 211, 229, 276.—The first paragraph of section 161 of the Public Health Act, 1875, empowers an urban sanitary authority to contract with any person for the supply of gas or other means of lighting the streets, markets, and public buildings in their district, and to provide the necessary materials. The Local Government Board declared, by an order under section 276 of that Act, that the provisions of the first paragraph of section 161 should be in force within certain portions of a rural sanitary district, and invested the rural sanitary authority with all the powers, rights, capacities, &c., of an urban sanitary authority "under those provisions" within such portions of the district. The rural authority incurred lighting expenses under this order, and treated them as general expenses under section 229 of the Act. A poor rate having been made to defray the expenses, a railway company was assessed in respect of the full rateable value of its property, which consisted of land occupied and used as a railway.

Held, that upon the true construction of the order the rural authority was invested only with the power of an urban authority to incur lighting expenses under the provisions of the first paragraph of section 161, and not with the rating powers applicable to an urban authority under the Act; that the expenses were rightly treated as general and not as special expenses under section 229, and that the company was not entitled to be rated under section 211 of the Act, and in the proportion of one-fourth part only of the rateable value.

The decision of the Court of Appeal (23 Q. B. D. 555) affirmed.—The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co. v. Assessment Committee of the Bolton Union, H.L. (E.)—15 App. Cas. 323; 60 L. J. Q. B. 118; 63 L. T. 358.

13. "Street"—Passage at back of houses—New street—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 157, sub-section 1.—A passage planned to run along the backs of a row of new houses upon land laid out for building, and intended for access to privies and ashpits belonging to the several houses, is a new "street" within the definition clause, section 4, of the Public Health Act, 1875, and is subject to regulation by the local sanitary authority of the district under the power given by section 157, sub-section 1, of the said Act, "with respect to the level, width, and construction of new streets."—Reg. v. Goole Local Board, Q.B.D. 608—[1891] 2 Q. B. 212; 64 L. T. 595.

14. Unsound meat—Possession of unsound meat for preparation for sale for food of man—Liability of person in possession of same to a penalty—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 116, 117—The respondent, a butcher, had purchased and had in his possession meat for the purpose of preparation for sale, and intended for the food of man. The meat was unsound and unfit for the food of man, and the respondent was so told at the time of the purchase. The respondent had not exposed the meat for sale.

Held (distinguishing the case of Vinter v. Hind, 31 W. R. 198, 10 Q. B. D. 63), that the respondent, in having the unsound meat in his possession for the purpose of preparation for sale for the food of man, was guilty of an offence under the 117th section of the Public Health Act, 1875, although he had not exposed the unsound meat for sale.—Mallinson v. Carr, Q.B.D. 270—[1891] 1 Q. B. 48; 60 L. J. M. C. 34; 63 L. T. 459.

15. Unsound meat—Order for destruction—Penalty on person to whom such meat belongs—Exposure for sale—Nuisances Removal Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 117), s. 2.—The appellant, a farmer in the country, sent meat which he knew to be unsound to a salesman in London for the purpose of being sold. The salesman never exposed the meat for sale, but showed it to the inspector of nuisances, who took it away and obtained a justice's order for its destruction.

Held, that, there having been no sale or exposure for sale, the appellant could not be convicted under section 2 of the Nuisances Removal Act, 1863.—Barlow v. Terrett, Q.B.D. 640—[1891] 2 Q. B. 107; 60 L. J. M. C. 104.

See also POOR RATE, 6; PRACTICE (APPEAL), 10.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND):—

1. Election of town commissioners—Candidate acting as returning officer—Disqualification—Towns Improvement (Ireland) Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 103).—At an election of town commissioners a candidate acted as returning officer, and gave his casting vote between two candidates who had an equal number of votes. He was himself one of the successful candidates, and declared himself duly elected.

Held, that the returning officer was disqualified as a candidate, and a new election must be held for his place, the election of the remaining commissioners standing good.—Ex parte Mahony, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 10.

2. Municipal franchise, Dublin—Power of Collector-General to make rate payable in instalments, and to declare the whole rate payable on default in payment of first instalment—Claims by weekly and monthly tenants to be placed on burgess roll.—Where the Collector-General of Dublin made and published the rates for the borough of Dublin for the year 1890, and, under section 51 of the Collection of Rates (Dublin) Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 91), declared the same payable by two instalments, upon the 1st of January and the 1st of June in that year, and declared that upon default in payment of the first, the second or both should forthwith become payable; and weekly or monthly tenants, whose first instalments of rates had been paid after the 1st of January but previous to the 1st of June lodged claims, upon the 31st of May, to be placed on the burgess roll as rated occupiers who had complied with the requirements of the 5th section of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 85 (requiring all rates to be paid or tendered which had accrued previous to the claim to rate being made).

Held, that the payment of the first (or January) instalment was sufficient, and that the Collector-General's declaration that default in payment of the first instalment made the whole rate payable forth-death of the husband did not make such property liable.

Beckett v. Tasker, 19 Q. B. D. 7, 35 W. R. Dig. 96, affirmed.—Pelton Brothers v. Harrison, C.A. 689—[1891] 2 Q. B. 422.

10. Separate property—Tort—Joint action for tort to wife—Damages—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section (2); s. 5.—A husband and wife brought an action for personal injuries sustained by the wife. The jury awarded £25 damages to the wife, and a sum to the husband for his expenses.

Held, that the £25 was the wife's separate property within the meaning of section 5 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and that a garnishee order attaching the whole sum recovered in the hands of the plaintiff's solicitor, to answer a judgment debt of the husband, was bad.—Beasley v. Roney, Q.B.D. 415—[1891] 1 Q. B. 509; 60 L. J. Q. B. 408.

11. Settlement—Infant—Voidable settlement—Confirmation by appointment of new trustee—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section 4.—By an ante-nuptial settlement the wife, being then a minor, with the sanction of her guardian, purported to agree, and the husband covenanted with the trustees, that as soon as she was twenty-one she and her husband would assign a legacy to which she would then be entitled to the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement, and the husband and wife covenanted to settle the wife's after-acquired property. The legacy was not assigned to the trustees after the wife came of age, but she and her husband by deed appointed a new trustee of the settlement under the power therein contained.

Held, that the mere appointment of a new trustee by the wife could not be treated as expressing an intention by her to confirm the settlement, and that the wife was therefore entitled to repudiate the settlement.—Haywood v. Tidy, CH.D. KEK., J.—63 L. T. 679.

12. Tenant in tail—Acknowledgment by—Base fee—Concurrence of husband—Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), ss. 1, 15, 19, 40, 77—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section 1; s. 2.—By an indenture dated in 1884, duly enrolled, two ladies, then spinsters and tenants in tail in remainder, barred their estates tail and conveyed certain lands to S. for the base fee thereby created. The two ladies afterwards married after the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. Subsequently to their marriages the protector of the settlement died, and the base fee fell into possession. The two ladies then executed a deed, unacknowledged and without the concurrence of their husbands, for the purpose of enlarging the base fee into a fee simple absolute.

Held, that the deed was effectual to pass the fee simple absolute.—In re Drummond and Davies' Contract, CH.D. CHI., J. 445—[1891] 1 Ch. 524; 60 L. J. Ch. 258; 64 L. T. 246.

See also ADMINISTRATION, 5; CONTRACT, 2; EXECUTOR, 3; INDEMNITY; INNKEEPER, 1; PROBATE, 17; UNDUE INFLUENCE; WILL, 33.

MASTER and SERVANT:—

1. Action for continuing to employ servant after notice of prior contract.—An action will lie against a person who continues to employ the servant of another after notice of a prior contract of service, and this doctrine applies where the relation is that of employer and employed, and not that of master and servant.—De Francesco v. Barnum (2), CH.D. FRY, L.J.—63 L. T. 514.

2. Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 16—Exemption of seamen from application of Act—Offences committed upon seamen not exempt.—The delegate of a Firemen and Seamen's Union, upon being summoned under the Conspiracy Act, 1875, s. 7, for intimidating a seaman from joining a ship, objected that, the prosecutor being a seaman, the provisions of the Act were, by section 16, not to apply to seamen.

Held, on case stated by the justices, that section 16 did not apply to cases where offences dealt with by the Act of 1875 were committed on seamen, and that the objection could not be upheld.—Kennedy v. Cowie, Q.B.D. 686—[1891] 1 Q. B. 771; 64 L. T. 598.

3. "Dispute"—Justices—Jurisdiction—Six months' limitation under Jervis's Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43) not applicable—Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 4.—By the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, s. 4, "A dispute under this Act between an employer and a workman may be heard and determined by a court of summary jurisdiction, and such court, for the purpose of this Act, shall be deemed to be a court of civil jurisdiction."

Held, that the word "dispute" is not limited to strictly legal causes of action; following Clemson v. Hubbard, 24 W. R. 312, 1 Ex. D. 179.

Held, further, that the time for bringing a complaint under the above Act before the court was not limited to six months from the time when such complaint arose within the terms of section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, nor did that Act apply to a court of summary jurisdiction sitting under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, as a court of civil jurisdiction.—Charles v. Mortgagees of Plymouth Waterworks, Q.B.D. 122—60 L. J. M. C. 22; 64 L. T. 466.

4. Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42)—Negligence—Machinery—Defect in condition of—Workman's knowledge of defect—Volenti non fit injuria—Nonsuit.—B., a workman, whose duty it was to attend to and work at a machine which was defective, and of which defect he had knowledge, continued to work at the machine, notwithstanding the master's refusal to repair it when the defect was brought to his notice by the workman.

In consequence of the defect B. was obliged to step upon the "bed" or plate of the machine to adjust part of it, and, whilst doing so, received injuries.

In an action to recover compensation for such injuries the county court judge nonsuited the plaintiff because he continued to work a machine which he knew to be in a defective condition.

Held, that the plaintiff's knowledge of the defect did not amount to that thorough comprehension of the risk incurred which alone would have justified the withdrawal of the case from the jury.—Brooke v. Ramsden, Q.B.D.—63 L. T. 287.

5. Wages paid to railway porter—Deduction for sick fund—Truck Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37), ss. 1-3, 23—Truck Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 46).—The plaintiff, a railway porter, sued his employers, a railway company, for deductions made from his wages applied as contributions to a sick fund under the terms of a written agreement signed by him, the amount of such deductions being shown by the defendants to have been, in fact, expended in medical relief to the plaintiff and his wife.

Held, that a contract for deductions to be applied for medical relief was not in contravention of the Truck Act, 1831, and the amending Act of 1887, but came within the contracts legalized for exceptional purposes under section 23 of the Truck Act, 1831, and that the permissory provisions of section 23 must be read on to the prohibitory provisions of the amending Act of 1887.

Quære, whether a railway porter came within the term "a person engaged in manual labour."—Lamb v. Great Northern Railway Co., Q.B.D. 475—[1891] 2 Q. B. 281; 60 L. J. Q. B. 489.

6. "Workman" — "Manual labour" — Grocer's assistant — Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 10.—A person was employed as an assistant in a grocer's shop, his duties being to serve customers, to make up parcels of goods, and to carry them to a cart at the shop door, and occasionally to assist in bringing up heavier goods from the cellar to the shop.

Held, by Grantham, J. (A. L. Smith, J., dissenting), that he was a workman within the definition in section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875.—Bound v. Lawrence, Q.B.D. 457—60 L. J. M. C. 137; 64 L. T. 470.

7. "Workman"—"Otherwise engaged in manual labour"—Guard of a goods train—Truck Amendment Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 46)—Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 10.—The plaintiff was in the employment of a railway company as guard of a goods train. His main duty was to guard and conduct the train and to marshall the trucks; but it was also part of his duty at times to assist in coupling and uncoupling the trucks, and in unloading them.

Held, that he was not a "workman" as defined by section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, and was not, therefore, a person to whom the provisions of the Truck Acts (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37 and 50 & 51 Vict. c. 46) applied.—Hunt v. Great Northern Railway Co., Q.B.D.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 601; 60 L. J. Q. B. 216; 64 L. T. 418.

See also FALSE IMPRISONMENT; POOR LAW (IRELAND), 2; SEDUCTION.

MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT. — See TRADE-MARK, 2.

MERSEY NAVIGATION.—See SHIP, 21.

METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS:—

1. Building—"Adjoining owner" — Tenement—Notice by building owner — Injunction — Separate tenements—Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 122), ss. 3, 82, 85, sub-section 1.—A tenant in possession of part of a house under an agreement for a greater interest than an interest from year to year is an "adjoining owner" within section 82 of the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855, and is, therefore, entitled, under section 85, sub-section (1), to three months' notice from the building owner of any intended alteration to a party structure.

Cowen v. Phillips, 11 W. R. 706, 33 Beav. 18, followed.—Fillingham v. Wood, CH.D. CHI., J. 282—[1891] 1 Ch. 51; 60 L. J. Ch. 232; 64 L. T. 46.

2. Line of buildings—Metropolitan Building Acts—Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 122), s. 26—General Paving (Metropolis) Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. xxix.), s. 72—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 119—Street—Projections—Pilaster encroaching on public footway.—By 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix. (Michael Angelo Taylor's Act), s. 72, power is given to the persons having the control of the pavements of streets in the metropolis to regulate or remove all projections from the fronts of the houses which in their judgment are inconvenient or incommodious to passengers along the footway, and a penalty of not less than forty shillings nor exceeding five pounds is imposed upon any owner or occupier who does not immediately remove any such projection after notice to do so.

By section 119 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (19 & 19 Vict. c. 120), it is enacted that if any projections placed in front of any house after the commencement of the Act shall be an annoyance in consequence of the same rendering less commodious the passage along any street, the vestry may give notice to the owner or occupier to remove such projection, and that if he shall neglect within fourteen days after the service of such notice upon him to remove such projection he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding five pounds, and a further sum not exceeding forty shillings for every day during which the projection continues after the date of his conviction.

By section 26 of the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 122), "the following rules shall be observed as to projections . . . (2) In any street or alley of a width greater than thirty feet any shop front may project ten inches and no more. (5) Except in so far as is permitted by this section in the case of shop fronts, and with the exception of . . . cornices . . . and other like architectural decorations, no projection from any building shall extend beyond the general line of fronts in any street except with the permission of the Metropolitan Board of Works."

The appellant built upon the side of a public street, which was of a width greater than thirty feet, certain shops upon ground of which he was lessee, and erected against the fronts of the shops certain pilasters which projected into the street beyond the general building line to the extent of nine inches of the footway. The respondents passed a resolution declaring the pilasters to be inconvenient and incommodious to passengers along the footway, and served the appellant with a notice to remove them forthwith, and upon his neglecting to comply with the notice took out a summons against him under section 72 of Michael Angelo Taylor's Act. The magistrates convicted the appellant.

Held, that the conviction must be quashed on the grounds:—

(1) That section 119 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, was inconsistent with and impliedly repealed section 72 of Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, and that consequently, assuming the projections in question were unlawful, the proceedings had been taken under the wrong Act.

(2) That the projections in question were not unlawful, for that section 26 of the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855, authorized projections beyond the general building line (to the limited extent therein specified) whatever the position of the building line might be, and not only where, the building line being set back from the street, the projections were capable of being made on private land.

Vestry of St. Mary, Islington v. Goodman, 23 Q. B. D. 154, overruled.—Fortescue v. Vestry of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, Q.B.D.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 170.

3. Paving expenses—New street—Liability for expense of paving—"Owner" of land—Land vested in Ecclesiastical Commissioners for purposes of Church Building Acts—Site of a church—Part left unconsecrated—Divesting—Church Building Acts—58 Geo. 3, c. 45, s. 33—59 Geo. 3, c. 134, s. 34—3 Geo. 4, c. 72, s. 34—8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, s. 13—Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 105, 250—Metropolis Local Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 77.——Where land has been conveyed to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for the purposes of the Church Building Acts as a site for a new church, and a church has been built on part of such land, the effect of the consecration of the church and part of such land is to vest the whole of the land conveyed in the incumbent for the time being of such church, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, s. 13. The commissioners, therefore, are not liable to contribute to the expenses of paving a new street upon which the unconsecrated part of such land abuts, as "owners" of such unconsecrated land within the meaning of the Metropolis Local Management Acts, 1855 and 1862.—Plumstead District Board of Works v. Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, Q.B.D. 700—[1891] 2 Q. B. 361; 64 L. T. 830.

4. "Refuse of trade, manufacture, or business"—Removal of ashes—Vestry—Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 125, 128.—Clinkers produced in the furnaces of certain boilers in an hotel, and used to generate steam for supplying power for the electric lighting of the hotel, for the heating of the public rooms, and for other purposes, are not "refuse of a trade, manufacture, or business" within section 128 of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, so as to entitle the vestry to demand payment for their removal.

Per Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes, L.J.—Gay v. Cadby, 2 C. P. D. 391, 25 W. R. Dig. 156, dissented from.—St. Martin's Vestry v. Gordon, C.A. 295—[1891] 1 Q. B. 61; 60 L. J. M. C. 37; 64 L. T. 243.

5. Street traffic—Unloading coke during prohibited hours—Traffic Regulation (Metropolis) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 134), s. 15.—Section 15 of the Traffic Regulation (Metropolis) Act, 1867, prohibits the loading or unloading of coal on or across any footway during certain hours.

Held, that a person who had unloaded coke on a footway during the prohibited hours was not guilty of an offence under this section.—Fletcher v. Fields, Q.B.D. 655—[1891] 1 Q. B. 790; 60 L. J. M. C. 102; 64 L. T. 472.

6. Streets—Closing of passage by justices—Interpretation of statute—57 Geo. 3, c. xxix., s. 79 (local and personal) (Michael Angelo Taylor's Act).—At a special session of justices held under section 79 of 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix. (local and personal), an application for an order to close a certain passage was refused solely on the ground that there was no jurisdiction to make the order, because it did not appear that the passage was in fact "a harbour or receptacle for filth and rubbish" within the meaning of the preamble to the said section.

Held, that the construction put upon the section by the justices was erroneous, for its meaning was to give them jurisdiction if the passage was likely to, or might possibly become, a harbour or receptacle for filth and rubbish.—Reg. v. Cloete, Q.B.D.—64 L. T. 90.

7. Vestry—Election of vestryman—Qualification—Occupation of club premises as secretary—Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 6.—The qualification of a candidate for the office of a vestryman was that he was rated in respect of the house in which he resided at £19 per annum, and that he was rated jointly with another person in respect of the premises of a certain club, of which he was secretary, at £55 per annum. The qualification required for the particular parish under section 6 of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, was the being rated upon a rental exceeding £25 per annum in respect of the occupation of premises within the parish.

Held (affirming the decision of the Queen's Bench Division, 39 W. R. 8), that, since he was not in the occupation of the club, his qualification was insufficient.—Reg. v. Soutter, C.A. 65—[1891] 1 Q. B. 57; 60 L. J. Q. B. 71; 64 L. T. 40.

See also NEGLIGENCE, 3.

MINE:—

1. Gold mine—Gold found with other metals—Rights of Crown—Licence to work—1 W. & M. c. 30, ss. 2, 4—5 W. & M. c. 6, ss. 2, 3.—A mine not worked or worth working except as a gold mine, though containing a certain quantity of copper, tin, iron, or lead, is not a "mine of copper, tin, iron, or lead" within the meaning of the Act 1 W. & M. c. 30, or (therefore) a "mine . . . wherein any ore . . . is . . . found . . . in which there is copper, tin, iron, or lead" within the meaning of the Act 5 W. & M. c. 6 (which two expressions—the latter Act being explanatory of the former—must be taken to mean the same thing). Such a mine is a gold mine, and consequently, being in the United Kingdom, a royal mine, and cannot be worked without a licence from the Crown.

The effect of section 3 of 5 W. & M. c. 6 is to authorize the owners of copper, tin, iron, or lead mines—that is, mines worked for, and deriving their profit mainly from, copper, tin, iron, or lead—to work them as such, though they contain also gold or silver; the rights of the Crown being protected by giving it an option to take the ore containing gold or silver at certain fixed prices, but so that, if the Crown does not choose so to take the ore, the owners may dispose of it for their own benefit. But that section does not mean that, wherever there is any one or more of the four named base metals associated with gold or silver in a mine, and without reference to the question whether or not the mine is worth working for such base metal, the owner is to be entitled to the gold or silver in case the Crown does not exercise its option of taking the mixed ore at the statutory price.

Decision of North, J. (39 W. R. 169), affirmed.—Attorney-General v. Morgan, C.A. 324—[1891] 1 Ch. 432; 60 L. J. Ch. 126; 64 L. T. 402.

2. Offences—"Working shaft"—Guides—Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 77), s. 23, sub-section 10.—By section 23, sub-section 10, of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, "every working shaft in which persons are raised" shall, under certain specified circumstances, be provided with guides, and persons contravening the provisions of the section are made liable to a penalty.

The shaft of a lead mine was completed, and a tunnel driven from the bottom of it for the purpose of arriving at the ore, but no ore had been gotten. The men employed in the mine were drawn up the shaft in a bucket unprovided with guides.

Held, that the shaft was a "working shaft" within the meaning of section 23, sub-section 10, and, therefore, that the owners of the mine were liable to be convicted of an offence against that section.—Foster v. North Hendre Mining Co., Q.B.D.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 71; 60 L. J. M. C. 6; 63 L. T. 458.

3. Wages—Payment by weight of mineral—"Actual weight gotten of mineral contracted to be gotten"—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 76), s. 17.—By sub-section 1 of section 12 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887: "When the amount of wages paid to any of the persons employed in a mine depends on the amount of minerals gotten by them, those persons shall be paid according to the actual weight gotten by them of the mineral contracted to be gotten; . . . provided that nothing in the section shall preclude the owner, agent, or manager of the mine from agreeing with the persons employed in the mine that reductions shall be made in respect of stones or substances other than the mineral contracted to be gotten which shall be sent out of the mine with the mineral contracted to be gotten."

The plaintiffs were employed in the defendants' collieries to cut large coal, at wages which depended on the weight gotten. The coal raised was screened at the pit's mouth, and the defendants made deductions from the plaintiffs' wages in respect of the small coal which it was found to contain. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for the amounts so deducted.

Held, that the case of Netherseal Colliery Co. v. Bourne, 14 App. Cas. 228, under the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1872, applied; that the deductions were illegal under section 12, sub-section 1, of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887; and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to recover.—Brace v. Abercarn Colliery Co.; Huggins v. London and South Wales Colliery Co., Q.B.D.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 496; 64 L. T. 419.

See also BOILER; FEE FARM GRANT; INTEREST, 1; WATERWORKS, 1.

MISREPRESENTATION. — See COMPANY (PROSPECTUS), 12—15.

MORTGAGE:—

1. Absolute conveyance—Admissibility of evidence to contradict terms of the deed.—Where the appellant had deposited with the respondent bank his title deeds to certain property in order to secure a cash credit, and afterwards executed an absolute conveyance thereof to the bank in pursuance of an agreement recited therein to the effect that the price paid should be by deducting £400 from the amount due,

Held, that, although collateral evidence was admissible to show that, notwithstanding the plain terms of the deed, the relationship of mortgagee and mortgagor still subsisted between the parties, yet in this case it was wholly insufficient to overcome the presumption that the deed of conveyance truly stated the transaction.—Barton and Bank of New South Wales, P.C.—15 App. Cas. 379.

2. Foreclosure—Opening accounts—Order absolute—Discharge of receiver—Rents not accounted for by receiver—Application to re-open foreclosure and for further account.—Some months after the usual order for foreclosure absolute had been made in favour of first mortgagees against the mortgagor and second mortgagees, and after the first mortgagees acting upon that order had actually sold portions of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor discovered that the receiver had omitted from his accounts certain rents which he had received.

The mortgagor accordingly moved that the foreclosure might be re-opened; and that the first mortgagees might be restrained from parting with the legal estate of the mortgaged property.

Held, that there was no evidence that the first mortgagees had received any of the rents for which the receiver had not accounted, and there was no reason why the foreclosure should be re-opened merely because the receiver, who was not the agent of the first mortgagees for all purposes, but was an officer of the court, had made a mistake which the mortgagor had not discovered before it was too late; that the case did not come within the authority of Jenner-Fust v. Needham, 32 Ch. D. 582, 55 L. T. N. S. 37; and that, therefore, the motion failed.—Ingham v. Sutherland, CH.D. KEK., J.—63 L. T. 614.

3. Foreclosure—Order absolute—Direction for delivery of possession—Form of order—Identification of property—Writ of possession—Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 47, rr. 1, 2—Appendix H., Forms 7a, 8.—An order for the delivery of possession of mortgaged property by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, forming part of a judgment for foreclosure absolute, ought to contain a description of the property as set forth in the mortgage deed, in order that the writ of possession may be filled up in such a way as to enable the sheriff to identify the property of which he is directed to deliver possession.—Thynne v. Sarl, CH.D. NOR., J.—[1891] 2 Ch. 79; 60 L. J. Ch. 590; 64 L. T. 781.

4. Foreclosure—Order absolute—Evidence of non-payment of mortgage moneys.—Upon a motion for a final order of foreclosure, an affidavit made on the 20th of February last by J. D., one of two joint mortgagees, and by James S., was tendered in evidence. John S., the other mortgagee, had in 1874 gone to reside in New Zealand, and had granted James S. a power of attorney to act for him in the matter of the mortgage. Under the authority of this power, and under power of attorney granted by J. D., James S. had attended on the 31st of January last to receive payment of the mortgage moneys.

The affidavit stated that John S. was still in New Zealand; that default had been made in payment of the mortgage moneys; and that the whole of this sum remained due to the mortgagees.

Held, that the affidavit was not sufficient, and that more recent evidence must be adduced.

At the subsequent hearing of the motion an affidavit made by James S. alone on the 21st of March last was produced. In this James S. stated that John S. was still residing in New Zealand, that J. D. was away from his home in Derbyshire, and that his whereabouts was unknown, and that to the best of his knowledge the mortgage moneys remained unpaid.

Held, that an affidavit made by James S. alone was insufficient.—Docksey v. Else, CH.D. NOR., J.—64 L. T. 256.

5. Foreclosure—Parties—Death of mortgagor insolvent and without a personal representative before the time limited for redemption—Representative for purposes of action.—An order for foreclosure was obtained in a foreclosure action, but the defendant mortgagor died insolvent before the expiration of the period limited for redemption of the mortgaged property. There was no personal representative of his estate, and an order was made appointing one of his next of kin to represent his estate for the purposes of the action.

Held, on a motion for foreclosure absolute, that no order would be made in the absence of a properly-constituted representative of the mortgagor's estate.—Aylward v. Lewis, CH.D. NOR., J. 552—[1891] 2 Ch. 81; 64 L. T. 250.

6. Foreclosure—Parties—Plaintiff joined as co-defendant—Trustees of mortgagor—Representation of cestuis que trust.—In a foreclosure action by a first mortgagee against the second, third, and fourth mortgagees, and the executors and trustees of the will of the mortgagor, the plaintiff was also joined as a defendant, as one of the second mortgagees. The persons interested under the will of the mortgagor were not made parties to the action.

Held, that a man could not be both plaintiff and defendant in an action, and that the writ and pleadings must be amended by striking out the name of the plaintiff as a co-defendant.

Held, that the cestuis que trust under the will were not sufficiently represented by the trustees, and that judgment for foreclosure could not be given in their absence.

Held, that the cestuis que trust were sufficiently represented by the trustees for the purpose of taking the accounts as against the mortgagees.—Wavell v. Mitchell, CH.D. KEK., J.—64 L. T. 560.

7. Foreclosure—Subsequent sale to person entitled to redeem—Opening of foreclosure decree.—After a decree for foreclosure one of the defendants in the action purchased the lands from the executors and trustees of the mortgagee, who had died subsequent to the decree, the purchase-money being the amount due on the mortgage and costs, payment of the principal being deferred for five years, and interest being payable in the meantime.

Held, that the foreclosure decree was not thereby opened, and the defendant could make a good title upon a sale.—In re Power and Carton's Contract, M.R. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 459.

7a. Pretenced title—Possession through tenant at will—Parol evidence—10 Car. 1, sess. 3, c. 15, s. 2 (Ir.)—A testator died in 1871, having, by his will, divided his farm between his two sons, the defendant and H. His widow was given, by the will, a right to live in the farmhouse, which was on the defendant's part, during her life. By deed dated the 21st of March, 1874, the defendant assigned his part of the farm to his brother H. in consideration of a covenant on the part of H. to pay the defendant after the death of their mother, an annuity of £10, and to maintain him and his sister M. during their respective lives. Previous to the execution of the deed it was verbally arranged between the brothers that the defendant should remain in possession of the farm as formerly, and pay the rent during their mother's life. Defendant remained in possession until the death of the mother in 1888, M. having predeceased her.

By deed dated the 15th of May, 1883, H. mortgaged the lands to F., and interest was duly paid thereon. F. and H. having brought a civil bill ejectment to recover the farm, the recorder of Belfast dismissed the action.

Held, by Gibson, J. (reversing the decision of the court below), (1) that evidence of the parol agreement between the defendant and H. prior to the execution of the deed of assignment of the 21st of March, 1874, was admissible to explain defendant's continuance in possession; (2) that the defendant's possession was not adverse, but that H. was in possession, through the defendant, as his tenant at will, and that, consequently, the mortgage was not void as a dealing with a pretenced title within 10 Car. 1, sess. 3, c. 15, s. 2 (Ir.)

Quære, whether an ordinary mortgage security, taken by the mortgagee in good faith, is avoided by the fact that the mortgagor is out of possession.—Fleming v. Moore, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 373.

8. Principal and surety—Covenant for repayment—Consolidation of mortgages—Covenant for repayment at a later date—Discharge of surety by giving time.—By a covenant in a mortgage deed of the 4th of September, 1857, the mortgagor and the defendant, as surety, covenanted to pay the mortgage debt of £450 on the 4th of March, 1858. By a deed of the 15th of December, 1884, to which the defendant was not a party, this mortgage and other mortgages on other properties were consolidated. Under this deed the several mortgagees were paid off, and they assigned their mortgages to the plaintiff, with the full benefit of the covenants in the respective mortgage deed. The mortgagor by this deed covenanted with the plaintiff to repay the full amount of the mortgage debt on the 19th of January, 1885.

Held, that, by the covenant in the deed of 1884, the time for repayment of the mortgage debt of £450 contained in the deed of 1857 had been enlarged, and the liability of the defendant as surety had been discharged.—Bolton v. Buckenham, C.A. 293—[1891] 1 Q. B. 278; 60 L. J. Q. B. 261; 64 L. T. 278.

9. Principal and surety—Covenant for repayment—Giving security—Discharge of liability on covenant—Release of security.—Where a person joins in a mortgage as security for the mortgagor by covenanting for payment of the mortgage debt, and gives security, if the surety be discharged from the covenant by reason of the contract with the principal debtor being altered, the security given by him is also released.—Bolton v. Salmon, CH.D. CHI., J.—[1891] 2 Ch. 48; 60 L. J. Ch. 239; 64 L. T. 222.

10. Priority—Real estate—Notice.—W. A. R., a solicitor, having received money from a client, W. F. H., in 1883, for the purpose of investment, represented to him that he had invested it upon a mortgage, which, in fact, was one he had previously taken in his own name, and it was never transferred into the client's. W. A. R. afterwards deposited the title deeds of the mortgaged property with his bankers to secure his own overdrawn account; but, as he regularly paid interest to W. F. H. down to his death, and subsequently to his executors, the fact of this deposit was unknown to them until W. A. R.'s death in 1888, when the bank gave notice to the mortgagors of the property, the account being overdrawn to a larger amount than its value. The bank had no notice of W. F. H.'s claim at the date of the deposit, and their notice to the mortgagors was prior to any notice given by his executors.

Held, first, that W. A. R. was a trustee of the mortgage for W. F. H., and that neither W. F. H. nor his executors had been guilty of negligence such as to postpone their priority; and, secondly, that the principle of Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. 1, did not apply, and therefore the bank was not entitled to priority by having given notice before the executors to the mortgagors.—In re Richards, Humber v. Richards, CH.D. STI., J. 186—45 Ch. D. 589; 59 L. J. Ch. 728; 63 L. T. 451.

11. Redemption—Attempt to fetter equity of redemption—Policy of insurance.—C. charged a reversionary interest in real estate, to which he was entitled contingently on his surviving N., with the repayment, with interest thereon, of a sum of £10,000 advanced to C. by the trustees of an insurance society, and also with the repayment of the premiums of a policy for £34,500, which, in pursuance of the contract between C. and the trustees, was effected by the trustees on the life of C. as against that of N.

The contract also contained stipulations that, in the event of C. not having paid to the trustees the whole of the sums due by him before the death of N., the policy should belong absolutely to the trustees; that, in the event of C. paying the trustees before the death of N. the whole of the sums due to them, the trustees should forthwith assign the policy to C.; and that, in the event of C. predeceasing N. without having paid all principal moneys, interest, and costs due to the trustees, the policy should belong absolutely to them.

C. died in the lifetime of N. without having paid anything to the trustees, and C.'s legal personal representative now claimed to be entitled to redeem the policy.

The premiums on the policy had been paid by the trustees.

Held by the Court of Appeal (Bowen, L.J., dissenting), that the contract as regards the policy was part of one whole mortgage transaction; that the stipulations which provided that, in certain events, the policy should belong absolutely to the trustees were invalid, as clogging the equity of redemption, and, therefore, that C.'s representative was entitled to redeem the policy.

Decision of North, J. (38 W. R. 346), affirmed.—Northampton (Marquis of) v. Pollock, C.A. 66—45 Ch. D. 190; 59 L. J. Ch. 745; 63 L. T. 136.

12. Redemption—Payment off by part owner of property under mistake—Presumption of intention to keep mortgage alive.—A person who, believing himself to be the owner of an estate, pays off a mortgage upon it, when he is in fact only owner of a portion, will be presumed by the court, in the absence of any express declaration by him, to have made the payment for his own benefit, and the mortgage will be deemed to be kept alive as to the portion of the estate not belonging to him.

A testator devised hereditaments, which were subject to mortgage, to his six children, including P. and S. P. acquired three more of the six shares, and in 1859 he purchased the share of S. In 1862 S. commenced a suit to set aside this sale to P., but before the decree P. paid off the mortgage on the five-sixths of the property to which he believed himself to be entitled.

Held, that the mortgage was kept alive as against the share of S. for the benefit of P.—In re Pride, Shackell v. Colnett, CH.D. STI., J. 471—[1891] 2 Ch. 135; 64 L. T. 768.

13. Tacking—Priority.—A subsequent mortgagee, who, at the time he advanced his money, had no notice of any prior equitable mortgage, can, by getting in the legal estate, even after notice of the existence of a prior equitable mortgage, thereby protect himself against any claim for priority on the part of such prior equitable mortgagee, provided that the legal estate has been obtained without the violation of any trust or equity in regard to the prior equitable mortgagee against whom the legal estate is set up. The fact that the conveyance of the legal estate constituted a breach of trust as against some third person does not prevent the holder of the legal estate getting the benefit of its protection in an action for a declaration of priority brought against him by the prior equitable mortgagee.

Harpham v. Shacklock, 30 W. R. 49, 19 Ch. D. 207, explained and distinguished.

Decision of Kay, J. (reported 38 W. R. 663), reversed.—Taylor v. Russell, C.A. 81—[1891] 1 Ch. 8; 60 L. J. Ch. 1; 63 L. T. 593.

14. Valuation—Valuers—Negligence—Loss—Action against valuers—Contractual relation.—A firm of valuers were employed to value certain property with a view to its being offered as a mortgage security. The valuers were suggested by a firm of solicitors, who were to find a mortgagee, it being understood, both by the valuers and the solicitors, that the valuation was to be made on behalf of the intended mortgagee. The plaintiff, who was a client of the solicitors, became the mortgagee, on the faith of the valuation being made by the valuers. The valuation was not conducted with due skill and care, and the security turned out greatly insufficient.

Held, that the true inference to be drawn from the evidence, apart from an admission contained in the pleadings, was that the valuers were actually employed by the plaintiff; and that, as they had been negligent in the performance of the work undertaken, they were liable to the plaintiff for the damage caused by such negligence.

Decision of Romer, J. (63 L. T. N. S. 837), affirmed.—Scholes v. Brook, C.A.—64 L. T. 674.

See also BANKRUPTCY, 1; DEED; LAND, ACTION TO RECOVER POSSESSION; LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF, 4; SHIP, 32; SOLICITOR, 6, 8, 17.

MORTMAIN.—See CHARITY, 6—8.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION:—

1. Election — Disqualification — Member of firm interested in contracts with corporation—Dissolution of partnership—Continuing liability of candidate—Votes thrown away—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 12, 22.—The respondent was a member of a firm interested in continuing contracts with a corporation of a borough unexpired at the time of a municipal election for that borough. Before becoming a candidate the respondent dissolved partnership, and assigned all his interest in the contracts to his partner, remaining liable, however, on bonds securing the due performance of the contracts. The corporation was not a party to the assignment. The respondent's connection with the contracts and the fact that his candidature was objected to on that ground were notorious in the ward.

Held, that the respondent was disqualified for election by section 12 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882; and that the votes given for him were thrown away, and the other candidate entitled to be declared elected.—Cox v. Ambrose, Q.B.D.—60 L. J. Q. B. 114.

2. Election of councillor—Qualification—Entitled to be enrolled as a burgess—Mother succeeded by son as keeper of an inn—No assignment of lease—No transfer of licence—Rates made out in mother's name—Claim by son to be rated—Payment of rates by son—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 9, sub-section 2; s. 11, sub-section 2 (a); s. 32.—In October, 1888, J. M. went with his wife and family to live at an inn in the borough of W., of which his mother had been the licensed occupier for some years. He took over the entire management of the inn, though his mother continued to live there, and her name remained over the door, The excise licences continued to be taken out in the mother's name. There was no transfer of the licence of the premises to J. M., nor any assignment of the lease. In June, 1889, he requested the overseer to enter his name in the rate-book. His name was not so entered, but he paid the rates which became due in October, 1889, and April, 1890. His name appeared in the burgess-roll which was published on the 1st of August, 1890.

Held, by the Queen's Bench Division, that he was entitled to be enrolled as a burgess, and, being enrolled, he was qualified to be elected as a councillor.—Unwin v. McMullen, Q.B.D. 712—[1891] 1 Q. B. 694; 60 L. J. Q. B. 400.

NATIONAL DEBT COMMISSIONERS:—

Unclaimed stock—List of holders—Bank of England—Right to inspection—Mandamus—National Debt Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 71), ss. 51, 52.—The National Debt Act, 1870 (ss. 51, 52), provides for the transfer of unclaimed stock to the National Debt Commissioners and for the entry of the names in which the stock stood immediately before the transfer, with other particulars, in a list to be kept by the Bank of England, "which list shall be open for inspection at the usual hours of transfer."

Held, that "open for inspection" meant "open for inspection by any person claiming an interest in the stock," and that a mandamus to the bank to permit inspection of the list ought not to go upon the application of a person who did not bonâ fide claim such an interest.—Reg. v. Bank of England, Q.B.D. 558—[1891] 1 Q. B. 785; 60 L. J. Q. B. 497; 64 L. T. 468.

NAVY:—

Naval discipline—Officer holding Her Majesty's commission—Ship in commission—Name borne on ship's books—Leaving ship without resignation having been accepted—Arrest—Court-martial—Naval Discipline Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109), ss. 19, 87—Marine Mutiny Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 11)—Naval Regulations, 210, 211, 1906.—A commissioned officer in the Royal Navy was appointed as additional engineer on The P. for service on The M., and his name was entered and borne on the books of The P. He was subsequently appointed to The M., and served on her until she was paid off, when he returned on board The P. His name, however, was not entered afresh on the books of The P. He subsequently tendered his resignation, which was refused. Pending such refusal he left the country without leave, was arrested, and detained in custody pending trial by naval court-martial under the Naval Discipline Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 109).

Held, on an application for a writ of habeas corpus, that the original appointment to The P. was superseded by that to The M., and that the latter came to an end when The M., was paid off, and that, although the officer's name still appeared under the original entry on the books of The P., yet, as there had been no fresh appointment to The P., and no re-entry of the officer's name on the books of that ship, he was not at the time of desertion borne on the books of The P., or of a ship in commission.—In re Hearson, Q.B.D.—64 L. T. 535.

NEGLIGENCE:—

1. Damages—Railway company—Lord Campbell's Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93).—The plaintiff's father and stepmother were killed at the same time by the negligence of the defendants. The father's mother brought an action to recover damages for the death of the father, in which £100 was recovered, but only 1s. was awarded to the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought the present action to recover damages for the death of her stepmother. The stepmother earned 6s. a week, which was applied to the general support of the family. The plaintiff resided with her father and stepmother.

Held, that the verdict in the first action was no bar to the plaintiffs' right to recover in the second; and that there was evidence of pecuniary loss by the death of the stepmother.—Johnston v. Great Northern Railway Co., EX.D. (Ir.)—26 L. R. Ir. 691.

2. Government dockyard—Damage—Barge moored at unsafe berth—Damage to barge—Respondeat superior—Invitation—Liability of Government officials in charge of dockyard.—A barge belonging to the plaintiffs was moored in Chatham Dockyard at a berth pointed out by the foreman, and the barge was there damaged. In an action to recover the amount of the damage from the Port Admiral, the Admiral Superintendent, and the Queen's Harbour Master of Chatham Dockyard, being the officials in charge of the dockyard, the jury found that the berth was unsafe, and gave a verdict for the plaintiffs.

Held, on further consideration, that, there being no Act of Parliament and no Order in Council rendering the defendants liable, their liability must be decided on common law principles, and that the doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply in such a case, but the doctrine of invitation does apply, and as there was no evidence that the defendants invited the plaintiff to moor the barge where they did, the defendants were not liable, and judgment must be for them.—Wright & Son v. Lethbridge, C.A.—63 L. T. 572.

3. Metropolitan vestry — Liability of, as sewer authority—Repair of highway by contractor—Knowledge of vestry as to state of water-pipe—5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 109—18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 96—25 & 26 Vict. c. 102, s. 106.—A vestry, acting as a sewer authority, laid down a new sewer, and, in so doing, a contractor employed by them laid bare a wrought-iron service water-pipe, which was about two and a half feet below the surface. The surveyor of the vestry knew that the pipe was old and rusty, and, likely, therefore, to become leaky. In filling in the trench some clay was put round the pipe, but not in such a quantity or in such a manner as to prevent it from leaking. A few months afterwards the pipe leaked, and the surrounding clay and earth, being thereby moistened, gave way under a heavily laden van, which the plaintiff was driving, and the van being overturned, the plaintiff was thrown from it to the ground, and seriously injured.

Held, that the vestry knew, or ought to have known, the character and condition of the pipe at the time it was laid bare in constructing the new sewer, and consequently were liable for negligence in not having taken special precautions against its leaking thereafter.—Cox v. The Vestry of Paddington, Q.B.D.—64 L. T. 566.

4. Negligent driving—Foot passenger—Deafness—Contributory negligence.—The plaintiff, who was deaf, was walking across a street in a diagonal direction where there was no crossing. The defendants' driver turned his horse and car round and proceeded to drive up the same street, and, seeing the plaintiff, shouted; but the plaintiff, who did not hear, continued on his course, and was knocked down. The jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff, Held, that the verdict was not against the weight of evidence.—Smith v. Browne, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 1.

5. Obstruction of footway in street—Illegal act—Liability for injury received in getting over obstruction—Contributory negligence—Damages—Questions for jury—Volenti non fit injuria.—A wooden apparatus, technically called a "slide," and used for lowering casks and other heavy and bulky goods from vans in the street into the defendants' blacklead warehouse, was placed across the pavement or footway of the street from the end of their van to the opening into the cellar of their warehouse, during the hours prohibited by the Metropolitan Police and Metropolitan Streets Acts for using the same for that purpose, thus blocking the footway; so that foot passengers were obliged either to get over the slide or to go round by the horses' heads in the roadway, or to wait until the obstruction was removed.

The "slide" was very slippery from blacklead, and in his attempt to get over it a foot passenger slipped, receiving serious injuries. In an action against the defendants for negligence, the jury found that the plaintiff had only acted reasonably and prudently in what he did, and gave him a verdict for £300 damages.

Held, that it was for the jury to decide what was the proper course for the plaintiff to adopt under all the circumstances, and to say whether or not his attempt to get over the "slide" was the act of a reasonable and prudent man; and that a new trial must, therefore, be refused.—Lee v. Nixey, Q.B.D.—63 L. T. 285.

6. Railway company—Infant en ventre sa mere—Personal injuries to—Right of action.—A statement of claim alleged that the plaintiff's mother, being quick with child—namely, with the plaintiff, to whom she afterwards gave birth—was received by the defendants to be carried as a passenger on their railway, and the defendants so negligently conducted themselves in carrying the plaintiff's mother and the plaintiff, then being en ventre sa mere as aforesaid, that the plaintiff was permanently injured.

Held, on demurrer, that the statement of claim disclosed no cause of action. — Walker v. Great Northern Railway Co., Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 69.

7. Railway company—Injury to passenger—Shock without physical impact — Fright — Remoteness of damage.—In an action by a passenger in a runaway train for damages for personal injuries caused by the defendants' negligence it was proved that the plaintiff was put in great fright by the occurrence, and in consequence suffered from nervous shock, and was incapacitated from performing her ordinary work. The learned judge told the jury that if great fright was, in their opinion, a reasonable and natural consequence of the occurrence, and the plaintiff was actually put in great fright, and if injury to her health was, in their opinion, a reasonable and natural consequence of such great fright, damages for such injury would not be too remote. The jury having found a verdict in favour of the plaintiff,

Held, that the direction was right.

Victorian Railway Commissioners v. Coultas, 13 App. Cas. 222, not followed.—Bell v. Great Northern Railway Co., EX.D. (Ir.)—26 L. R. Ir. 428.

8. School—Voluntary school—Negligence of teacher—Committee of management, liability of.—The plaintiff was a scholar in a voluntary school, and the defendant, as vicar of the parish, was a trustee of the school, and a member of the committee of management. The plaintiff was injured by the fall of a black board which was being used by a pupil teacher, who was in charge of the class in which the plaintiff was. The schoolmistress was appointed by the committee of management, but neither they nor the defendant had any control over the way in which the school was managed beyond the power of dismissing the mistress subject to an appeal by her to the bishop of the diocese.

Held, that the mere fact of the fall of the board was not evidence of negligence on the part of the mistress or the pupil teacher; and that if there had been negligence on the part of either of them the defendant would not have been liable.—Crisp v. Thomas, C.A.—63 L. T. 756.

9. Ship—Wharfinger — Obstruction in navigable river.—Where there is nothing foreign or strange in the condition of the bed of a river, other than what results from its normal use, wharfingers on the bank are under no obligation to remove such impediments to navigation. A ship attempting to approach a wharf to which safe access was a mere matter of time, and outside of which ridges of mud had been formed by the action of the river and the vessels stranding alongside, suffered damage.

Held, that, the river being in its normal state, and the nature of the river known to those in charge of the ship, the wharfingers were not guilty of negligence.

Decision of the Court of Appeal reversed.—Tredegar Iron & Coal Co. v. Owners of Steamship "Calliope," "The Calliope," H.L. (E.) 641—[1891] A. C. 11; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 28; 63 L. T. 781.

See DAMAGES; MORTGAGE, 14; SOLICITOR, 17; TRESPASS.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT:—

Pledge of securities en bloc—*Banker—Broker—*Bonâ fide holder for value—Foreign bonds—Share warrants in English company—Companies Act, 1867, s. 27.—Authority given to a stockbroker by a client to pledge the client's securities does not carry with it in law an implied authority to pledge the client's securities en bloc with those of others for a lump sum.

S. had deposited for custody with a stockbroker bonds of a foreign corporation, transferable by delivery from hand to hand. The stockbroker, to raise money for his own purposes, and without the knowledge of S, sold the bonds, but on the same day repurchased similar bonds of equal value, and immediately on their delivery made an entry in his books substituting the numbers of the newly-purchased bonds for the numbers of the original bonds belonging to S. The bonds so purchased were paid for by the stockbroker by means of a crossed cheque (dated the 28th of October, 1887) drawn by him on his own bank. In order to put himself in funds at the bank to meet the whole of the cheques drawn by him on that day, the stockbroker, on the same day, but after the said alteration of the numbers in his book, pledged the bonds so purchased, together with other securities, en bloc to the bank; and the bank thereupon credited his account with a large advance, out of which the whole of the cheques drawn by him on the 28th of October were cashed. The stockbroker subsequently absconded, and S. brought an action against the bank to recover the price of the bonds in question, which had been sold by the bank at a price admittedly fair, together with interest thereon at four per cent.

The inferences of fact drawn from the evidence by the Court of Appeal were—(a) that the bank knew that the bonds in question might probably belong to a client of the stockbroker; (b) that the bank did not believe that the stockbroker had been expressly authorized by his client to pledge the bonds en bloc with the securities of other persons; but (c) that the bank, relying on the honesty of the stockbroker, believed that he had been authorized by his client to raise some money on the bonds, and honestly believed that such authority carried with it as a matter of law authority to pledge the bonds en bloc.

Held, on these facts, that the stockbroker had appropriated the newly-purchased bonds to S. before pledging them to the bank, and, even assuming that the bonds in question were negotiable instruments in the full sense of the term "negotiable," yet that the bank never became bonâ fide holders of the bonds for value without notice, and accordingly that S. was entitled to the relief claimed.

The same stockbroker, acting on instructions from L., and having received money from him for that purpose, purchased for L. shares in a foreign company, shares in an English company, and bonds of a foreign Government. The share certificates of the foreign company were transferable by delivery from hand to hand, as were also the share warrants of the English company, and the bonds of the foreign Government were payable to bearer.

With respect to the foreign company's shares, those purchased for L. were delivered to the stockbroker, who entered them by their numbers in his book as belonging to L. With respect to the English company's shares, those contracted to be purchased for L. were not delivered to the stockbroker, but he purchased and took delivery of a number of similar shares, and entered them as L.'s in the number book. With respect to the bonds of the foreign Government, they were contracted to be purchased for L. in two lots, and one lot so purchased was actually delivered to the stockbroker, and their numbers entered as L.'s in the number book. The other lot was not delivered to the stockbroker, but he purchased and took delivery of an equal number of similar bonds, and entered them as L.'s in his number book. The stockbroker, without the knowledge of L., pledged these shares and bonds en bloc with securities belonging to others, to his bank for objects and under circumstances similar to those mentioned with regard to the bonds of S.

The same inferences of fact were drawn by the Court of Appeal from the evidence in L.'s case as in the case of S.

Held, on these facts, that the shares and bonds taken by the stockbroker in substitution for those contracted to be purchased for L. had been appropriated by the stockbroker to L. before they were pledged to the bank, and, assuming that the bonds and shares in question were negotiable instruments in the full sense of the term, that the bank were not bonâ fide holders for value without notice, and, accordingly, that the bank should restore them to L.

Quære, whether the shares in question were negotiable instruments.

Decision of Kekewich, J., affirmed.—Simmons v. London Joint-Stock Bank, Little v. London Joint-Stock Bank, C.A. 449—[1891] 1 Ch. 270; 60 L. J. Ch. 313; 63 L. T. 789.

NEW SOUTH WALES, LAW of:—

1. Act 26 Vict. No. 20, ss. 1, 2—Construction—Devolution of wife's realty after husband's tenancy by the curtesy expired.—The effect of New South Wales Act 26 Vict. No. 20, ss. 1, 2, is to give all land which previously descended to the heir to the next of kin of the predecessors.

Held, that the proviso which follows, to the effect that "nothing herein contained shall give to any husband on the death of his wife intestate any greater interest in the real estate of his wife, or in the product thereof upon sale, than a tenancy for life by the curtesy," does not operate to prevent such real estate after the death of the husband descending under the Act to the wife's next of kin instead of to her heir-at-law.—Plomley v. Shepherd, P.C.—[1891] A. C. 244; 60 L. J. P. C. 18; 64 L. T. 94.

2 Crown Lands Alienation Act, 1861—Conditional purchase in the name of an infant—Non-compliance with the conditions of the Act.—The respondent (an infant of six years) having been entered by the appellant, under the Crown Lands Alienation Act, 1861, as a conditional purchaser of land selected by the appellant as forming part of his own run, the latter paid the deposit money, made the requisite statutory improvements at his own expense, continued to occupy the same as part of his own run, and paid the balance of the purchase-money.

In an action by the appellant after the respondent came of age to have the latter declared a trustee for him and for an order of transfer,

Held, (a) that the respondent was not a statutory purchaser, since the conditions of the Act were not complied with by him personally, nor by another for his benefit.

O'Shanassy v. Joachim, 1 App. Cas. 82, distinguished.

(b) That the appellant was not a statutory purchaser, since his proceedings, being under cover of the respondent's name, with a view to create in him a right subject to a resulting trust, were not a compliance with the conditions of the Act.

Barton v. Muir, L. R. 6 P. C. 134, distinguished.—Tooth v. Power, P.C.—[1891] A. C. 284; 64 L. T. 698.

3. Insolvent Act, s. 41—Bill of sale—Distress for rent—Right of landlord.

Held, that, according to the true construction of New South Wales Insolvent Act (5 Vict. No. 17), s. 41, the prohibition of "distress for rent" after sequestration of the tenant's estate does not authorize the holder of a bill of sale to take his goods (the subject of such bill) out of the hands of the landlord's bailiff in possession thereof under such distress.—Railton v. Wood, P.C.—15 App. Cas. 363; 59 L. J. P. C. 84; 63 L. T. 13.

NEW ZEALAND, LAW of:—

Pilot—Timaru Harbour Act, 1876—The Harbours Acts, 1878 and 1886—Powers of the harbour board—Pilotage contract—Statutory liability.

Held, that the respondent harbour board, as constituted by the Timaru Harbour Act, 1876, and the Harbours Act, 1878, had no authority under the statutes or the rules thereunder made to enter into pilotage contracts, but only to licence pilots. Consequently it could not be held responsible for the default of its harbour master, who was acting, not as harbour master, but as pilot engaged by the appellants for their vessel at the time when vessel and cargo were lost.—Shaw, Savill, and Albion Co. v. Timaru Harbour Board, P.C.—15 App. Cas. 429; 59 L. J. P. C. 77; 62 L. T. 913.

NUISANCE:—

1. Noise—Club—Crowds—Cabs—Whistling—Injunction.—A proprietary club was established at which entertainments consisting of pugilistic encounters were given, which caused the collection of large crowds outside the club. The noise of the shouting of the crowd, and the frequency on all nights, and until early in the morning, of whistling from the club for cabs, which, in their turn, created much noise in driving to the club, prevented the tenants and occupiers of adjoining houses from sleeping at night. In an action brought by the owners, lessees, and occupiers of a neighbouring house against the proprietor of the club, Held, that the nuisance from the crowds and cabs was the reasonable and probable consequence of the defendant's acts, and that an injunction ought to issue to restrain it, as well as the whistling for cabs during certain hours.—Bellamy v. Wells, CH.D. ROM., J. 158—60 L. J. Ch. 156; 63 L. T. 635.

2. Noise—Water company—Negligence—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 12.—The defendants, in the exercise of their statutory powers, sunk a shaft in land adjacent to the plaintiff's house, and for this purpose employed certain lift pumps, the noise of which seriously interfered with the plaintiff's comfort. The plaintiff having commenced an action for nuisance, the defendants substituted centrifugal pumps, which diminished the noise of the pumping. When the sinking of the shaft was commenced it became necessary to lower and lengthen the pumps from time to time, but at the date when the centrifugal pumps were substituted the sinking of the shaft had arrived at a point at which this operation had ceased to be necessary. The defendants might have used centrifugal pumps from the commencement, but they were less convenient, on account of the difficulty of lowering and lengthening them, and on account of the increased labour attending their use, and they were not the pumps ordinarily used in sinking shafts.

Held, that the annoyance, being temporary and for a lawful object, did not amount to a nuisance at law.

Held, further, that the authority conferred on the defendants to sink the shaft included all things reasonably necessary for the execution of the work.

Fenwick v. East London Railway Co., L. R. 20 Eq. 544, explained and distinguished. — Harrison v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co., CH.D. WILL., J.—[1891] 2 Ch. 409; 64 L. T. 864.

3. Pollution of stream—Local board—Neglect of public duty—Mandamus or Injunction—Waiver.—In 1868 a bill was filed praying an injunction to restrain a local board from causing or permitting sewage to pass into a stream so as to be a nuisance. An answer was put in which did not raise any question as to the jurisdiction to grant an injunction. In November, 1872, the court granted an interlocutory injunction. In February, 1889, a supplemental writ was issued by leave, asking for an injunction and for damages. At the trial Kay, J., decided that the defendants had practically abated the nuisance, and that, therefore, an injunction was unnecessary, but that the defendants ought to pay certain damages. Upon objection being taken that the action was misconceived, the only remedy being by mandamus, and that the court had no jurisdiction,

Held, that if the proper remedy was by mandamus, the defendants must be taken to have waived any objection on that ground; and, further, that where there is jurisdiction to grant an injunction, damages may be given instead thereof, and that, therefore, the injunction would not be continued.—Warwick and Birmingham Canal Co. v. Burman, CH.D. KAY, J.—63 L. T. 670.

See also LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 9; LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND), 4; WATERCOURSE.

ORIGINATING SUMMONS.—See PRACTICE, 47.

PARISH CLERK.—See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW, 3.

PARLIAMENT:—

1. Franchise—Registration of voters—Occupation franchise—Bankruptcy of occupying tenant—Subsequent acceptance of rent—Undisturbed occupation—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 20, 168—Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), s. 3, sub-section 2.—In support of an objection to the name of a voter being retained on an occupation list, it was proved that he had been adjudicated bankrupt during the qualifying period. The trustee in bankruptcy, however, had not interfered, the voter had remained in occupation, and the voter's landlord had accepted rent from him, subsequently to the adjudication. The revising barrister retained the name of the voter on the list.

Held, that the revising barrister was right.—Mackay v. McGuire, Q.B.D. 109—[1891] 1 Q. B. 250; 60 L. J. Q. B. 24; 64 L. T. 83.

2. Franchise—Registration of voters—Disqualifying alms—Alms-person—Reform Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45), s. 36.—On an objection made to a voter that he had received disqualifying alms during the qualifying period, it was proved that the voter was, during the whole of the period, an alms-person of a certain hospital; that, as such alms-person, he received a weekly allowance of ten shillings and washing, and occupied a plot of ground assigned to him by the trustees of the charity; that the alms-persons were elected from poor persons of good character; that they could not be absent from the almshouse without the consent of the trustees; and that they were liable to be removed at the discretion of the trustees for certain causes.

Held, that such alms-persons had received disqualifying alms within the meaning of section 36 of the Reform Act, 1832, and were not entitled to be registered as voters.—Dix v. Kent, Q.B.D. 173—63 L. T. 641.

3. Franchise—Registration of voters—Notice of objection to overseers—Signature of objector—List of names after signature—Authentication—Form I., No. 1, in schedule to Registration Order, 1889—Registration Act, 1885 (48 Vict. c. 15), s. 18.—A notice of objection given to overseers was as follows:—"I hereby give you notice that I object to the names of the persons mentioned and described below being retained on the list as parliamentary electors for the parliamentary city of N." (signed by the objector). After the signature of the objector came a list of the names of the persons objected to. An objection was taken that this notice was a departure from the form, and was bad, on the ground that the signature of the objector ought to have been after the list of names.

Held, that the notice of objection did not substantially depart from the form in the schedule to the Registration Order, 1889, and was good.—Sutton v. Wade, Gale v. Overend, Moore v Atkinson, Q.B.D. 223—[1891] 1 Q. B. 269; 60 L. J. Q. B. 28; 63 L. T. 588.

4. Franchise — Registration of voters — Signature of notice of claim—6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, s. 38.—The appellant gave his agent a written authority to make and sign on the appellant's behalf a claim to vote in one of the parliamentary divisions of the county, or in the administrative county, or both, as he might seem to be qualified. A notice of claim to be placed on Division I. of the occupiers' list was thereupon prepared and signed with the appellant's name by a clerk of the agent under his direction.

Held, that the affixing of the signature to the notice of claim by the clerk instead of the agent did not establish that the appellant had not given due notice of his claim within 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, s. 38.—Brown v. Tombs, Q.B.D.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 253; 60 L. J. Q. B. 38; 64 L. T. 114.

5. Franchise—Registration of voters—County vote—Ownership list—Description and nature of qualification—Power of revising barrister to amend—Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), s. 24; s. 28, sub-sections 1, 12, 13—Registration Act, 1885 (48 Vict. c. 15), s. 1, sub-section 2.—The nature of the qualification of a person in the list of ownership claimants was described in the third column as "freehold house." The revising barrister, on proof that the claimant possessed a leasehold qualification in respect of the house in question, substituted "leasehold" for "freehold" in the third column.

Held (affirming the decision of the Queen's Bench Division), that the revising barrister had no power to make the alteration.—Plant v. Potts, C.A.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 256; 60 L. J. Q. B. 33; 63 L. T. 730.

6. Franchise—Registration of voters—County vote—

Freehold qualification—Claims of members of chapter to vote in respect of a share in the freehold lands of chapter—4 & 5 Vict. c. 39, s. 25—Registration Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 18), s. 74.—The canons residentiary of a cathedral who are entitled under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 39, s. 25, to a fixed share in the corporate revenues have no freehold qualification in respect of shares in the freehold lands of the corporation.—Harris v. Phillips, Q.B.D.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 267.

7. Franchise—Registration of voters—Non-payment of seed rate—Disqualification.—A person is not disqualified from being registered as a parliamentary voter by reason of the non-payment of instalments due by him for seed rate under the Seed Supply (Ireland) Act, 1880.—Lamont v. Coy, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 242.

8. Franchise—Registration of voters—Notice of objection—Receipt of poor law relief—48 & 49 Vict. c. 17, s. 20.—A notice of objection stating that the objection is grounded on any of the columns of the register is insufficient where the ground of objection is that the person objected to had received poor law relief during the qualifying period.—Quinlan v. McCarthy, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 246.

9. Franchise—Registration of voters—Notice of objection—Personal service at place of abode as described in list—13 & 14 Vict. c. 69, ss. 26, 113.—An objector served a notice of objection to the retention of a name upon the list of voters by putting the notice under the door of the house which was described in the list as his place of abode. The objector knew that the voter did not reside there; he knew where he resided; and he knew that there was no probability of the voter getting the notice.

Held, that the notice had not been duly served.

Watson v. Pitt, 5 C. B. 77, followed.

Gifford v. St. Luke's, Chelsea, 24 Q. B. D. 141, and Allen v. Greensill, 4 C. B. 100, considered.—Magee v. Mortimer, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 251.

10. Franchise—Registration of voters—Inhabitant occupier—Rating.—The inhabitant occupier of a dwelling-house which was rateable, and ought to have been rated, but was not rated for the relief of the poor to a rate made during the qualifying period, and during his occupation, is not entitled to the franchise. A dwelling-house which ought to have been so rated was not rated, but was subsequently valued, and the amount which the rate ought to have been was tendered, and a claim to be rated was served on the guardians, under the provisions of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 69, s. 110.

Held, that the tender and claim had no effect.

A. was an inhabitant occupier of a rated dwelling-house previously to the 20th of July, 1889, up to a date in the qualifying period subsequent to the striking of the only rate made during the qualifying period, when he went into occupation in immediate succession of another house, in which he continued to reside during the remainder of the qualifying period. The second house had formerly been rated, but having fallen into ruin was omitted from the rate-book for several years before and in the qualifying year. Subsequently to the striking of the rate in the qualifying period the house was repaired and became liable to be rated.

Held, that the case was undistinguishable from Criglington v. Anderson, 26 L. R. Ir. 131, and that A. was entitled to the franchise.

B. was an inhabitant occupier of a dwelling-house which was marked in the rate-book as "exempt," under the provisions of 48 & 49 Vict. c. 3, s. 9, and was not rated.

Held, that, even if the house was not by law exempt, it was not the function of the revising barrister to revise the rate-book or the valuation roll, and that B. was entitled to the franchise.—McGaffigan v. Riddall, McCready v. Chambers, Hinds v. Chambers, Riddall v. McAleer, Moorehead v. Torish, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 257.

11. Franchise—Registration of voters—Compulsory absence during part of the qualifying period—Fine for drunkenness not paid at rising of court—Detention in waiting-room of gaol for twenty minutes.—P. M. was fined by the Mayor of Londonderry for being drunk and disorderly, and in default of payment he was sentenced to be imprisoned. The fine was not paid at the rising of the Mayor's Court, and P. M. was taken to the waiting-room of the gaol before being placed in a cell. After being in the waiting-room twenty minutes the fine was paid and he was discharged.

Held, that P. M., who was otherwise entitled to the franchise, was not disqualified by such detention.—M'Carron v. Chambers, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 294.

12. Franchise — Registration of voters — Lodger franchise—Joint and several occupation.—G. and W. jointly rented a sitting-room, and each of them had a bed-room in the same house. The three rooms were of the requisite value.

Held (diss. O'Brien, C.J.), that the claimants were entitled to the franchise.—Kelly v. Chambers, Gilliland's case, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 289.

13. Franchise — Registration of voters — Lodger franchise—Bed-room in hotel taken for the year—Permission to hotel proprietor to let the room during lodger's absence.—R. M. occupied a bed-room in an hotel by the year, and had the use of a sitting-room. The lodgings were of the requisite value. He gave leave to the hotel proprietor to let the bed-room while he was absent on vacation, and the money paid by such persons was received by the proprietor of the hotel.

Held, that R. M. was entitled to the franchise.—Kelly v. Chambers, M'Connell's case, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 292.

See CRIMINAL LAW, 5; POOR RATE, 5.

PARTITION ACTION:—

1. Costs—Adverse claimants.—Action for partition of property to which plaintiff, defendant, and G. were entitled in thirds. After judgment, but before the certificate, G. died, leaving three wills, each making a different disposition of his share. The certificate found that the plaintiff and defendant were each entitled to one-third of the property, and that A. or B. or C. (the person claiming under G.) was entitled to G.'s share. Before further consideration the will under which C. claimed was established by proceedings in the Probate Court. C. applied in the partition action that the certificate might be amended by finding her entitled to G.'s share. The certificate was amended, and C. was ordered to pay to A. and B. their costs of that application. On further consideration,

Held, that C. should have her costs of the partition action, including her costs of application to amend the certificate, but not the costs which she had paid to A. and B.—Hawkes v. Hawkes, CH.D. KEK., J.—63 L. T. 488.

2. Costs — Mortgagees of shares — Discretionary power of court—Share—Partition Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 40), s. 10.—The rule in administration actions, that only one set of costs will be allowed in respect of each share, does not apply in the case of partition actions, in which the court, by virtue of section 10 of the Partition Act, 1868, has an absolute discretion as to costs, and will, as a general rule, order the costs of all parties, including the mortgagees of any share, to be borne by the whole estate, a share being "the share of a person found to be entitled to a share by the chief clerk's certificate."

The defendants in a partition action were found to be entitled to an unincumbered moiety of the estate, and the plaintiffs were found to be entitled to the other moiety, upon which there were several mortgages. The estate was sold and the proceeds paid into court.

Held, that the costs of all parties, including the mortgagees of the plaintiffs' moiety, were payable out of the whole fund.—Belcher v. Williams, CH.D. NOR., J. 266—45 Ch. D. 510; 63 L. T. 673.

PARTNERSHIP:—

1. Arbitration—Question of dissolution—Motion to stay proceedings.—The question whether there ought or ought not to be a dissolution of partnership is one which, whether or not strictly within the terms of an arbitration clause in partnership articles, ought not to be referred to arbitration.—Turnell v. Sanderson, CH.D. KEK., J.—64 L. T. 654.

2. Loans by partners—Partnership action—Costs of—Partnership debts.—Two partners had voluntarily brought sums of money into their partnership, although there was no stipulation in the partnership agreement that they should bring in any capital, and at the date of the dissolution of the partnership pursuant to an order in an action for such dissolution, moneys were found to be due to the plaintiff and defendant respectively in respect of the sums so brought in.

Held, that the two sums were loans by the individual partners; and that the case fell entirely within the principle of the decision in Potter v. Jackson, 13 Ch. D. 845, 42 L. T. N. S. 294.

Held, therefore, that such loans must be paid out of the partnership assets in priority to the costs of the action.—Rosher v. Crannis, CH.D. CHI., J.—63 L. T. 272.

3. Fraud of co-partner—Liability—Solicitor and client—Misrepresentation—Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, c. 16)—Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), s. 8.—S. M. deposited, between the years 1867 and 1876, with her solicitors, Messrs. M., G., & B., sums amounting to £351 for investment. G. died in 1877, B. died in 1887, and M., who was adjudicated bankrupt in 1888, died in 1890. Interest at five per cent. was paid to S. M. by the firm down to G.'s death, and by the surviving partners from then to 1886. S. M. claimed to recover from the joint assets of the partnership, which was being wound up in another action, or (if these were not sufficient) from the legal personal representatives of G. and B. and the trustee in bankruptcy of M., the sums so placed with the firm for investment, which (except as to an amount of £50) were in fact never invested, but misappropriated and applied to the purposes of the firm.

In 1876, before G.'s death, an account was rendered by the firm containing misrepresentations as to all the sums (except the £50), and by a continuance of such misrepresentations the plaintiff was prevented from discovering the truth till 1886, when the period fixed by the Statute of Limitations had expired.

The personal representative of G., who alone really defended the action, relied on a plea of this statute and the Trustee Act, 1888.

Held, that the principles laid down in Blair v. Bromley, 5 Hare, 542, 2 Phil. 354, which did not proceed on any rule or principle of equity specially applicable to trustees, applied and remained unaffected by the Trustee Act, 1888, and the plaintiff was entitled to the relief claimed by her.—Moore v. Knight, CH.D. STI., J. 312—[1891] 1 Ch. 547; 60 L. J. Ch. 271; 63 L. T. 831.

4. Partner engaging in another business—Use of name of firm—Profits of the other business claimed as assets of the partnership—Information gained as a partner.—If a member of a partnership firm avails himself of information obtained by him in the course of the transaction of partnership business, or by reason of his connection with the firm, for any purpose within the scope of the partnership business, or for any purpose which would compete with the partnership business, he is liable to account to the firm for any benefit he may obtain from the use of such information; but if he uses the information for purposes which are wholly without the scope of the partnership business, and not competing with it, the firm is not entitled to an account of such benefit.

A member of a firm of shipbrokers styled "H. C. & Co." assisted in the formation of a joint-stock company for building ships, and in so doing availed himself of information obtained as a member of the firm, and occasionally used the name and office paper of the firm in his correspondence on that subject. He received remuneration for his services in the formation of the company, and was made a director of the company, when formed, at a salary. He also threatened to engage in the separate business of a shipowner under the style of "H. C. & Co., shipowning." The other partners brought an action to restrain him from using the name of the firm in a separate business, and claiming an account of his profits and salary in connection with the new company.

Held (affirming the decision of Kekewich, J.), that the defendant must be restrained from using the name of H. C. & Co.; but Held (reversing the decision of Kekewich, J.), that, as the business of the new company was beyond the scope of, and did not compete with, the partnership business, the defendant was not bound to account for the benefit obtained by him in connection with the new company.

The use by the defendant of the name and paper of H. C. & Co. in promoting the shipbuilding company was held not to be sufficient to show that, as between the defendant and his partners, shipbuilding was within the scope of the partnership business.

Dean v. Macdonald, 8 Ch. D. 345, explained and followed.—Aas v. Benham, C.A.—[1891] 2 Ch. 244; 65 L. T. 25.

5. Purchase of deceased partner's share—Clause as to—Expiration of term—Continuance for purpose of winding up.—A partnership agreement between two persons for a term of years provided that, upon the death of either partner, the surviving partner should purchase the deceased partner's share, and that the whole property of the partnership should vest absolutely in him.

Held, that this clause did not apply where the partnership term had expired, and where the partnership business was carried on solely for the purpose of winding it up.—Myers v. Myers, CH.D. CHI., J.—60 L. J. Ch. 311.

See also PRACTICE (WRIT), 61, 64—69; SOLICITOR, 17; WILL, 1.

PATENT:—

1. Confirmation and extension—Relaxation of Rule

No. 1 with regard to notices—Expiration of previous foreign patent.—By section 25 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83 an English patent ceases at the expiration of a prior foreign patent for the same invention.

Section 113, sub-section 1, of 46 & 47 Vict. c. 57 saves to a patentee existing at the date of the Act his right to a confirmation under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, s. 2, subject, however, to the above qualification.

The provisions of rule 1 relating to confirmation relaxed under special circumstances.

Petition for prolongation refused as inadmissible either under the Act of 1883 or the earlier law.—In re Jablochkoff's Patent, P.C.—[1891] A. C. 293; 65 L. T. 5.

2. Extension—Insufficiency of accounts.—Where the accounts filed by a patentee showed, not the result of the books, but the accountant's correction of them, and where it also appeared that the books themselves had been kept in such a way that without a very long, minute, and laborious investigation it was impossible to say whether he had been adequately remunerated or not,

Held, that a petition for prolongation must be dismissed.—Lake's Patent, P.C.—[1891] A. C. 240.

3. Practice—Particulars of breaches—Application for further and better particulars—Rules of Court, 1883, ord. 19, r. 7—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 29, sub-section 1.—The plaintiffs' patent was for improvements in railway carriage, street, and other lamps, and their specification contained four claims—viz., for a lamp, a modified form of lamp, a method of supplying heated air, and a method of distributing the heated air. The plaintiffs brought an action against the defendants for infringement, and by the particulars of breaches delivered with the statement of claim they alleged infringement by the defendants by using the mechanism claimed in those four claims, and complained of a particular lamp sold by the defendants. The defendants applied for further and better particulars, asking what parts of the specification and figures had been infringed, which of the lamps had been infringed, and whether the plaintiffs claimed all lamps with the methods of supplying and distributing the heated air, or only one of the two lamps claimed.

At the hearing of the application the plaintiffs withdrew the allegation of infringement of the first claim.

Held, that the particulars as so amended were sufficient, as they told the defendants what the plaintiffs said they had done in infringement; and that it was not the office of particulars to answer an interrogatory as to the construction of the patent.—Wenham Co. v. Champion Gas Lamp Co. and Todlenhaupt & Co., CH.D. CHI., J.—63 L. T. 827.

4. Practice—Particulars of objections—Amendment—Design—Patents, &c., Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 29.—The practice as to the terms on which the court gives leave to amend particulars of objection in an action to restrain infringement of a patent will be followed in a similar action with regard to a registered design.—Morris, Wilson, & Co. v. Coventry Machinists' Co., CH.D. NOR., J.—60 L. J. Ch. 524.

5. Prior publication—Protection in foreign country—International Convention, 1883—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 103—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 63), s. 6.—A patentee, who has obtained a patent in this country for the full period of fourteen years, cannot rely upon the protection given by section 103 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883 (as amended by section 6 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1885), against the consequences of a prior publication in this country of a description of the same invention already patented in a foreign country, with which international arrangements have been made under the Convention of 1883.—British Tanning Co. v. Groth, CH.D. ROM., J.—60 L. J. Ch. 235; 64 L. T. 21.

6. Specification—Amendment—Validity—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 18.—A patent was granted for "a telescope ladder for domestic and other purposes." The specification claimed—"(1) The two ladders occupying the space of one only; (2) the ready means of working by the cord; (3) the simple bracket lever by which the ladder is secured at any required length." The patentee subsequently amended his specification by leave by striking out (1), (2), and (3), and substituting "The combination in a telescope ladder herein described, of means for raising, lowering, and stopping, all as herein described and shown in accompanying drawings." In an action for infringement, Held, upon the construction of the entire specification before amendment, that the claim was really for a combination, and that therefore the amendment was only "a correction or explanation" within section 18 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, and did not make the specification as amended claim an invention substantially larger than, or substantially different from, the original claim; and consequently that the amendment did not render the patent invalid.—Kelly v. Heathman, CH.D. NOR., J. 91—45 Ch. D. 256; 60 L. J. Ch. 22; 63 L. T. 517.

7. Specification—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 5, sub-sections 3, 5; s. 9, sub-section 1; s. 26, sub-section 3.—Where the complete specification required by the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, does not conclude with a distinct statement of the invention claimed, as directed by section 5, sub-section 5, of the Act, it is not fatal to the validity of the patent.

Decision of the Court of Appeal affirmed.—Vickers, Son, & Co. v. Liddell, H.L. (E.) 385—15 App. Cas. 496; 60 L. J. Ch. 105; 63 L. T. 590.

8. Threats—Injunction—Alleged infringement—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 32.—The registered owner of an invention had agreed to assign it to a company, and had commenced an action against another company for infringing it, and the company to whom the patent was agreed to be assigned had threatened the other company and their customers with legal proceedings in respect of the alleged infringement.

Held, that, under section 32 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, the latter company were persons aggrieved and entitled to obtain an injunction to restrain such threats; and that, the action for the infringement not having been brought by the company who had made the threats, but by the legal owner of the patent, they were not within the proviso in section 32 that the section should not apply.—Kennington and Knightsbridge Electric Lighting Co. (Limited) v. Lane Fox Electrical Co. (Limited), CH.D. STI., J. 650—[1891] 2 Ch. 573; 64 L. T. 770.

See also COUNTY COURT, 9; PRACTICE (DISCOVERY), 31, 32.

PAWNBROKER:—

Certificate—Licence—Person being a licensed pawnbroker at commencement of Act, his assigns or successors—Inland revenue—Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 93), s. 39.—The successor by purchase or assignment of a person who, at the commencement of the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, was a licensed pawnbroker is entitled to a licence without the production of a certificate of justices within the meaning of the saving clause of section 39 of that Act.—Reg. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, Ex parte Ohlson; Reg. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, Ex parte Garland, Q.B.D. 317—[1891] 1 Q. B. 485; 60 L. J. Q. B. 376; 64 L. T. 57.

POOR LAW:—

1. Election of assistant overseer—Jurisdiction of justices—Power to review election—59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 65, s. 1.—By 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7, the inhabitants of a parish in vestry assembled are to nominate and elect an assistant overseer of the poor, and it shall be lawful for any two justices by warrant under their hands to appoint any person so nominated and elected to be assistant overseer.

Held, that the justices' duty is purely ministerial, and they have no power to hear evidence as to an objection to the validity of the election, even though such objection was taken at the time of the meeting and entered on the minutes.—Underwood v. Jones, Q.B.D.—60 L. J. M. C. 58; 64 L. T. 144.

2. Lunatic—County asylum—Private patient becoming pauper—Chargeability—Lunatic Asylums Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 97), ss. 95, 96.—A lunatic was sent by her relations from a parish in the Ipswich Union to the asylum at Macclesfield as a private patient. Subsequently they gave notice to the asylum that they would cease paying for her maintenance as a private patient. The clerk to the asylum thereupon gave notice to the guardians of the Macclesfield Union that the lunatic had been transferred to the list of pauper patients chargeable to their union. The guardians accordingly paid a sum for her maintenance.

Held, that none of the provisions of the Lunatic Asylums Act, 1853, applied to the circumstances of the case; that the lunatic was not chargeable to the Macclesfield Union; that the payment by that union was made under a mistake; and consequently that an order upon the Ipswich Union to repay the sum was bad.—Guardians of Ipswich Union v. Guardians of Macclesfield Union, Q.B.D. 221—63 L. T. 526.

3. Lunatic—Expenses of maintenance—County lunatic asylum—Additional charge—Power to fix amount of charge—Committee of visitors—Arbitration—16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 54—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 62, 86.—By the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 86, sub-section 4, "Where at the passing of this Act a borough with a separate court of quarter sessions, not being a county borough, &c., contracts with the quarter sessions of the county in which the borough is situate for the reception of the lunatics of the borough in the asylum of the county, such borough shall, on the determination of such contract, cease to have power to build a lunatic asylum, and, subject to the enactments providing for an additional charge for the maintenance of lunatics in cases where no contribution has been made towards the cost of building and furnishing an asylum, shall be liable to contribute to the county rate of the county in respect of such lunatic asylum in like manner as the rest of the county."

Held, that the meaning of the above clause must be taken to be that the committee of visitors of a county lunatic asylum have no longer the power which they formerly possessed, under section 54 of the Act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, of fixing the amount to be paid for the maintenance of a pauper lunatic sent to them from a borough which has not contributed towards the cost of building and furnishing the asylum; but, in case of a difference, the borough authorities are entitled to have the amount due ascertained by arbitration under section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888.—Howlett v. Mayor, &c., of Maidstone, C.A.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 110; 60 L. J. Q. B. 570.

4. Practice—Suspension of order of removal—Costs of maintenance of pauper during suspension—Order for payment of—Whether ex parte or on summons—35 Geo. 3, c. 101, s. 2—4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 84.—Where an order for the removal of a pauper has been suspended in consequence of the pauper's inability to travel, an application to justices by the removing union for an order for the payment by the union to which the pauper belongs of the costs of his maintenance during the period of suspension must be made upon summons, and not ex parte.—Reg. v. Wilkinson, Q.B.D.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 722.

5. Settlement by residence—Removal before 1876—Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), ss. 34, 36.—Section 34 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876, gives a settlement in a parish by three years' continuous residence therein; and section 36 provides that "the provisions relating to settlement shall not apply to any pauper removed under any order of removal . . . before the passing of this Act."

Held, that these words in section 36, "any pauper removed," apply only to a person who was a pauper at the time the Act was passed, and so long as he remained a pauper; and that, therefore, they do not operate to deprive of the benefit of section 34 a person who had been removed under an order of removal in 1866, but who was not a pauper at the time the Act was passed, and who had resided continuously in one parish from 1870 to 1881.—Guardians of the Poor of the Parish of Brighton v. Guardians of the Poor of the Strand Union, C.A. 581—[1891] 2 Q. B. 156; 60 L. J. M. C. 105; 64 L. T. 722.

POOR LAW (IRELAND):—

1. Accounts—Guardians—Erroneous application of moneys received by them as sanitary authority—Reopening accounts—Certificate of auditor—Rate.—Poor law guardians, being also the rural sanitary authority, for some years erroneously applied the income arising from waterworks to the general poor law relief, and their accounts were certified as correct by the Local Government Board auditor.

Held, that, upon a subsequent audit, these accounts might be reopened, and a valid rate might be struck to meet the consequent debit certified in the poor law accounts at the last-mentioned audit.—Reg. v. Guardians of Omagh Union, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—26 L. R. Ir. 619.

2. Guardians—Dismissal of servant—District lunatic asylum—30 & 31 Vict. c. 118, s. 6.—Under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 118, s. 6, the board of guardians of a district lunatic asylum may dismiss their servants at their absolute will and discretion, without any misconduct on the part of the servant being alleged or proved.—Hayes v. Governors of Richmond Lunatic Asylum, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 107.

POOR RATE:—

1. Appeal—Assessment committee—Valuation list—Right of objector to appear by agent—Valuation (Metroplis) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), ss. 19, 32.—There is nothing in the Valuation (Metroplis) Act, 1869, to limit the right of a ratepayer or body of ratepayers who object to the valuation list to appear before the assessment committee by any authorized agent, and the assessment committee have no power to restrict the right of audience to the ratepayer himself, or a member of his family or household, or a member of the legal profession on his behalf.—Reg. v. Assessment Committee of St. Mary Abbotts, Kensington, C.A. 278—[1891] 1 Q. B. 378; 60 L. J. M. C. 52; 64 L. T. 240.

2. Deficiency in assessments—Lands taken in consideration of owners withdrawing opposition in Parliament—Lands not used for the purposes of the works—Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 133.—A railway company purchased certain houses outside the limits of deviation in pursuance of agreements entered into with the owners in consideration of their withdrawing their opposition to the passing of the special Act. These houses were not required or used for the purposes of the works. Some of the houses were unoccupied at the time of the passing of the special Act. A deficiency having, in consequence, arisen in the assessments of the houses to the poor rate, Held (affirming the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division, 39 W. R. 144, [1891] 1 Q. B. 182), that the company could not be heard to say, as against the parish, that the houses had not been "taken or used for the purposes of the works" within the meaning of section 133 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and that the company were liable to make good the deficiency.

Held, also, that, in estimating the amount of the deficiency, the assessments of the houses, both occupied and unoccupied, at the time of the passing of the special Act, must be compared with the assessments of the houses made subsequently from time to time until the completion of the works.—Overseers of Putney v. London and South-Western Railway Co., C.A. 291—[1891] 1 Q. B. 440; 60 L. J. Q. B. 438; 64 L. T. 280.

3. Deficiency in assessments—Land taken by railway company—Lighting rate—Public libraries rate—Metropolitan consolidated rate—Liability of railway company—"General purposes rate," meaning of—London and South-Western Railway Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. clxxxix.), s. 14—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 133.—Section 14 of the London and South-Western Railway Act, 1883, provides that, while the company are possessed of any lands assessed or liable to be assessed to any sewers rate, main drainage rate, or general purposes rate, they shall from time to time, until the railway or the works thereof are completed and assessed or liable to be assessed to the respective rates, be liable to make good the deficiency in the assessment for the respective rates.

Held, that the expression "general purposes rate" in this section was intended by the Legislature to apply to all rates made for general purposes, viz., for purposes in which the great majority of parishioners have a common interest, and that, under this term, the company were bound to make good the deficiency in the assessment for the metropolitan consolidated rate, the lighting rate, and the public libraries rate respectively.—Burrup v. The London and South-Western Railway Co., Q.B.D.—64 L. T. 112.

4. Limits of borough—Interpretation of charter by long user—Presumption—Rateable occupation of tramway.—The appellants having been rated to the relief of the poor of the borough of Plymouth as occupiers of a harbour, appealed upon the ground that the harbour was not within the limits of the borough.

Held, upon a case stated, that in construing the Plymouth Charter of Incorporation of 18 Hen. 6, which defined the limits of the borough, having regard especially to the fact that the harbour had been rated for the relief of the poor of Plymouth for the last 150 years, it must be presumed that the harbour was within the limits of the borough.

Held, further, that, in ascertaining the rateable value of the harbour, a tramway constructed by the appellants, but worked and maintained exclusively by a railway company and for which the railway company paid rent, must be considered in the occupation of the railway company, who were the proper persons to be rated in respect thereof.—Sutton Harbour Improvement Co. v. Guardians of Plymouth, Q.B.D.—63 L. T. 772.

5. Part of a house—Structural severance—Separate occupation—"Dwelling-house"—Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), ss. 3, 7, 61—Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26) s. 5.—The appellants occupied a house containing four rooms on the ground floor and five on the first floor; the front door opened into a passage, which communicated with the ground floor rooms, and also, by means of a staircase, with the first floor rooms; the only water-closet was in the backyard, which was reached from the first floor by a door opening into one of the first floor rooms and from which there was a staircase outside the house; the respective portions of the house occupied by the appellants were let to them separately, and one of them had the exclusive use and occupation of the rooms on the ground floor, and the other of the rooms on the first floor. The tenant of the first floor used the external staircase leading into the yard, and not the internal staircase, and had the only key of the door leading to the external staircase, the tenant of the ground floor having the only key of the front door.

Held, that the appellants were entitled to be separately and not jointly rated for the relief of the poor.—Allchurch v. The Assessment Committee of the Hendon Union, Q.B.D.—64 L. T. 473.

6. Rateability—Industrial schools—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 3 (vii.).—An industrial school had been established (under the Industrial Schools Acts, 1866 and 1872) by the justices of a county, and had been transferred, under section 3 (vii.) of the Local Government Act, 1888, to the county council.

Held, that it was not occupied on behalf of the Crown, and was liable to be rated for the relief of the poor—Durham County Council v. Assessment Committee of Chester-le-Street Union, Q.B.D. 188—[1891] 1 Q. B. 330; 60 L. J. M. C. 9; 63 L. T. 46.

7. Rateability—Residence of police officers—Occupation for public purposes—Police station.—Certain buildings under one roof and surrounded by a wall consisted in part of private residences, occupied by the appellants, who were the chief constable and other officers of police, and their families, and in part of store-rooms, parade ground, and stables used for police purposes. There were no cells used for the reception and detention of prisoners. All the buildings were used exclusively for police purposes, the chief constable being bound to reside there as a condition of his appointment. Each officer paid a rent for the premises occupied by him, such rent being deducted from his pay. The appellants having been assessed to the poor rate in respect of the buildings occupied by them as residences,

Held, that, upon the facts, the appellants had a separate beneficial occupation of the premises, which were used by them as private residences, and not for public purposes, and that they were therefore rateable in respect thereof.

Decision of the Queen's Bench Division (39 W. R. 174) affirmed.—Showers v. Assessment Committee of Chelmsford Union, C.A. 231—[1891] 1 Q. B. 339; 60 L. J. M. C. 55; 64 L. T. 755.

8. Rateable value—Premises containing lace-making machinery, boiler, engine, &c.—Machinery capable of being removed without injury, &c.—Rateable value of.—Premises were used as a manufactory for the purpose of lace-making upon which certain boilers, engines, bobbin-net, and other machines were placed for carrying on the said manufactory; such machines were essential to the use of the said premises as a bobbin-net lace factory.

The machines were each of them, as machines, separate and distinct from each other, and could be easily removed for sale or repairs.

Some were fastened to the floors by screws through the feet of the machines; others were not fastened, their own weight being sufficient to keep them steady, but, further than this, the machines were no part of the soil or hereditaments.

Held, that, although some of the machinery and plant was capable of being removed without injury to itself or to the freehold, and although it remained personal property, yet, being essentially necessary and permanently attached to the appellants' business, it was all rightly taken into account in estimating the rateable value of the premises as enhancing the value of the hereditament.—Gifford, Fox, & Co. v. Chard Union, Q.B.D.—63 L. T. 249.

9. Rateable value — Waterworks — Local board—Basis of valuation—Water receipts—Deficiency in, to meet expenditure—Transfer from general district rate—Liability of sum transferred to be included in valuation.—Under certain statutory powers an urban authority was empowered to construct certain waterworks and to make certain charges for the supply of water. For the year ending in March, 1889, their expenditure in respect of the waterworks account was £14,107, and their receipts for water charges was only £5,700. To make up the deficiency a sum of £8,404 was transferred from the general district rates, this sum being used, as to £5,680, part thereof, in paying instalments of loan, and the balance of £2,724 for purposes other than instalments of loan. No part of this sum of £8,404 was received in respect of water charges, or of a rate in aid, nor was it applied towards the working expenses. It was admitted that the £5,680 could not be included in the calculation for estimating the rateable value; but the assessment committee contended that the sum of £2,724 ought to be included, in addition to the £5,700.

Held, that, as this sum of £2,724 was not available as an item of gross profits in the hands of a hypothetical tenant, it could not be included in the receipts for the purpose of arriving at the net rateable value.—Merthyr Tydfil Local Board v. Assessment Committee of the Merthyr Tydfil Union, Q.B.D. 255—[1891] 1 Q. B. 186; 60 L. J. M. C. 42; 63 L. T. 647.

POWER of APPOINTMENT:—

1. Benefit to donee of power—Release of power—Marriage settlement—Right to transfer of funds.—Under his marriage settlement the plaintiff had a power of appointment amongst children, and, in default of appointment, the children were entitled to funds as therein mentioned. Two children obtained a vested interest, one of whom died a bachelor and intestate. Letters of administration to his estate were granted to the plaintiff, who subsequently released his power of appointment over the fund, and asked for a declaration of his rights and a transfer to himself of one moiety of the trust funds as tenant for life of, and entitled in remainder to, that moiety.

Held, that, in the exercise of its discretion, the court will not assist the donee of a power to obtain a personal benefit through his having released that power.

Cunynghame v. Thurlow, 1 Russ. & My. 436n, followed.—In re Radcliffe, Radcliffe v. Bewes, CH.D. NOR., J. 457—[1891] 2 Ch. 662; 60 L. J. Ch. 436; 64 L. T. 386.

2. Exercise—General devise—Power of revocation and new appointment—Wills Act, s. 27.—By deed executed in 1870 real estate was appointed to K. B. and her husband during their joint lives and the life of the survivor of them, and ultimately to trustees upon trust for sale and to divide the proceeds equally between the children of C. at twenty-one or marriage, with power to K. B. and her husband, during their joint lives by deed, and to the survivor by deed or will, to revoke the uses therein declared and to declare other uses.

The joint power of revocation and new appointment was never exercised, nor the power of the survivor by deed.

K. B. died in 1890, having survived her husband, and, by her will, made after her husband's decease, devised all her real estate to trustees for sale, and to divide the proceeds equally between the two children of C. The testatrix had no real estate of her own.

Held, that the general devise did not operate under section 27 of the Wills Act as an exercise of the power of revocation, and that, therefore, the appointment under the deed of 1870 not being revoked, the real estate in question did not pass under K. B.'s will.—In re Brace, Welch v. Colt, CH.D. NOR., J. 508—[1891] 2 Ch. 671; 60 L. J. Ch. 505; 64 L. T. 525.

3. Exercise—Married woman—General testamentary power of appointment over property in reversion—Will not referring to power—General bequest—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 27.—A married woman, who had a general testamentary power of appointment over a trust fund, which was subject to the life interests of herself and her husband, but had no separate property and no other power of disposition or appointment over property, by her will, not referring to the power, bequeathed a sum of £400 to her brother, and the residue of all her properties, of whatsoever kind, "and any properties which may have become to me, or may become to me hereafter by will or otherwise," to her husband, whom she appointed executor. She died leaving her husband and brother surviving. The question was whether the legacy of £400 was presently payable.

Held, that the will must be construed as an appointment of the reversionary fund, as to £400 part thereof to the brother, and as to the residue thereof to the husband; and that, therefore, the legacy of £400 was not payable until the reversionary fund actually fell into possession.—In re Ludlam, Ludlam v. Ludlam, CH.D. KAY, J.—63 L. T. 330.

4. Exercise — Real estate — Particular power — General words—Power to appoint among children in tail — Appointment of life estate. — By a family partition deed of the 5th of September, 1837, a general power of appointment over real estate was given to a husband and wife. By a deed of the 9th of September, 1837, they exercised that power under the authority implied by his employment is binding on the client.

Matthews v. Munster, 36 W. R. 78, 20 Q. B. D. 141, distinguished.—Lewis v. Lewis, CH.D. KEK., J. 75—45 Ch. D. 281; 59 L. J. Ch. 712; 63 L. T. 84.

COSTS—

15. Copyright, infringement of—Dramatic copyright—Recovery of less than £10—Statutory right to "full indemnity"—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15, s. 2—5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, s. 2—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 116.—A plaintiff who has recovered penalties in an action brought under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15 for infringement of dramatic copyright is entitled to have his costs taxed on the footing of obtaining a "full indemnity" under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, s. 2, although the sum recovered be less than £10, neither the general provisions of the Judicature Acts and Rules as to costs, nor section 116 of the County Courts Act, 1888, applying to such a case.

Hasker v. Wood, 33 W. R. 697, followed.—Reeve v. Gibson, C.A. 420—[1891] 1 Q. B. 652; 60 L. J. Q. B. 451.

16. Copyright, infringement of—Taxation—"Full costs"—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), s. 26. —The term "full costs" in section 26 of the Copyright Act, 1842, merely means ordinary costs as between party and party.

Irwine v. Reddish, 5 B. & Ald. 796, and Jamieson v. Trevelyan, 3 W. R. 172, 10 Ex. 748, approved.—Avery v. Wood, C.A. 577.

17. Counsel—Refreshers—Ord. 65, r. 27 (48).—The trial of an action occupied less than five hours on the first day, and was concluded on the next day, having occupied altogether five hours and sixteen minutes.

Held, on taxation of costs, that a refresher fee to counsel could not be allowed.—Walker v. Crystal Palace District Gas Co., Q.B.D. 716—[1891] 2 Q. B. 300; 65 L. T. 86.

18. County court—Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), ss. 3, 9—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, r. 1.—Section 9 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, which enacts that a person taking proceedings in a superior court which they might, under section 3 of that Act, have taken in a county court, shall not be entitled to costs, unless the judge before whom the cause was tried shall certify that it was a proper cause to be tried in a superior court, is inconsistent with, and is repealed by, ord. 55, r. 1, of R. S. C., 1875, and ord. 65, r. 1, of R. S. C., 1883.

Tenant v. Ellis, 6 Q. B. D. 46, approved.—Rockett v. Clippingdale, C.A.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 293; 64 L. T. 641.

19. "Good cause"—Trial with jury—Discretion of judge—Place of trial—Ord. 65, r. 1.—The plaintiff, who lived in Cheshire, sued the defendant, who lived in Flintshire, for a sum of £640. The plaintiff not naming a place of trial, the action was tried in Middlesex, the defendant not having applied to change the venue. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for £200.

Ordered, on an application on behalf of the defendant, under ord. 65, r. 1, that the plaintiff should be allowed, as against the defendant, one-third of his costs, such costs to be taxed treating the trial as having taken place at Chester, and that the defendant should be allowed, as against the plaintiff, two-thirds of his costs, such costs to be taxed treating the trial as having taken place in Middlesex.

The plaintiff, who carried on business at Halifax, in Yorkshire, brought an action against the defendants, a railway company, to recover damages for personal injuries and loss of trade sustained by him owing to a collision which occurred on their railway near Halifax, claiming £262 for injuries, and £6,388 for loss of trade. The plaintiff named Middlesex as the place of trial. The defendant applied to change the venue to Leeds, but the application was refused. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for £800.

Ordered, on an application on behalf of the defendants under ord. 65, r. 1, that the plaintiff should have his costs so far as related to the claim for personal injuries, such costs to be taxed treating the trial as having taken place at Leeds, and should pay to the defendants all their costs so far as related to the claim for loss of trade, such costs to be taxed treating the trial as having taken place in Middlesex, and also the difference in the expenses of the defendants' medical evidence arising from the action having been tried in Middlesex instead of at Leeds. —Roberts v. Jones, Willey v. Great Northern Railway Co., Q.B.D.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 194; 60 L. J. Q. B. 441.

20. Set off of costs—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, r. 27, sub-rule 21.—A party, who under a former order in the action was entitled to certain costs out of the estate, appealed from an interlocutory order, and his appeal was dismissed with costs. The respondent asked that under ord. 65, r. 27, sub-rule 21, these costs might be set off against the costs which the appellant was entitled to receive, the certificate of the taxation of which was ready for signature. The court declined to order set-off, but directed that no costs should be paid out to the appellant for a fortnight, so as to give the respondent time to carry in his bill of costs of the appeal, that the set-off might be considered by the taxing master.—In re Crawshay, Dennis v. Crawshay, C.A. —45 Ch. D. 318; 63 L. T. 597.

20a. Solicitor and client costs—Representation order —R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, r. 32; ord. 65, r. 1.—On an adjourned summons for the decision of the court as to the construction of a will, three classes of issue were interested under the will, and representation orders had been made in respect of each class.

Held, that costs must be allowed as between solicitor and client.—In re Davies, Jenkins v. Davies, CH.D. KEK., J.—64 L. T. 824.

21. Taxation—Motion to rectify register—Interlocutory motions.—A motion to remove a shareholder's name from the register came on for hearing on July 23, 1889, when the applicant was not present. The court ordered the motion to stand over upon the applicant paying to the company "all their costs of such motion incurred up to the present time, including the costs of the hearing of this motion this day." Upon the motion coming on again, the application to remove the name was granted with costs, except the costs ordered to be paid as above. The taxing master allowed the company the costs of two interlocutory applications prior to the order of July 23, 1889, in one of which the costs were to be costs in the action, and in the other no order was made.

Held, that the taxing master had acted on a wrong principle in including these costs in the costs of the motion which the applicant was ordered to pay.

The court refused to interfere with the discretion of the taxing master in allowing the company costs for items which were utilized at the postponed hearing.—In re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association, Wainwright's case, CH.D. KAY, J.—63 L. T. 216.

22. Taxation—Plaintiff successful on some issues and failing on others—General costs of action, how apportioned—Form of order.—A plaintiff in the Chancery Division succeeded on the substantial part of his claim and failed on a subordinate part, but the form of order adopted referred it to the taxing master to tax the defendant's costs of so much of the action as related to the issue on which the plaintiff failed, and to tax the plaintiff's costs of the rest of the action, and directed the said costs of the defendants to be set off against the said costs of the plaintiff, and the balance to be certified, and ordered the defendants to pay such certified balance to the plaintiff. It appeared that in the taxing master's office in the Chancery Division it was the established practice, where the order was in the above form, to apportion the general costs of the action between the plaintiff and defendant according to the number of issues on which they had respectively succeeded, without regard to the relative importance of such issues, but that, where the plaintiff was intended to have such general costs, the form of order is adopted which gives him "the costs of the action, except so far as they have been increased by the issue" on which he has been unsuccessful. The general costs of this action having, in accordance with the above rule, been apportioned between the plaintiff and defendants in moieties, the plaintiff took out a summons to review the taxation.

Held (affirming the decision of Kekewich, J.), that, though the plaintiff got less than he was fairly entitled to, that was owing to the adoption of the wrong form of order (a mistake which could not now be rectified), and that it would be wrong to disturb the settled practice of the chancery taxing office, in accordance with which the taxation under the form of order here adopted had been correctly worked out.

Semble, having regard to the case of Sparrow v. Hill, 29 W. R. 490, 705, 7 Q. B. D. 362, 8 Ibid. 479, the practice in the Queen's Bench Division differs in this respect from that of the Chancery Division.

Bowen, L.J., called attention to the importance of the proper authority making methodical inquiry into the diversity, both of opinion and practice, existing in this respect on the chancery and common law sides of the court, with a view to their assimilation.

Knight v. Pursell, 28 W. R. 90, and Harley v. Hunt, 32 S. J. 8, W. N., 1887, p. 184, followed.—Jenkins v. Jackson, C.A. 242—[1891] 1 Ch. 89; 60 L. J. Ch. 254; 63 L. T. 688.

See also PRACTICE, 3.

DEFAULT—

23. Counter-claim—Default of defence thereto—Mode of obtaining judgment—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 23, r. 4; ord. 27, rr. 2, 11.—Where a plaintiff makes default in delivering a defence to a counter-claim, the defendant cannot sign judgment upon default, but must move for judgment under ord. 27, r. 11.

Higgins v. Scott, 21 Q. B. D. 10, 36 W. R. Dig. 155, followed.—Jones v. Macaulay, C.A. 211—[1891] 1 Q. B. 221; 60 L. J. Q. B. 258; 64 L. T. 621.

24. Non-appearance of defendant—Amendment of writ—Service of amended writ—Rules of Court, 1883, ord. 19, r. 10; ord. 28, r. 10.—When a defendant has made default in appearing to a writ, and the writ is subsequently amended, the amended writ need not be served upon the defendant who has made default in appearance; but filing it at the Central Office is sufficient.—In re Hartley, Nuttall v. Whittaker, CH.D. NOR., J. 604—[1891] 2 Ch. 121; 64 L. T. 786.

25. Short cause—Setting aside judgment in default of defence—Length of notice—Chancery Judges' Regulations, 1876.—Under the regulations made by the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors in 1876, motions for judgments in actions are entered in the cause book, and, if marked "short," will be placed in the paper on the first short cause day after the day for which notice has been given.

The plaintiff gave notice of motion for judgment for the 14th of March, 1891. The case was marked "short," and the 14th of March was the regular short cause day. The defendant not appearing, judgment was given for the plaintiff.

The defendant moved that judgment be set aside, on the ground that the case was placed in the paper prematurely.

Held, that "the first short cause day after the day for which notice is given" means "the first short cause day available after the giving of the notice"; but, having regard to the circumstances of the case, the judgment was set aside and leave given to defend the action on payment of costs of the motion and costs subsequent to the statement of claim.—Green v. Moore, CH.D. NOR., J. 421.

DISCOVERY—

26. Documents—Affidavit—Documents of title—Privilege—Interrogatories in cross-examination—Contentious affidavit.—The defendant in an action for recovery of land having made an affidavit of documents which stated that he had in his possession certain documents numbered and tied up in a bundle marked with the letter A, and that he objected to produce such documents, on the ground that they related solely to his own title, and did not in any way tend to prove or support the title of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs administered interrogatories to the defendant, asking whether such documents did not include a will mentioned in the statement of claim and relied upon by the plaintiffs in support of their title, and whether the defendant had ever seen the will, and, if so, when last and where. The defendant objected to answer the interrogatories. The plaintiffs thereupon applied for an order that the defendant should further answer, and at the hearing sought to make use of an affidavit in contradiction of defendant's affidavit of documents.

Held, that the affidavit of documents was sufficient, and need not allege that the documents did not impeach the defence; that a contentious affidavit was not admissible to contradict the defendant's affidavit of documents, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a further answer.

The decision of the Court of Appeal (23 Q. B. D. 287) affirmed.—Morris v. Edwards, H.L. (E.)—15 App. Cas. 309; 60 L. J. Q. B. 292; 63 L. T. 26.

27. Documents—Deposit—Application for increase of deposit—Time of application—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 31, rr. 12, 26; ord. 65, r. 6.—The power of the court, under ord. 31, r. 26, to make an order for payment into court of a sum of money, in addition to the £5 originally deposited, as security for the costs of discovery, is not limited to the time when the order for discovery was made, but may be exercised subsequently, if the court considers that the circumstances of the case require it.

In order to properly comply with an order for discovery by affidavit of documents, the documents ought not only to be set out in bundles, but each document must be ear-marked by marking it specially, so that the party seeking discovery may be in a position to specify any particular document he may want to see.

Hill v. Hart-Davies, 26 Ch. D. 471, 32 W. R. Dig. 150, approved.—Cooke v. Smith, C.A. 273—[1891] 1 Ch. 509; 60 L. J. Ch. 573; 64 L. T. 484.

28. Documents—Deposit—Two defendants—Separate defences—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 31, r. 26.—In an action against two defendants, who appeared by the same solicitor, but severed their defences, the plaintiff applied for discovery of documents.

Held, that, the defendants being sued jointly in substance as well as in form, the plaintiff was not bound, under ord. 31, r. 26, to pay into court more than one sum of £5.—Joyce v. Beall, Q.B.D. 316—64 L. T. 137.

29. Documents—Documents disclosed in answer to interrogatories—Inspection of—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 31, rr. 15-18.—A plaintiff sued upon an agreement, and, in answer to interrogatories, stated that the agreement was in writing, and was contained in three documents referred to.

Held, that the defendant was entitled to an order for inspection under ord. 31, rr. 15-18, on the ground that these were "documents referred to in an affidavit in the cause," and that a further application for discovery, to be accompanied with a further deposit of £5, was not necessary.—Moore v. Peachey, Q.B.D. 592.

30. Documents—Ships' papers—Action on marine policy of insurance—Part transit over land—Appendix K, No. 19.—In an action on a policy of insurance whereby certain goods were insured during their transit by post from Cadiz to Alexandretta, in Syria, the defendants sought to obtain from the plaintiff, prior to the delivery of the defence, the ordinary affidavit of ships' papers.

Held, that, inasmuch as the policy covered such portion of the transit as was by land as well as the portion which was by sea, the peculiar practice relative to the affidavit of ships' papers was not applicable, but that the defendants were entitled to discovery in the ordinary form under ord. 31, r. 12.—Henderson v. Underwriting and Agency Association, Q.B.D. 528—[1891] 1 Q. B. 557; 60 L. J. Q. B. 406; 64 L. T. 774.

31. Interrogatories—Patent action—Interrogatories as to use of process described in specification—Names of customers—Plea of "secret process."—In a patent action the plaintiff delivered interrogatories asking step by step whether the defendant had used, and to what extent, the process, or any part of it, described in the specification, and asking also the names of some of his customers. The defendant set up a plea of "secret process," objecting to answer the interrogatories, on the ground that the answer would disclose his secret.

Held, that the defendant could not, by pleading a secret process, claim to decline to refuse discovery as to how far, either alone or in combination with his own process, he had used the plaintiff's.

Semble, also, that the names of customers must be disclosed.—Ashworth v. Robert, CH.D. KEK., J. 170—45 Ch. D. 623; 60 L. J. Ch. 27; 63 L. T. 160.

32. Interrogatories—Patent action—Further particulars—Patent Law Amendment Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 83), s. 41—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 29.—Where a defendant in a patent action alleges, in his particulars of objections, general user of the plaintiff's alleged invention previous to the date of the letters patent, he may be compelled to answer interrogatories asking for the names and addresses of persons so using it as alleged.—Alliance Pure White Lead Syndicate v. MacIvor's Patents and Others, CH.D. NOR., J. 487.

33. Interrogatories—Security for costs of—Action against several defendants — Separate defences — Separate deposits of £5—Ord. 31, r. 26.—Where a plaintiff delivers interrogatories to, and seeks discovery from, several defendants who have severed in their defence, separate sums of £5 must be paid into court in each case.

Smith v. Reed, 28 S. J. 84, W. N., 1883, p. 196, followed.

Eder v. Attenborough, 37 W. R. 507, 23 Q. B. D. 130, distinguished. — Liverpool and Manchester Aerated Bread Co. v. Firth, CH.D. STI., J. 269—[1891] 1 Ch. 367; 60 L. J. Ch. 153; 63 L. T. 677.

DISTRICT REGISTRY—

34. Writ—Originating summons—Removal of proceeding as of right—Rules of Court, 1883, ord. 35, rr. 13, 14, and 16.—An originating summons was taken out in the Liverpool District Registry by a tenant for life against the trustees of a testator's will and infants, asking for an account and the appointment of a new trustee. The testator's property was situate in Leicestershire, Lancashire, Scotland, and London, and comprised a large brewery in Lancashire. The testator, by his will, appointed three persons living in Lancashire as trustees of his will, and the defendant A. The plaintiff and the defendant A. lived in London, and the surviving trustee in Lancashire. On summons by the defendant A. asking as a matter of right that the proceedings might be removed from the Liverpool District Registry to London,

Held, that the proceedings did not come within the terms of ord. 35, rr. 13 and 14, of the Rules of Court, 1883, the proceedings not having been commenced by writ.

Held, that rule 16 of order 35 applied, and an important part of the property being situate in Lancashire, and three of the trustees appointed by the will being Lancashire men, the summons must refused.—In re Thwaites, Yerburgh v. Aston, CH.D. KEK., J.—63 L. T. 747.

EJECTMENT—

35. Judgment in default of appearance—Person not named as defendant—Ord. 12, r. 25.—The plaintiff issued a writ against J. to recover possession of a house, and signed judgment in default of appearance. The sheriff, in pursuance of a writ of possession, ejected H., who was in possession, and put in the plaintiff. H. had no knowledge of the action, and did not claim to hold through J. On an application by H. that the writ of summons, and all subsequent proceedings in the action, be set aside for irregularity, and that the plaintiff restore possession of the house to the applicant,

Held, that the right order was, that the judgment and subsequent proceedings be set aside, the plaintiff to go out of any possession obtained under the judgment; the order to take effect only if the applicant within twelve days elect to be added as defendant; applicant to be at liberty to appear upon filing an affidavit that at the time of the issue of the writ he was in possession by himself or his tenant; the order to be without prejudice to any right plaintiff might thereafter have to sign judgment against J. upon filing a proper affidavit.—Minet v. Johnson, C.A.—63 L. T. 507.

GARNISHEE ORDER—

36. Affidavit of judgment creditor alleging specific debt—Affidavit of garnishee specifically denying—Ord. 45, r. 1.—Where, on an application for a garnishee order, the applicant specifies a particular debt owing by the garnishee to the judgment debtor, it is not sufficient for the garnishee to deny that he owes that particular debt, but he must state that he is not indebted to the judgment debtor at all.

On such an application it is sufficient for the applicant to state that he is informed and believes that the garnishee is indebted to the judgment debtor.

Coren v. Barne, 37 W. R. 415, 22 Q. B. D. 249, approved.—De Pass v. Capital and Industries Corporation (Vinall, Garnishee), C.A. 231—[1891] 1 Q. B. 216; 60 L. J. Q. B. 253; 64 L. T. 43.

INJUNCTION—

37. Ex parte injunction—Ex parte motion to dissolve—Notice—Undertaking as to damages—Undertaking to amend writ—Conditions—Non-compliance.—The court declined to hear ex parte a motion to dissolve an ex parte injunction. An ex parte injunction was obtained by the plaintiffs shortly before two o'clock on a Saturday afternoon on condition that a party should be added as plaintiff for the purpose of his counsel giving on his behalf the usual undertaking as to damages. The writ was not amended until the following Tuesday morning whilst a motion was being made to dissolve the injunction. The court dissolved the injunction without deciding the merits, on the ground that the plaintiffs had not fulfilled the terms on which the injunction was granted, and had thereby left the defendant without the protection of the undertaking as to damages.—Spanish General Agency Corporation v. Spanish Corporation.—CH.D. KEK., J.—63 L. T. 161.

37a. Ex parte injunction—Suppression of facts—Motion for injunction or to continue interim order—Motion to discharge interim order—Whether necessary.—This was a motion by the plaintiffs for an injunction, or in the alternative to continue an interim order already obtained ex parte. The interim order was irregularly obtained on suppression of material facts. No cross notice of motion to discharge the interim order was given by the defendant.

Held, that the court may discharge an ex parte order without a formal notice of motion to discharge being given by the defendant.

The court on the evidence granted an injunction in the terms of the interim order, but discharged the interim order, the plaintiffs to pay the costs of it in any event.—Boyce v. Gill, CH.D. KEK., J.—64 L. T. 824.

38. Libel—Application to restrain publication—Jurisdiction of the High Court—Rules upon which the court exercises discretion.—Jurisdiction to grant an injunction to restrain the publication of an alleged libel pending trial or after verdict has existed in the common law courts since the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, and in the Chancery Division since the Judicature Act, 1873, and by section 25, subsection 8, of the latter Act any judge of the High Court can grant such an injunction where it shall appear "just or convenient." But the court will be very cautious against granting such an injunction in any action for defamation previous to trial where justification of the defamation is pleaded, and will, as a rule, decline to interfere in such cases.

Per Kay, L.J.—An affidavit by the defendant pleading justification of a libel in opposition to an interlocutory motion for restraining the publication must show the grounds of his belief in such justification, and, in default of any such grounds being shown, the court is justified in granting such an injunction.—Bonnard v. Perryman, C.A. 435—[1891] 2 Ch. 269.

39. Libel—Interlocutory injunction to restrain publication—Annoyance—Proof of immediate injury.—An interlocutory injunction will not be granted to restrain the publication of statements not shown to be likely to cause immediate injury to the person or property of the party seeking the injunction, notwithstanding that such statements are calculated to cause him extreme annoyance; that they appear primâ facie to be wholly unjustifiable; that, unless justified, they are grossly libellous; and that the plaintiff had previously obtained a verdict for £1,000 damages (which had not been paid) for the publication by the defendant of similar, or practically identical, statements.—Salomons v. Knight, C.A. 506—[1891] 2 Ch. 294; 64 L. T. 589.

40. Mandatory injunction — Restoration of fence wrongfully broken down—Uneducated defendant—Form of order.—In an action to restrain a defendant from permitting certain fences to remain broken down and removed, the court ordered the defendant, who was in a humble position in life, to restore and replace the fences which he had broken down and removed, instead of making a negative order restraining him from permitting the fences to remain broken down and removed.—Bidwell v. Holden, CH.D. NOR., J.—63 L. T. 104.

41. Mandatory interim injunction—Altering status quo after notice of motion for injunction.—The defendant in a light and air case, after receiving notice of motion for an interlocutory injunction, put on a number of men, who worked night and day, and ran up his building to a height of nearly forty feet before he received notice that an injunction had been granted against him.

Held (affirming the decision of Stirling, J.), that he ought to be ordered to restore the status quo ante by pulling down the building at once, without reference to the question, to be decided at the trial, whether the plaintiff was entitled to the access of light and air which he claimed.—Daniel v. Ferguson, C.A. 599—[1891] 2 Ch. 27.

JUDGMENT AND ORDER—

42. Order drawn up, but not passed and entered—Oversight—Order re-drawn nunc pro tunc.—Where an order has been drawn up, but never passed and entered, the court allowed the order to be re-drawn up, passed, and entered nunc pro tunc.—In re Jones, Bullis v. Jones, CH.D. STI., J. 619.

NEW TRIAL—

43. Jurisdiction of Court of Appeal—Power to enter judgment for party moving, instead of granting new trial—Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s. 1—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 58, r. 4.—On motion for a new trial under 53 & 54 Vict. c. 44, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction, instead of granting a new trial, to direct judgment to be entered for the party moving, or to make any order which ought to have been made by the court below, in the same way as it could do upon an ordinary appeal.—Allcock v. Hall, C.A. 443—[1891] 1 Q. B. 444; 60 L. J. Q. B. 416; 64 L. T. 309.

44. Official referee—Action tried before—Court in which to move—Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s. 1.—Where there has been a trial before an official referee, a motion for a new trial must be made in the Queen's Bench Division, and not in the Court of Appeal.—Gower v. Tobitt, C.A. 193.

45. Stay of execution pending application for new trial—Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44).—In the absence of special circumstances the court will not grant a stay of execution pending an application for a new trial where the judge before whom the case was tried has declined to stay execution.—Monk v. Bartram, C.A. 310—[1891] 1 Q. B. 346; 60 L. J. Q. B. 267; 64 L. T. 45.

See PRACTICE, 54.

46. Verdict against the weight of evidence—Undue influence—Mental incapacity.—Where a new trial is sought to be obtained on the ground that the verdict in the court below was against the weight of evidence, in a case where there was some evidence out of the jurisdiction.—The plaintiffs, an English company, entered into certain agreements in India with an Indian firm relative to the manufacture of indigo and the sale and disposal of the proceeds of the indigo so manufactured. The agents in England of the Indian firm were an English firm, consisting of five out of the six members of the Indian firm, several of whom were resident in India. The Indian firm consigned the indigo to the English firm as their agents, on behalf of the plaintiff company, and drew bills against it on the latter, who, upon such bills being presented, dishonoured them, on the ground of their exceeding the amount authorized. The English agents having then taken up the bills and sold the indigo, the plaintiff company commenced an action against them claiming the indigo and other relief, and all the members of the English firm appeared to the writ. On a motion for an interlocutory injunction, the plaintiff company introduced charges of fraud against the native servants of the Indian firm. The plaintiff company subsequently obtained leave ex parte to amend their writ by adding the Indian firm as defendants and by making consequential amendments, and to issue a concurrent writ for service out of the jurisdiction, but on that application they did not go into the question of fraud. They then amended their writ, and added a claim against the new defendants, the Indian firm, which raised entirely fresh causes of action arising out of alleged breaches in India by the Indian firm of the agreements. The Indian firm then moved to discharge the order which had been obtained ex parte, and North, J., granted the application.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the order giving leave to amend was rightly discharged, but that, under the circumstances, the plaintiffs ought to be allowed to amend their original writ by substituting the names of the individual members of both firms who were resident within the jurisdiction for the name of the English firm, and by adding a claim for relief in respect of breaches of the agreements, and that the members of both firms who were resident out of the jurisdiction ought to be allowed to set aside their appearances, and that the order to be made must be without prejudice to any application by the plaintiffs for leave to add as parties all or any of the members of the said firms so resident out of the jurisdiction, and to serve them with the amended, or a concurrent, writ.

Western National Bank of New York v. Perez, 39 W. R. 245, [1891] 1 Q. B. 304, followed.—Indigo Co. v. Ogilvy, C.A. 646—[1891] 2 Ch. 31; 64 L. T. 846.

62. Indorsement — Special indorsement — Leave to enter final judgment—"Liquidated demand in money with interest arising on a trust"—Interest claimed by way of damages—Ord. 3, r. 6.—The plaintiffs by their writ claimed to have a legacy of £2,750 "which has remained unpaid by reason of a breach of trust on the part of the defendants, and which is now due from them upon a trust," paid by the defendants with interest at four per cent. per annum from the 12th of April, 1885. The will directed that interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum should be paid on this legacy from the death of the wife; she died on the 12th of April, 1885. Upon an application for judgment under order 14,

Held, that the writ claimed the interest payable under the will, and not interest payable as damages, and, therefore, the writ was specially indorsed under ord. 3, r. 6.—Ha[illegible] v. Br[illegible], CH.D. NOR., J.—60 L. J. Ch. 88.

63. Renewal of writ after expiration of twelve months—Statute of Limitations—Ord. 8, r. 1; ord. 64, r. 7.—The time for renewing a writ of summons will not be extended after the expiration of twelve months from the date of the issue of the writ where, in the absence of such renewal, the plaintiff's claim would be barred by the Statute of Limitations.

Doyle v. Kaufman, 26 W. R. 98, 3 Q. B. D. 7, 340, followed.—Hewett v. Barr, C.A. 294—[1891] 1 Q. B. 98; 60 L. J. Q. B. 268.

64. Service—Foreign firm—Partners all resident out of jurisdiction—Service on alleged partner temporarily within jurisdiction—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 9, r. 6; ord. 11.—In an action against a foreign firm having no place of business in England, all the partners of which were resident and domiciled abroad, service of the writ was effected on the appellant (who was alleged to be a partner) while temporarily in England. He entered an appearance, and applied to have the service set aside, on the ground that he was not a partner.

Held, by Lord Esher, M.R., that the foreign firm was properly served under ord. 9, r. 6, by service on the appellant, and that the service could not be set aside.

Held, by Lindley and Bowen, L.JJ., upon the authority of Russell v. Cambefort, 37 W. R. 701, 23 Q. B. D. 526, that ord. 9, r. 6, did not apply to the case of foreign firms, and that the service was bad as against the firm; but, further, that, if the plaintiff should elect to amend the writ so as to state that the appellant was sued together with the other partners (naming them), the service should stand as against the appellant, the appellant having by appearing waived the irregularity in the nomenclature of the writ.

Pollexfen v. Sibson, 34 W. R. 534, 16 Q. B. D. 792; O'Neil v. Clason, 46 L. J. Q. B. 191, 25 W. R. Dig. 208; and Shepperd v. Hirsch, Pritchard, & Co., 38 W. R. 745, 45 Ch. D. 231, not followed.—Western National Bank of New York v. Perez Triana & Co., C.A. 245—[1891] 1 Q. B. 304; 60 L. J. Q. B. 272; 64 L. T. 543.

65. Service—Foreign firm—Partnership—R. S. C. 1883, ord. 9, r. 6; ord. 11, rr. 1 (e), 7; ord. 16, r. 14.—The Rules of the Supreme Court as to suing partners in the name of their firm, and as to service on persons sued as partners in their firm name, do not apply to a partnership firm all the members of which are foreign subjects domiciled and residing abroad; and, even where the cause of action against such firm is one within the terms of ord. 11, r. 1 (e), and the plaintiff has obtained leave to issue and serve notice of a writ against such firm out of the jurisdiction, and has served it abroad on one of the partners, the court has no jurisdiction, if no appearance has been entered, to allow the plaintiff to sign judgment, in default of appearance, against such firm.

Russell v. Cambefort, 37 W. R. 701, 23 Q. B. D. 526, and Western National Bank of New York v. Perez Triana & Co., 39 W. R. 245, [1891] 1 Q. B. 304, followed.—Dobson v. Festi[illegible] 481—[1891] 2 Q. B. 92; 60 L. J. Q. B. [illegible]; 64 L. T. 551.

66. Service—Foreign firm—Part[illegible]—[illegible] against foreign firm in firm name—R. S. C. [illegible] ord. 9, r. 6.—A writ was issued against the defendants in the name of their firm. The firm was a foreign firm, carrying on business at Buenos Ayres, and consisted of three partners, all of them foreign subjects. Two of the partners were resident and domiciled abroad, and one was residing in England at the date of the issue of the writ. The partner in England used a room in London for the purposes of the business of the firm. The writ having been served on the partner in England, he moved to set aside the writ and the service.

Held, following the decision in Western National Bank of New York v. Perez Triana & Co., 39 W. R. 245, [1891] 1 Q. B. 304, that ord. 9, r. 6, did not apply to the case of a foreign firm, the only mode of suing a foreign firm being to issue the writ against the partners individually, and obtain leave to serve them under order 11; and that the writ and the service must be set aside.—Heinemann & Co. v. Hall & Co., C.A. 485—[1891] 2 Q. B. 83; 64 L. T. 548.

67. Service—Partnership—Service on manager of firm—Subsequent service on partner—Judgment signed against firm before expiration of eight days from service on partner—Right of partner to set aside such judgment—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 42, r. 10.—If a writ of summons be served on a partner in a firm after having been served on the manager of the firm, judgment ought not to be signed against the firm until after the expiration of eight days from the last service, and if judgment be signed against the firm before the expiration of eight days from the service on the partner, though after the expiration of eight days from the service on the firm, such judgment is premature, and will, on the application of the partner, be set aside.—Alden v. Beckley & Co., Q.B.D. 8—25 Q. B. D. 543; 60 L. J. Q. B. 87; 63 L. T. 282.

68. Service — Partnership — Action against firm carrying on business in England — One partner domiciled and resident abroad—Service on another partner resident within jurisdiction—Summary judgment against firm—Ord. 9, r. 6; ord. 14, r. 1.—Two persons, subjects of a foreign State, carried on business as co-partners in England. One of them resided in England, the other resided and was domiciled abroad. A writ having been issued against them in the name of their firm, the partner resident in England was served with such writ under ord. 9, r. 6, and appeared. There being no defence to the action, judgment was entered against the firm under order 14.

Held, that the service on the partner was a good service on the firm, and that judgment was rightly entered against the firm.—Lysaght v. Clark & Co., Q.B.D.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 552; 64 L. T. 776.

69. Service out of jurisdiction—Contract—Place of payment—Ord. 11, r. 1 (e).—A contract which may be performed either within the jurisdiction or outside it is not a contract "which, according to the terms thereof, ought to be performed within the jurisdiction" within the meaning of ord. 11, r. 1 (e). —Bell & Co. v. Antwerp, London, and Brazil Line, C.A. 84—[1891] 1 Q. B. 103; 60 L. J. Q. B. 270; 64 L. T. 276.

70. Service out of jurisdiction—Concurrent remedy —R. S. C., 1883, ord. 11, rr. 1 (f), 2.—Under subsection (f) of rule 1, order 11, of R. S. C., 1883, which enables the court to allow service out of the jurisdiction where "any injunction is sought as to anything to be done within the jurisdiction," the court has jurisdiction, on a motion supported by proper evidence, to grant a limited injunction as to acts to be done within the jurisdiction; but, in the exercise of its discretion, having regard to all the circumstances—especially to the fact that a Scotch court has partial seisin of the case, and proceedings are about to be taken in Scotland—the court may refuse to allow service out of the jurisdiction.

A remedy which depends on the will and pleasure of another person is not a concurrent remedy within the meaning of R. S. C., 1883, ord. 11, r. 2.—In re De Penny, De Penny v. Christie, CH.D. CHI., J. 571 —[1891] 2 Ch. 63; 60 L. J. Ch. 518; 64 L. T. 521.

71. Substituted service—Defendant out of jurisdiction—Ord. 9, r. 2.—The plaintiff, having issued a writ against the defendant and being unable to discover her address, obtained an order for substituted service upon her solicitor. It then appeared that she had gone abroad before the writ was issued without any intention of evading service, and had remained out of the jurisdiction ever since.

Held, that, the writ being a writ for service within the jurisdiction, the order for substituted service could not be maintained.

Fry v. Moore, 37 W. R. 565, 23 Q. B. D. 395, followed.—Wilding v. Bean, C.A. 40—[1891] 1 Q. B. 100; 60 L. J. Q. B. 10; 64 L. T. 41.

See also PRACTICE, 24.

See also ADMIRALTY; BILL OF SALE, 13; COUNTY COURT; DIVORCE, 15-20; LUNATIC, 2; MORTGAGE, 3, 4, 6; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, 2; PROBATE, 21—26; SOLICITOR, 4; WILL, 17.

PRACTICE (IRELAND):—

1. Attachment of debts—Pension of retired district-inspector of Royal Irish Constabulary.—The pension of a retired district-inspector of the Royal Irish Constabulary, granted, under 37 & 38 Vict. c. 80, on retirement owing to ill-health, may be attached to answer a judgment debt, as being granted for past services only.—Murphy v. Green, C.A. (Ir.)—26 L. R. Ir. 610.

2. Attachment of debts—Pension of retired town clerk—Receiver—Local Officers' Superannuation (Ireland) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 79), s. 7.—A receiver cannot be appointed over a pension granted to a retired town clerk under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 79, as the pension is, by section 7 of the Act, neither assignable nor chargeable with debts.—Brenan v. Morrissey, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—26 L. R. Ir. 618.

3. Cash under control of court—Investment of—Costs of application to change investment—R. S. C., 4th February, 1889.—Funds in court ordered to be invested in debenture and guaranteed stocks of Irish railways.

What are special circumstances within the rule of the 4th of February, 1889, considered.

The costs of the application to change the investment ordered to be paid by the applicants, the tenants for life.

Johnston v. O'Neill, 23 L. R. Ir. 430, approved.—In re Nesbitt's Trusts, C.A. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 447.

4. Charging order — Priority.—A. obtained a charging order on a fund standing in the name of the accountant of the Landed Estates Court to the credit of a matter then pending. Subsequently, after the amalgamation of the office of the Accountant in the Court of the Land Judges with the office of the Accountant-General in Chancery, B. obtained a charging order on the same fund. The fund was afterwards transferred to the credit of an action pending in the Chancery Division.

Held, that A.'s charging order was entitled to priority.—In re Slator, Lalonette v. O'Brien, M.R. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 453.

4a. Charging order—Attachment and transfer of Government Stock to answer judgment debt—Common Law Procedure Act, 1853, s. 33.—Where the court makes an order to transfer to the sheriff Government Stock standing in the books of the Bank of Ireland, attached under a charging order, the proper order is to direct the defendant, and not the bank directors, to execute the transfer.—M'Goldrick v. Campbell, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 318.

4b. Default of appearance—One of several defendants not served—Judgment against co-defendant.—In an action for a liquidated demand against A. and B. on foot of a joint debt, the writ being specially indorsed, the court allowed judgment in default of appearance to be entered against A. without prejudice to the plaintiff's right to proceed against B., who had not been served.—Rice v. Dillon, EX.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 376.

5. Discovery—Lease—Tenant of lands ordered to be sold.—A conditional order to make discovery of a lease may be made against a tenant of lands ordered to be sold in an action.—Webb v. Webb, M.R. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 42.

6. Discovery—Inspection of documents by accountant—General Order 31, r. 17.—A shareholder in a joint-stock company brought an action to have his name removed from the register on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentation in the prospectus issued by the company, and applied for leave to inspect, by an accountant, books of account disclosed in the affidavit of documents made by the secretary of the company.

Held, under the special circumstances of the case, and to save expense, that the order might be made.

Bonnardet v. Taylor, 1 J. & H. 383, followed.—Gibney v. Clayton, M.R. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 75.

7. Interpleader—Costs—9 & 10 Vict. c. 64.—Where upon a sheriff's interpleader summons the execution creditor abandons the execution, the latter must pay the costs of the interpleader summons to the claimant, and the expenses of the execution to the sheriff.—Hyland v. Lennox, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. (Ir.) 286.

8. Particulars—Action for crim. con.—Affidavit.—In an action for crim. con. the defendant is entitled to particulars from the plaintiff of the times and places when and where the alleged acts were committed, if he makes an affidavit denying the alleged acts, and stating that he is ignorant of the ground of the charges made against him, and that the application is made bonâ fide.

Echlin v. Brady, 10 Ir. Jur. N. S. 188, and Lagan v. Gibson, I. R. 9 C. L. 507, overruled.—Keenan v. Pringle, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 135.

9. Pleading — Amendment of — Ejectment. — An amendment in a statement of claim in ejectment may be allowed which has the effect of substituting an equitable title for a legal one. — Feehan v. Mandeville, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 90.

10. Pleading irrelevant pleas—Fraud—Matters of evidence—General Order 18, r. 16, and Schedule, r. 23.—In an action on a policy of life insurance the insurance company, in their statement of defence, pleaded that the assured had been guilty of a series of insurance frauds upon the defendant company and other insurance companies, and set out in detail a conspiracy by the assured with another person to effect insurances on the life of the assured, and to pretend to be dead by leaving his clothes on the seashore and disappearing.

Held, affirming the order of the Queen's Bench Division, that these pleas must be struck out.—Provincial Bank of Ireland v. Brocklebank, C.A. (Ir.)—26 L. R. Ir. 572.

11. Probate—Proof of will in solemn form—Trial before court itself—Costs—Rule 46 (cont.).—The Judicature Act has not altered the rule of the Prerogative Court that a next of kin is entitled to require a will to be proved in solemn form, or the practice as to costs where a party disputing a will serves notice under rule 46 (cont.) and submits to have the case tried before the court itself.—Holland v. Holland, P. & M.D. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 369.

12. Receiver—Judgment creditor appointed—Accruing gales of rent.—Judgment creditor appointed receiver over the accruing gales of a net head-rent for a limited number of years, estimated as sufficient to satisfy the judgment.—Orr v. Grierson, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 20.

13. Receiver—Judgment creditor—Shares of personal estate of intestate — Administration not taken out.—A judgment debtor was entitled, as one of the next of kin of an intestate, to whom no administration had been taken out, to a share of his personal estate.

Held, that the judgment creditor was entitled to have a receiver appointed over the share.—Mullane v. Ahern, EX.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 105.

14. Remitting action—Notice of motion—Amendment—Common Law Procedure Amendment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 109), s. 6.—A notice of motion to remit the action to a civil bill court, other than that of the division in which, according to the affidavit in support of the motion, the defendant resided, was amended by the court, and the action was remitted to the proper division.—Sayers v. Quinn, EX.D. (Ir.)—26 L. R. Ir. 582.

15. Remitting action—Joinder of causes of action—Detinue—County Courts Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 56), s. 51.—The joinder of other causes of action in tort with a claim in detinue does not preclude the action being remitted for trial to the county court under section 6 of the Common Law Procedure Amendment Act, 1870, as extended by section 51 of the County Courts Act, 1877.—Lowry v. Webb, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 110.

16. Remitting action — Contract — Amendment of writ — Reducing claim — Common Law Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1870.—A plaintiff before action made a statutory declaration that she had sold certain goods to the defendant for £20, and soon afterwards issued a writ for the price of the same goods, claiming £55.

Held, that the court had power, on the application of the defendant, to amend the writ by reducing the claim to £20, and to remit the action under section 5 of the Common Law Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1870.—Jeffrey v. Gibson, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 284.

17. Service out of jurisdiction — Administration summons—Foreigner resident out of the jurisdiction—Judicature (Ireland) Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 57)—General Order 10, rr. 1, 2.—A foreigner resident out of the British dominions, whom it is intended to make a party to proceedings to be commenced by administration summons, must be served with notice of the summons, and not with the summons itself.—In re M'Laughlin, Roulston v. M'Laughlin, M.R. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 513.

18. Stop order—Order restraining transfer of stock—Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 44), s. 170.—An application for an order restraining the transfer of stock under the Chancery (Ireland) Act, 1867, s. 170, should be made by motion ex parte, and not on petition.—Ex parte Prudential Assurance Co., M.R. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 446.

18a. Trial, place of — Changing — Judicature (Ireland) Act, 1877.—Principles as to the selection and change of place of trial in actions in the Queen's Bench and Exchequer Divisions under the Judicature (Ireland) Act, 1877, as stated by Barry, L.J., in Hegarty v. Mackay, 28 L. R. Ir. 339, followed.

Per Barry, L.J., the 33rd section of the Judicature (Ireland) Act, 1887, manifests the intention of the Act to terminate all arbitrary privilege of the plaintiff to select and retain his venue and to restore in a considerable degree the old common law right of the defendant to have certain actions tried in the place where the cause of action arose.

In cases where, under the common law as modified by the English Rule No. 18, H. T., 1853, the defendant was entitled to change the venue to the place where the cause of action arose, he is still entitled to do so unless it should be shown to the court or judge by the plaintiff that it is more reasonably consistent with the convenient and speedy despatch of business that the case should be tried elsewhere. — M'Couchy v. Madden, C.A. (Ir.) —28 L. R. Ir. 338.

19. Writ—Non-service within twelve months—Renewal—Claim barred by Statute of Limitations—General Order 64, r. 7.—Where a writ of summons was not served within twelve months, and the cause of action had in the meantime become barred by the Statute of Limitations, the court, following Doyle v. Kaufman, 3 Q. B. D. 340, refused to extend the time for its renewal under General Order 64, r. 7.—Magee v. Hastings, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 288.

20. Writ — Specially-indorsed writ — Leave to deliver statement of claim—Rules of 1891, ord. 20, r. 1 (a).—Where a writ is specially indorsed, the plaintiff must obtain leave under ord. 20, r. 1 (a), before he can deliver a statement of claim, even though the defendant on appearing required a statement to be delivered.—Salters' Co. v. M'Cleary, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 283.

See CRIMINAL LAW (IRELAND), 1.

PRESCRIPTION.—See COPYHOLDS; EASEMENT, 1; LIGHT, 1; WATERCOURSE.

PRETENCED TITLE.—See JUDGMENT, 1; MORTGAGE, 7a.

PRINCIPAL and AGENT:—

1. Agreement to employ for a term certain—Employer's place of business destroyed by fire—Condition of continued existence of place of business, whether implied—Foundation of contract.—The defendant, a manufacturer, entered into a written contract with the plaintiff to employ him as agent, canvasser, and traveller for a term of five years certain, determinable at the end thereof by three months' notice in writing on either side, the plaintiff on his part agreeing to "do his utmost to obtain orders for and sell the various goods manufactured or sold" by the defendant, as should "be from time to time forwarded, or submitted by sample or pattern" to the plaintiff, who was to be remunerated by commission at a specified rate on all goods sold by him for the defendant. The defendant's manufactory having been burnt down when there were still nealy three years of the five unexpired, he made no attempt to resume his business or carry it on elsewhere, or to afford the plaintiff any further employment.

Held, that a condition that the defendant's manufactory should continue to exist could not be implied in the contract, which was such that the destruction of the manufactory did not render it impossible of performance, and that the plaintiff was entitled to substantial damages.

Rhodes v. Forwood, 24 W. R. 1078, 1 App. Cas. 256, distinguished.

Taylor v. Caldwell, 11 W. R. 726, 3 B. & S. 826, explained.

Decision of Grantham, J., reversed.—Turner v. Goldsmith, C.A. 547—[1891] 1 Q. B. 544; 60 L. J. Q. B. 247; 64 L. T. 301.

2. Appointment of agent—Agent to purchase—Conveyance—Declaration of trust—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), ss. 4, 7—Practice—Pleadings—Amendment—Ord. 19, r. 15.—The plaintiff, being desirous of purchasing a house, asked the defendant to attend the sale and "be his friend." The defendant attended the sale, bid for the house, which was knocked down to him, paid for it out of his own money, and took a conveyance in his own name. The plaintiff brought this action for a declaration that the defendant was his agent and a trustee of the house for him. The defendant, by his statement of defence, denied the agency, and pleaded section 4 of the Statute of Frauds; but at the trial the defendant's counsel, in argument, relied on section 7, and, after the plaintiff's counsel had replied, the defendant's counsel applied for leave to amend the statement of defence by pleading section 7.

Held, that the amendment could not be allowed at so late a stage of the action, and, therefore, that it was not open to the defendant to rely on section 7; but

Held, on the evidence, that the plaintiff had failed to establish that the defendant had been constituted his agent, and, therefore, that the action should be dismissed.

Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 4 East, 577 note (b), 1 Eden, 515, 1 Cox, 15, is not overruled by Heard v. Pilley, 17 W. R. 750, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 548, and is still sound law.—James v. Smith, CH.D. KEK., J. 396 —[1891] 1 Ch. 384; 63 L. T. 524.

3. Authority of agent to borrow—Liability of principal where agent exceeds his authority.—Where an agent under his power of attorney possessed implied authority to raise money by loan for the purpose of carrying on the business affairs intrusted to him, which authority under circumstances of emergency must be deemed to include power to borrow on exceptional terms outside the ordinary course of business,

Held, that the lender was not bound to inquire whether in the particular case the emergency had arisen or not; but that he was entitled to recover from the principal if he lent to the agent bonâ fide, and without notice that the agent was exceeding his mandate.—Montaignac v. Shitta, P.C.—15 App. Cas. 357.

4. Bribery of agent—Action against briber to recover excess price fraudulently obtained—Right of briber to plead satisfaction by agent — Form of agreement between corporation and fraudulent agent in satisfaction of their claim against agent—Ultrà vires.—Where an agent, under the influence of bribes, persuades his principal to pay a price for goods obtained from a contractor, advancing the bribe, in excess of the price at which the contractor was in fact willing to sell, the principal has a right of action against both agent and contractor, whether jointly or severally, for two distinct and independent frauds, and it is immaterial upon which right of action he first sues. The fact that the principal, before action against the contractor, had entered into an agreement with the agent, whereby, on condition of the agent depositing securities to cover the amount of the bribes retained by him, the principal undertook to take action at the agent's request, against the contractors who had advanced the bribes, and to credit the agent with the sums so recovered from the contractors by discharging his securities from liability to that amount, cannot be pleaded as a defence by the contractor, because such an agreement does not amount to the release of a joint tort-feasor, but only to the postponement of the principal's independent right of action against his agent; and (per Lord Esher, M.R.) that, in the case of a corporation, such an agreement, binding the corporation to sue at the request of their agent, was ultrà vires.—Mayor, &c., of Salford v. Lever, C.A. 85—[1891] 1 Q. B. 168; 60 L. J. Q. B. 39; 63 L. T. 658.

See also LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 2; SHIP (CO-OWNERS), 28, 29.

PRINCIPAL and SURETY:—

1. Giving of time—Discharge of personal liability—Release of property—Tenants in common—Covenant to pay mortgage debt—Redemption action—Parties.—Where a surety pledges his personal credit by note, covenant, or otherwise, and by the same contract pledges his goods or charges or mortgages his lands as security for the same debt, any alteration of the contract without his consent discharges the surety from all personal liability, and releases the property which the surety had included in his contract.—Bolton v. Salmon, CH.D. CHI., J. 589—[1891] 2 Ch. 48; 60 L. J. Ch. 239; 64 L. T. 222.

See BANKRUPTCY (PROOF), 34; MORTGAGE, 8, 9.

PROBATE:—

1. Administration, grant of—Foreign will disposing of property abroad—Intestacy as to English estate—Grant.—The deceased left a will expressly limited to her property abroad, which was proved by the executors in the foreign court; but she died intestate as to her property in this country.

Held, that administration of the property in this country might be granted to her sole next of kin.—In the Goods of Mann, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 293.

2. Administration, grant of—Grant to a son, passing over the husband.—Where the husband of an intestate had been cited to take out letters of administration to the personal estate and effects of his wife, and had entered no appearance to the citation, the court passed him over and made a grant of administration to the only son of the intestate.—In the Goods of Moore, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 299.

3. Administration, grant of—Joint grant—Widow and two elder sons—Consent of minor.—A man who died intestate left a testamentary paper which he had signed, but which was not duly executed, in which he expressed a wish that his property should be divided equally between his wife and his five children, and that his business should be carried on by his wife and his two elder sons, whom he appointed his executors. All the children were of full age except the youngest, who was twenty years and six months old, and all the persons interested were desirous that a joint grant of administration should be made to the widow and the two elder sons.

Held, that there were special circumstances to justify the court in making a joint grant as prayed.—In the Goods of Dickinson, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 292; 64 L. T. 808.

4. Administration, grant of—Official receiver—Security given in bankruptcy proceedings—Personal bond of administrator accepted—Sureties dispensed with.—In the Goods of Knapp, In the Goods of Robins, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 252.

5. Administration, grant of—Residuary bequest—"All other effects"—Grant.—A testator bequeathed to his wife "all my furniture, jewellery, pictures, wearing apparel, and other effects belonging to me at the time of my decease." The will went on to make specific bequests to his wife of money, shares, securities, &c., and it directed her to pay his debts, and left it to her discretion whether she would provide for his sons and daughters by a previous marriage and a nephew. It contained no bequests to any other person.

Held, that the words "all other effects" constituted his wife residuary legatee.—In the Goods of Jupp, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 300.

6. Administration, grant of—Testamentary appointment—New Zealand probate—Confirmation of appointment in will—Omission from probate—Limited grant of administration refused.—The testator, whose domicil of origin was Scotch, executed a testamentary appointment while on a visit to this country, in the exercise of a power contained in his marriage settlement. He afterwards acquired a domicil in New Zealand and there duly executed a will in which he referred to this testamentary appointment and confirmed it. The executors named in the will obtained probate of it in New Zealand; but no mention of the testamentary appointment was made in the probate. The registrar of the English court refused to pass an exemplification of the probate, on the ground that the testamentary appointment was not referred to in it. The appointee then moved for a grant of limited administration with the testamentary appointment annexed.

Held, that the application must be refused, the proper course being for the executor to apply to the New Zealand court for the grant of a fresh probate including the testamentary appointment.—In the Goods of Crawford, P.D. & A.D.—15 P. D. 212; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 16; 63 L. T. 232.

7. Administration bond—Grant to committee of lunatic executor—Estate found to be larger than original estimate—Sureties allowed to give a bond to double the amount actually in the hands of the administratrix.—An executor, who was also sole legatee, having been found to be a lunatic by inquisition, his committee took out letters of administration for his use and benefit, and entered into a bond jointly with a guarantee society for double the sum of £4,569, at which the value of the estate was then estimated. It was afterwards found that the estate was entitled to a further sum of £4,492, and a second bond was required. The administratrix had paid into court to the account of the lunatic £6,823, retaining in her hands, after paying debts and testamentary expenses, £650.

Held, that the sureties might be allowed to enter into a bond in double the amount remaining in the hands of the administratrix.—In the Goods of Cormack, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 151; 63 L. T. 710.

8. Administration with will annexed, grant of—Property requiring protection—Sole executor abroad—General power of attorney by executor—Grant to attorneys.—The sole executor of a will was abroad, with the intention of not returning for two years, and three or four months must elapse before communications could be had with him. The court had made a grant ad colligenda to the widow of the testator, but this was found insufficient to protect the estate. The sole executor, before leaving England, had granted a general power of attorney to two persons, who applied for a grant of administration with the will annexed.

Held, that, on the general terms used in the power of attorney, the court was justified in making the grant.—In the Goods of Barker, P.D. & A.D. 560—[1891] P. 251.

9. Administrator pendente lite, appointment of—Testamentary suit—Application of a creditor not a party to the suit for the appointment of an administrator—20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 70.—Where the parties to a testamentary suit took no steps to bring it to trial, and an action had been commenced in the Chancery Division in which a receiver had been appointed, this court, on the application of a creditor not a party to the testamentary suit, appointed an administrator pendente lite.—In the Goods of Evans, P.D. & A.D.—15 P. D. 215; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 18; 63 L. T. 254.

10. Administrator pendente lite—General grant reduced to a limited grant.—An administrator pendente lite, who was also the executor of the will in dispute, had taken out a general grant of administration, but found a difficulty in obtaining sureties to the administration bond to the full amount of the testator's estate.

Held, that the grant might be limited to the amount to be received in respect of two mortgages which were about to be paid off, together with the amount of one half-year's dividends on certain shares, such mortgage debts and shares forming part of the estate of the deceased.—Askew v. Askew, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 174; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 52; 64 L. T. 145.

11. Alteration of will—Clerical error.—The draft of a will for which the testator had given instructions was read over and explained to him by his solicitor. By the testator's request the word "including" was altered to "excluding" in a clause relating to the name and arms of the testator, and it was believed, at that time, that the alteration so made in the draft was correctly copied in the engrossment of the will. The latter was duly executed by the testator under that belief. Although he subsequently executed two codicils he never again saw the will, which remained in the custody of the solicitor. It was found, after the testator's death, that the word had been altered in the engrossment in a different part of the will, through a clerical error. Upon motion by the executors to substitute the word "excluding" for "including," where altered by the said clerical error, and also to make the alteration from "including" to "excluding" where the same had been made in the draft will,

Held, that the clerical error should be rectified, but that the court could not take upon itself to make the other alteration in the will.—In the Goods of Huddleston, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 255.

12. Alteration of will—Cutting by testatrix—Partial revocation—Probate granted in mutilated state.—A testatrix, having duly executed her will, proceeded some time afterwards to cut out, with a pair of scissors, the name of one G. P., who was named as an executor therein, wherever the said G. P.'s name appeared in the document. She stated to one or more persons that she had "cut G. P. out of her will," her alleged reason being on account of some disagreement which had arisen between the said G. P. and his wife, who was a daughter of the testatrix.

Held, that the will was only partially revoked, and that it was entitled to probate in the state in which it was found upon the death of the testatrix. —In the Goods of Leach, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 111.

13. Alteration of will—Interlineations and alterations made before the execution of a codicil—Grant of probate.—Interlineations and alterations in a will admitted to probate where it was proved that they had been inserted before the date of the execution of a codicil to the will.—Tyler v. Merchant Taylors' Co., P.D. & A.D.—15 P. D. 216; 63 L. T. 779.

14. Attesting witnesses — Position of signature—Grant of probate.—The court granted probate of a will in which the attesting witnesses had written their signatures in the margin, in two separate places, opposite two alterations in the body of the will, without having signed the attestation clause, on being satisfied that the signatures of the witnesses were meant to attest the signature of the testator.

Roberts v. Phillips, 4 E. & B. 450, 3 W. R. C. L. Dig. 219, followed.—In the Goods of Streatley, P.D. & A.D. 432—[1891] P. 172; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 56.

15. English will disposing of property in this country—Executors—Swiss independent will—Swiss law—Administration by State—Objections to incorporation—Form of grant.—A testator possessed of property in this country and in Switzerland made a will according to the English law disposing of his property here only, and by it declared that it was to take effect concurrently with, and independently of, a prior will dealing with his Swiss property only. On the application of the executors of the English will for probate of it only, it was proved that, if the Swiss will were incorporated in the probate, the executors would have no power to deal with the Swiss property, there being no executors appointed under the Swiss law, and if they attempted to deal with it they might come into conflict with the officers of the Swiss courts whose duty it would be to administer the Swiss estate.

The court granted probate to the executors of the English will only upon their filing a certified copy of the Swiss will in the registry, and directed a note to be made on the English probate that such copy had been so filed.

In the Goods of Astor, 24 W. R. 539, 1 P. D. 150, followed and explained.—In the Goods of Granet De la Rue, P.D. & A.D. 64—15 P. D. 185; 63 L. T. 253.

16. "Executor according to the tenor"—Grant of probate—Right to legacy.—As a general rule where there is a direction in a will to pay debts, and no person is nominated to pay them, and all the personal estate is bequeathed to a person by name, the court will grant probate of the will to such person as "excutor according to the tenor."

The court made the grant without prejudice to any question as to the right to a legacy bequeathed to the testator's executor.—In the Goods of Tandy, P. & M.D. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 114.

17. Married woman—Will of real estate—Exercise of power of appointment and devise—Appointment of executors—Right to probate—Existing grant of administration.—A married woman, having a power of appointment over, and being absolutely entitled to, real estate subject to the exercise of such power, by her will appointed and devised the same, and appointed executors. She had no personal estate, and her will did not purport to dispose of any. Her husband obtained a grant of administration to her estate, on the ground that she had died intestate, except as to realty. One of the devisees under the will applied for probate, the executors other than the husband having renounced or died.

Held, that the devisee was entitled to the grant, but that the court could not make a grant to him until the existing grant to the husband was revoked. —In the Goods of Hornbuckle, P.D. & A.D. 80—15 P. D. 149; 59 L. J. P. D. & A. 78; 63 L. T. 464.

18. Mistake in will—Intention to give equally to two—Name of first legatee repeated—Execution in ignorance of mistake—Grant omitting name in second legacy.—A testator instructed his solicitor that he wished to give £10,000 to each of his daughters, G. and F., but by inadvertence G.'s name was inserted in the draft and in the will in both clauses, F.'s name being omitted from the second, where it ought to have been. The draft was brought to the testator, but not read over to him, an epitome, in which the names were correctly stated, being read instead. The will was executed by the testator without being read to or by him, and in ignorance of the mistake.

Held, that the court would, on motion, with the consent of all parties interested, grant probate of the will omitting the name of G. from the second of the two clauses.—In the Goods of Boehm, P.D. & A.D. 576—[1891] P. 247; 64 L. T. 806.

19. Mutilation—Grant of probate.—The testatrix duly executed her last will. At some date subsequently she added something in writing at the foot of the will. She afterwards appeared to have cut off this addition, and, in doing this, cut through the name of one of the attesting witnesses. Sufficient, however, remained for the name to be still legible. There was also a piece cut out in the margin of the will. The signature of the testatrix and all the other material parts of the will remained intact.

The court, upon motion, admitted the document to proof in its mutilated form.—In the Goods of Taylor, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 230.

20. Part of will lost—Secondary evidence—Declaration by testator after execution—Grant of probate.—A declaration made by a testator after the execution of his will may be admitted as secondary evidence of the contents of part of the will, where that part has been lost, and probate granted accordingly.—In the Goods of Ball, P. & M.D. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 556.

21. Practice—Costs—Order against infant defendant, against the guardian ad litem, and against a defendant who had appeared, but had not pleaded.—The executrix having propounded a will, the sister and infant niece of the deceased were made defendants as the next of kin. The sister appeared but did not plead, and the infant appeared by her mother, who was appointed guardian ad litem. On behalf of the infant a statement of defence was filed alleging insanity and undue influence. The court at the trial pronounced for the will, with costs. The registrar having refused upon taxation to order payment of the costs against any but the guardian ad litem of the infant,

The President (Sir J. Hannen) ordered payment of the taxed costs by the two defendants and the guardian ad litem, and amended the decree accordingly.—Vivian v. Kennelly, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 778.

22. Practice—Defendant's interest questioned—Interrogatories—Motion to strike out defence.—In an interest suit, where the real question in dispute was the defendant's legitimacy, upon motion by the plaintiff to strike out the statement of defence,

The court held that this was too serious a matter to be decided upon motion, and dismissed the application, with costs.—In the Goods of Harrington, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 228.

23. Practice—Infant—Defendant a minor residing out of jurisdiction—Refusal to enter an appearance—Official solicitor nominated guardian ad litem—Contentious Rules of Probate Court, 1862, r. 74—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 13, r. 1.—The defendant in a probate action was a minor resident out of the jurisdiction. Notice of the writ had been served upon her and upon her guardian nominated by the foreign court, but no appearance had been entered on her behalf, and it appeared that her guardian declined to enter an appearance.

The court, holding that the practice was governed by ord. 13, r. 1, and not by rule 74 of the Contentious Rules of the Probate Court, 1862, nominated the official solicitor of the court to be the defendant's guardian ad litem, and ordered that his costs should be part of the costs of the plaintiff, who was the executor propounding the will.—White v. Duvernay, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 290.

24. Practice—Place of trial named in statement of claim—Venue changed to Middlesex—Convenience—Trial ordered at assizes.—In a probate suit, where the nominal plaintiff, who was claiming an intestacy, had inserted the place of trial in his statement of claim, the defendants, who were propounding a will of the deceased and upon whom the onus of proof at the trial would lie to establish that will, applied upon summons to change the venue from the assizes to Middlesex, and the judge made the order. Upon the plaintiff's appealing, upon motion, to set aside the order, Held, that the order was right, that the venue should stand changed, and that the case should come on for trial in this court, the more especially as there appeared to the judge a doubt as to whether the case could be conveniently disposed of at the approaching assizes.

From this order the plaintiffs, upon special leave given, appealed to the Court of Appeal: whereupon the court, after consulting the judge appointed to preside at the assizes in question, and having ascertained from him that the cause list was a light one, and that the case could, without difficulty be disposed of at the approaching assizes, directed the case to be so tried.—Jackson v. Braithwaite, C.A.—63 L. T. 231.

25. Practice—Production of documents—Documents belonging to solicitor—Ord. 37, rr. 5, 7—Privileged communication.—The defendants in an action by the plaintiff propounding a will having applied for inspection of documents, it appeared that the solicitor for the plaintiff had for many years acted as solicitor for the testatrix whose will was in dispute, and had in his possession diaries, extracts from diaries, cash ledgers, bankers' cash books containing entries and memoranda relating to the deceased and her affairs, which documents were the private property of the solicitor.

Held, affirming the decision of Jeune, J., that an order could not be made on the plaintiff to produce them for inspection.

Held, also, affirming the decision of Jeune, J., that the solicitor could not be compelled, under ord. 37, r. 7, to produce these documents for the purpose of discovery, nor to be called for examination at this stage of the proceedings under ord. 37, r. 5.

Held (reversing the order of Jeune, J.), that an affidavit by which a party objected to produce documents because she claimed them "to be privileged, as communications between herself and her solicitor," was insufficient to protect them, it being necessary to show that the letters were professional communications of a confidential character.—O'Shea v. Wood, C.A.—[1891] P. 286; 65 L. T. 30.

26. Practice—Right to begin—Plea of fraud—Plea not established—Costs.—In a probate suit the plaintiff claimed a decree of intestacy, and the defendant set up a will which had been duly executed by the deceased in her favour, and of which she was sole executrix. The only issue was one of fraud, which had been pleaded by the plaintiff, the alleged fraud being that the defendant had led the testator to believe that she was capable of contracting, and that she had contracted, a valid marriage with him, whereas in fact her real husband was then and still alive. The plaintiff opened the case, and in the result

The court found that the plea of fraud had failed, and pronounced for the will in the defendant's favour, but left each party to pay their own costs.—Tate v. Tate, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 112.

27. Revocation of will by marriage — Indian divorce—Marriage of parties in England within six months of final decree—Indian Divorce Act, 1869, No. 4, s. 57.—A respondent and co-respondent in a divorce suit in India, in which a decree absolute was pronounced on November 27, 1879, came to this country and were married on February 3, 1880. On February 6 the co-respondent duly executed a will by which he bequeathed all his property to his "reputed wife." On April 2, 1880, the parties went through a second form of marriage.

Held, that the first marriage, having been celebrated within six months from the date of decree absolute for divorce, contrary to the prohibition in section 57 of the Indian Divorce Act, 1869, No. 4, was invalid, and that the will was revoked by the subsequent marriage.

Scott v. Attorney-General, 11 P. D. 128, distinguished.—Warter v. Warter, P.D. & A.D.—15 P. D. 152; 59 L. J. P. D. & A. 87; 63 L. T. 250.

28. Seaman's will—Surgeon in the navy—Letter written before sailing—1 Vict. c. 26, s. 11.—A surgeon in the navy wrote a letter, some parts of which were testamentary, on board a Queen's ship at Devonport. The ship was lost at sea and the surgeon drowned.

Held, that the letter was entitled to probate as the will of a "seaman being at sea," within section 11 of 1 Vict. c. 26.—In the Goods of Rae, P. & M.D. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 116.

29. Testamentary document—Deed poll—Execution as a will—Extrinsic evidence—Administration.—The deceased, prior to her death, executed a deed poll, which was duly witnessed by two witnesses, who signed as witnesses in the presence of each other. The person who drew up the document regarded it as a will, and added the words, "And in the presence of each other." The sole beneficiary was present, and under the deed understood that she was to receive nothing until after the death of the deceased, and after the execution of the document she promised to give, at the request of the deceased, £10 to E. C. after her death, as she had omitted to mention it in the paper.

Held, that the beneficiary was entitled to administration, with the paper annexed, as the last will and testament of the deceased. As the document was ambiguous, extrinsic evidence was admissible to show whether the deceased intended it to operate as a testamentary document.—In the Goods of Slinn, P.D. & A.D. 175—15 P. D. 156; 59 L. J. P. D. & A. 82; 63 L. T. 229.

30. Testamentary documents—Will revoked by later will—Subsequent execution of codicil—Construction—Revival—Probate of earlier will and of codicil.—The testator died at Calcutta in April, 1888. By a will made in 1873 he appointed three persons (two of whom had since died) to be his executors, and after disposing of all his property, appointed his wife, "during her widowhood, and, after her death, his trustees therein named and the survivors or survivor of them, guardians of my infant children for the time being."

In 1878 he executed a holograph will, at the foot or end of the will of 1873, in these terms: "I hereby revoke the above will in its entirety, declaring all its provisions null and void, and constitute my wife the sole heiress and executrix of any property I may die possessed of." In 1882 the testator executed a further testamentary document, as follows: "I declare this to be a codicil to my last will. I hereby confirm my said will in all respects, and particularly the appointment therein of my wife as guardian of my infant children, and I hereby appoint my sister, L. C. Griffith, guardian of my infant children after the death of my said wife." The widow now moved the court for directions.

Held, that the word "confirm" in the codicil, coupled with the reference to the guardianship of the infant children, no mention of which was made in the revocative second will, was sufficient to revive the earlier will of 1873 as against the second will of 1878, and that probate should go of the will of 1873 and the codicil of 1882, as together constituting the true last wishes of the deceased.—In the Goods of Van Cutsem, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 252.

31. Testamentary documents—Revival—Mistake of law and fact—Effect.—The testatrix, forgetting the existence of a will and codicil duly executed by her in 1885, or under a misapprehension as to the legal effect thereof upon an earlier will and codicil, executed, in 1889, a "second codicil" to the earlier will and codicil, which she thereby purported to "ratify and confirm." The solicitors who drew the first will and codicil and the last codicil knew nothing of the existence or execution of the intermediate will and codicil until after the death.

Held, that the first will and codicil were not revived by the last codicil.—In the Goods of Turner, P.D. & A.D.—64 L. T. 805.

32. Two wills—Property in England and Canada—Independent grant for English will—Affidavit as to movables.—A testator possessed of property in England and Canada made two wills, each purporting to be independent of the other, and disposing only of the estate situate in the country to which it referred.

Held, that probate might be granted of the English will on an affidavit being filed exhibiting a copy of the Canadian will, and a statement that such affidavit had been filed being indorsed on the probate; but that an affidavit must be made that the movable chattels bequeathed by each will were actually at the time of the death of the testator in the country to which the will which disposed of them referred.—In the Goods of Seaman, P.D. & A.D. —[1891] P. 253; 64 L. T. 805.

33. Two wills—Separate disposition of property in England and Scotland—Debts charged on one estate only—Grant.—A testator executed two testamentary papers, one disposing exclusively of property in Scotland, the other dealing solely with property in England. By the Scotch testamentary paper all the testator's debts were charged on the Scotch estate. Two of the executors of the English will were trustees of the Scotch estate. The court being satisfied that no creditor would be prejudiced, made a grant of probate of the English will alone, without requiring the Scotch deed to be incorporated, upon condition that a certified copy of such deed was filed and a note to that effect made on the probate.—In the Goods of Fraser, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 285; 64 L. T. 808.

34. Will and codicils—Different executors for different properties—Grant of probate.—The probate should contain the whole, and not a part only, of the testamentary documents of the deceased. The testatrix made a will disposing of property in Ireland, and appointing executors, and a codicil of even date disposing of property in America and appointing a different person executor thereof, and later on a second codicil substituting a new executor in the place of one named in the will. The court granted probate of all three documents to the executors named in the will and second codicil without reserving power to the executor named in the first codicil.—In the Goods of Power, P. & M.D. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 509.

35. Will procured by beneficiary—Not read over—Not know and approve contents—Onus on beneficiary propounding will—Probate refused.—The court is to approach with suspicion the consideration of a will procured and propounded by a person taking a large benefit thereunder, although the will may have been prepared by a solicitor, and although fraud is not pleaded by the person opposing the will, and where there was no testamentary incapacity on the part of the testator or the witnesses.

Where a beneficiary, who had procured and subsequently propounded a will, failed, under those circumstances, to satisfy the court, by affirmative and conclusive evidence, that the testator did, in fact, know and approve of the contents of the will which he had actually executed,

The court, applying and acting upon the principles laid down by the House of Lords in Fulton v. Andrew, L. R. 7 E. & I. App. 461, 32 L. T. N. S. 209, refused probate of such will, with costs. —Brown v. Fisher, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 465.

See also EXECUTOR, 2; WILL, 33.

PROBATE (IRELAND).—See PRACTICE (IRELAND), 11.

PROBATE DUTY.—See REVENUE, 10.

PUBLIC HEALTH ACT, 1875.—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 1, 8-14; WATERWORKS, 2.

RAILWAY:—

1. Abandonment—Parliamentary deposit—Rights of creditors.—By a private Act authorizing the construction of a railway, provision was made for the return of the parliamentary deposit to the depositors on the completion of the undertaking. By section 37 if the undertaking was not completed within the prescribed time the deposit should be applicable towards compensating landowners; and if no such compensation was payable the deposit should be either forfeited to the Crown, or, in the discretion of the court, if the company had been ordered to be wound up or a receiver had been appointed, should be paid to such receiver or the liquidator of the company, or be otherwise applied as part of the assets of the company for the benefit of the creditors thereof. The company having allowed their powers to lapse, a private Act was passed which authorized the return of the deposit to the depositors subject to the provisions of section 37 of the earlier Act. There was no enactment, nor any order of the court, directing the winding up of the company, nor had a receiver been appointed.

Held, upon a petition by the depositors for the return of the deposit, that the creditors of the company had no claim against the deposit.—In re Enniskillen and Bundoran Railway Co., M.R. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 472.

2. Agreement for purchase of lands "or such portion as the company may require"—Time within which option to be exercised—Completion of purchase. —In December, 1883, an agreement was entered into between the plaintiff of the one part and a railway company, the predecessors of the defendant company, of the other part, which, after reciting that by a special Act of 1882 the company had obtained power to construct certain railways, and for that purpose to take certain lands of the plaintiff, provided that the company should pay for the purchase of such lands, "or for such portions or portion thereof as the company may require," and for the fee simple thereof, at the rates therein mentioned; that the purchase should be completed on or before the 1st of January, 1885, and that, if not completed by that day, the company "should thenceforth pay to the vendor interest on the purchase-money after the rate of £5 per cent. per annum." By a special Act of 1885 the company obtained an extension of time for the compulsory purchase of lands till the 18th of August, 1887, and for the completion of their works till the 18th of August, 1890. By a special Act of 1887 the defendant company was incorporated for the purpose of taking over the entire undertaking of the old company. The plaintiff complained that the defendant company refused to carry out the agreement, and accordingly brought an action claiming specific performance of it. The defendant company, on the other hand, insisted that they were not under any obligation to purchase any of the lands comprised in the agreement except as and when they required them for the construction of their railway and works, which, in fact, they were not at present in a position to make.

Held, that, unless the defendant company had stated that they required certain of the plaintiff's lands, the agreement could not now be enforced against them, the company having an option to say what lands they required; and that the reasonable inference to be drawn from the agreement was that the time within which such option was to be exercised was the 1st of January, 1885.

Held, therefore, that the agreement was not enforceable either against the plaintiff or the defendants, and that the action failed.—Wentworth v. The Hull and North-Western Junction Railway Co., CH.D. KEK., J.—64 L. T. 190.

3. Debenture-holders—First charge—Gross traffic receipts—"Working expenses"—Priority—Wye Valley Railway Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. ccclvii.), ss. 17, 19, 50, and 53.—The plaintiff on behalf of himself and all other the debenture stock holders of the defendant company claimed a declaration that they were entitled to a first charge on the gross traffic receipts arising under an agreement made between the defendant company and the Great Western Railway Co. scheduled to the Wye Valley Railway Act, 1866, and confirmed and made binding upon the companies parties thereto by section 53 of that statute.

Clause 11 of the agreement provided that the interest on the bonds and debentures of the defendant company not exceeding £76,600 should be a first charge on the gross receipts, and should be paid thereout by the Great Western Railway Co., and should be repaid to that company by the defendant company out of its proportion of the divisible receipts from time to time; and that in case of any deficiency of such proportion in any half-year the amount of such deficiency should be a charge on any moneys payable by the Great Western Co. to the defendant company in any subsequent half-year.

The defendant company sought to apply out of gross traffic receipts moneys required for the purpose of discharging certain outgoings which were absolutely necessary in connection with the branches or subsidiary works of the defendant company's undertaking.

Kekewich, J., decided that the charge claimed by the plaintiff was conferred by the provisions of clause 11, which contained a clear expression of the rights of the debenture stockholders; and that in the face of that charge the defendant company was not entitled to apply the gross traffic receipts in payment of its working expenses so as to diminish the moneys coming to the debenture stock holders.

On appeal: Held (affirming the decision of Kekewich, J.), that the plaintiff's charge had absolute priority over the claim made by the defendant company.

In re The Eastern and Midlands Railway Co., 45 Ch. D. 367, 63 L. T. N. S. 181, 604, distinguished.—Proffitt v. The Wye Valley Railway Co., C.A.—64 L. T. 669.

4. Passenger travelling without payment of fare—Demand of fare—Criminal proceedings—Regulation of Railways Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 57), s. 5, sub-section 3.—A passenger having been summoned under the Regulation of Railways Act, 1889, s. 5, sub-section 3 (a), for travelling without having previously paid his fare, and with intent to avoid payment thereof (the passenger having travelled in a higher class of carriage than that for which he had a ticket), the magistrate dismissed the summons, on the ground that, the ticket collector having demanded the excess fare, the railway company could not afterwards proceed criminally.

Held, that the decision of the magistrate was wrong.—Noble v. Killick, Q.B.D.—60 L. J. M. C. 61.

5. Railways (Ireland) Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 97), s. 2—Compulsory purchase—Purchase-money lodged in court—Interest—Payment out—Annuitant—Consent.—A railway company took lands under their compulsory powers and lodged the amount found by the certificate of the arbitrator in court under section 2 of the Railways (Ireland) Act, 1860, and went into possession of the lands. The company did not apply to have the money invested or transferred to the credit of the sum awarded by the final award of the arbitrator.

Held, that the company were liable to pay interest on the purchase-money from the date at which they went into possession of the lands.

Held, also, that the money could not be paid out to the owner without the consent of the holder of an annuity charged thereon.—In re Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway Co., Ex parte Jordan, V.C. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 79.

6. Rates—Division of rates into component parts—"Person interested"—Owner of private branch railway—Regulation of Railways Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 48), s. 14.—The owner of a branch line communicating with the defendants' line collected goods and loaded them upon trucks, and handed over the trucks at the junction to the defendants. The applicant also received from the defendants at the junction goods for delivery on the branch line.

Held, that the applicant was entitled to an order under section 14 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, as a "person interested" within the meaning of that section, requiring the defendants to distinguish in their rate-book how much of the rate was for each of the charges therein specified which together constituted the total rate.—Tomlinson v. London and North-Western Railway Co., R. & C.C.—63 L. T. 86.

7. Rates—Terminal charges—Station accommodation—Clerkage—Shunting—Service incidental to the business of a carrier—The Great Northern Railway and East Lincolnshire Railways Acts Amendment Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. lxi.), s. 13.—The statute 13 & 14 Vict. c. lxi. provides (section 13) that, "with respect to the conveyance of goods and minerals, the said companies may lawfully demand and receive as the maximum rate of charge for the conveyance thereof along their railways, including the tolls for the use of the railways, and wagons or trucks, and locomotive power, and every expense incidental to such conveyance, except a reasonable sum for loading, covering, and unloading, and for delivery and collection, and any other services incidental to the business or duty of a carrier, where such services, or any of them, are or is performed by the said companies . . . any rates or sums not exceeding," &c.

Held, that, on the true construction of the section, the companies were entitled to make charges, in addition to the maximum rate, in respect of station accommodation for merchandise, and of the share of the general expenses of the station, of supervision, of clerkage, and of shunting attributable to the merchandise traffic as "services incidental to the duty or business of a carrier."—Sowerby & Co. v. Great Northern Railway Co., C.A.—60 L. J. Q. B. 467.

8. Receiver—Unpaid capital—Execution—Companies Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), s. 36—Railway Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 127), s. 4.—The appointment of a receiver of the undertaking of a railway company under section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, does not affect the right of a judgment creditor to issue execution against unpaid capital under section 36 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845.

Unpaid capital is not receivable by a receiver appointed under section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867.

E. H. was appointed receiver and manager of the West Lancashire Railway Co. He held shares in the company, which purported to be fully paid up, but which had in fact been issued at a discount, and on which it was alleged that moneys still remained due. The Rock Life Assurance Co. held debenture stock of the railway company on which interest was in arrear. The suing officer of the insurance company, having recovered judgment in respect of the arrears, gave notice of an application to the Queen's Bench Division, under section 36 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, for leave to issue execution against E. H. to the extent of the moneys remaining due in respect of his shares. The railway company thereupon moved to commit him for contempt of court in instituting proceedings against the receiver without the leave of the court for the purpose of obtaining moneys alleged to be receivable by him in his capacity of receiver.

Held, that the respondent was within his rights, and that the motion must be dismissed with costs.—In re West Lancashire Railway Co., CH.D. STI., J.—63 L. T. 56.

9. Receiver and manager—Application of moneys in hands of receiver—"Working expenses and proper outgoings"—Railway Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 127), ss. 4, 23.—When a receiver of the undertaking of a railway company has been appointed in pursuance of section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, the moneys received by him must be applied first in providing for the "working expenses" of the railway, even if by the company's special Act a fixed dividend on shares and the interest on debentures forming the capital raised for a particular undertaking of the company are charged on the gross receipts of that undertaking.

When a railway company has purchased rolling stock on the terms of paying for it by a series of instalments at fixed times, the stock not becoming the property of the company until the complete payment of all the instalments, and the vendor having the right to seize the stock on default in payment of any one instalment, the "working expenses" include such instalments as they become due, and also overdue instalments.

By virtue of a special Act of a company a certain loop line was constituted a "separate undertaking" and the capital raised for the purpose of constructing the loop line was constituted "separate capital." A receiver having been appointed under section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867,

Held (by Kay, J., and the Court of Appeal), upon the construction of the special Act as a whole, that the dividend upon, and interest in respect of, the separate capital were not "working expenses" or "proper outgoings" within the meaning of section 4 and were to be postponed to working expenses.—In re Eastern and Midlands Railway Co., C.A.—45 Ch. D. 367; 63 L. T. 604.

10. Statutory powers—Subway under Metropolitan street—Power to construct necessary works within lines of deviation—Permanent interference with foot or carriage way prohibited—Erection of station beyond fixed general line of buildings—Construction of general and special Acts—Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 75—City of London and Southwark Subway (Kennington Extension, &c.) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. cv.), ss. 4, 25, and 27.—A railway company were empowered by their special Act, passed in 1887, to construct in the metropolis, within limits of deviation shown on deposited plans, a subway with all necessary works and conveniences, and to acquire specified lands compulsorily for the purpose, and were prohibited from making any approach to the subway in such a manner as to interfere after the completion thereof with the carriage or footway of any street.

Held, on case stated, that, notwithstanding the 75th section of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, the Act empowered the company to erect, on land compulsorily acquired within the limits of deviation, a station beyond the general line of buildings of a street as fixed by the superintending architect of the London County Council.—The City and South London Railway Co. v. The London County Council, Q.B.D.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 513; 60 L. J. M. C. 99.

11. Undue preference—Effect of competition—"Necessity of lower charge for securing in the interests of the public the traffic in respect of which it is made"—Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), s. 2—Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 25), ss. 7, 27.—By the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, s. 27, sub-section 1: "Whenever it is shown that any railway company charge one trader or class of traders or the traders in any district lower tolls, rates, or charges for the same or similar merchandise, or lower tolls, rates, or charges for the same or similar services than they charge to other traders or classes of traders or the traders in another district, or make any difference in treatment in respect of any such trader or traders, the burden of proving that such lower charge or difference in treatment does not amount to an undue preference shall lie on the company." By sub-section 2: "In deciding whether a lower charge or difference in treatment does or does not amount to an undue preference, the court having jurisdiction in the matter or the commissioners, as the case may be, may, so far as they think reasonable, in addition to any other considerations affecting the case, take into consideration whether such lower charge or difference in treatment is necessary for the purpose of securing, in the interests of the public, the traffic in respect of which it is made, and whether the inequality cannot be removed without unduly reducing the rates charged to the complainant: Provided that no railway company shall make, nor shall the court or the commissioners sanction, any difference in the tolls, rates, or charges made for, or any difference in the treatment of home and foreign merchandise in respect of the same or similar services."

On a complaint by an association of traders in grain and flour at Liverpool against the London and North-Western Railway Co. for undue preference in respect of the lower rates charged by them for the carriage of these goods from Cardiff to Birmingham as compared with those charged for the carriage of them from Liverpool to Birmingham, a shorter distance, it appeared that the trade of the applicants had suffered through the competition in the Birmingham market of grain and flour from the Bristol Channel and Severn ports, but that only a very small quantity was carried by the respondents from Cardiff to Birmingham. Two other railways competed with the respondents between Cardiff and Birmingham, and the lower rates complained of had been fixed with a view to competition by the respondents with the rates charged by other railways from ports in the Severn to which grain and flour were brought by sea, and which were nearer to Birmingham than Cardiff.

Held, that the facts showed an undue perference by the respondents.

Semble, that the effect of section 27 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, is not to limit the court in dealing with questions of alleged undue preference to the consideration whether or not the lower charge is necessary in the interests of the public.—Liverpool Corn Trade Association v. London and North-Western Railway Co., R. & C.C.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 120; 60 L. J. Q. B. 76; 63 L. T. 564.

12. Undue preference—Grouping rates—Reasonable distances—Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 25) s. 29.—Certain works belonging to the applicants were situated at a point on the line of the Furness Railway Co. at a distance of eighteen miles from the junction of the line of that company with the line of the London and North-Western Railway Co., and other works of the district were situated thirty-eight miles from that junction. Iron ore and coke were obtained from the same sources in all these works, which also made the same description of pig-iron and sent it to the same markets. The railway companies, as a means of fixing the rates, grouped all these works together and charged them a uniform rate of carriage, except that the applicants were charged at the rate of sixpence per ton less for coke than the other works, Held, that, so far as the rate for coke was concerned, the railway companies had made sufficient allowance for the difference in distance between the works; but as regards the iron ore rates the places grouped together were at such distances apart as to create an undue preference.—The North Lonsdale Iron and Steel Co. v. Furness Railway Co., R. & C.C.—60 L. J. Q. B. 419; 64 L. T. 122.

13. Undue preference—Rates—Parcels delivery—Forwarding agents—Carriers—Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31), s. 2.—A railway company undertook to deliver parcels addressed to F., a carrier, who, upon receiving them, distributed them to his customers. Several parcels addressed to F. were delivered to C., who acted as agent of the railway company, and who sent them direct to F.'s customers. C. was a carrier on his own account, besides being agent for the railway company. The railway company charged F. full rates, but they kept a "favoured list," the persons appearing on it being charged lower rates. C. delivered the parcels to F.'s customers at the lower rates, but as between C. and the railway company it was understood that if he did so in the course of his employment as agent, he must pay the difference to the railway company.

Held, that as between F.'s customers and himself the railway company were delivering to the customers at a lower rate than they charged to F., and that this was an undue preference.—Ford & Co. v. London and South-Western Railway Co., R. & C.C. —60 L. J. Q. B. 130; 63 L. T. 841.

See also BUILDING CONTRACT; INTEREST, 2; LAND TAX; NEGLIGENCE, 1, 6, 7; POOR RATE, 2, 3.

RECEIVER.—See LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 3; PRACTICE, 49; PRACTICE (IRELAND), 12, 13; RAILWAY, 8, 9; VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 7.

RECOGNIZANCE.—See CROWN.

RESTITUTION of CONJUGAL RIGHTS.—See DIVORCE, 21, 22.

RESTRAINT of TRADE:—

1. Validity — Covenant — Construction. — Agreements in restraint of trade are to be construed according to the principles of construction applicable to all other agreements, and are not to be approached with any primâ facie presumption against their validity.

Leather Cloth Co. v. Lorsont, 18 W. R. 572, L. R. 9 Eq. 345, discussed.

The test in each case of the validity or invalidity of an agreement in restraint of trade is whether, on the true construction of the agreement, the restraint is or is not, having regard to the nature of the business and the character of the employment, greater than is reasonably required for the protection of the employer.—Mills v. Dunham, C.A. 289—[1891] 1 Ch. 576; 60 L. J. Ch. 362; 64 L. T. 712.

2. Validity—Consideration—Illegality.—The members of an association agreed not to sell mineral waters below a certain price, or below such other higher price as the committee might from time to time direct. The agreement was to last for ten years, and a penalty was provided for breach of its provisions.

Held, that the agreement was in restraint of trade, and was not enforceable.—Urmston v. Whitelegg Brothers, Q.B.D.— 63 L. T. 455.

3. Validity—Reasonable limits—Limit of space.—By agreement made the 6th of June, 1885, by D. & Co., of London, foreign carriers (thereinafter referred to as "employers"), of the one part, and L. of the other part, the employers agreed to engage L. as their clerk on certain conditions, which L. agreed to observe and perform. And the agreement contained the following covenant:—"The said L. agrees that he will not within twelve calendar months after the termination of this agreement, from whatever cause, carry on or be engaged in, or interested, directly or indirectly, in the cities of London, Birmingham, Liverpool, England, and New York, United States, or within fifty miles thereof of each of the above-named places, either as principal, clerk, agent, or otherwise, in any business similar to the business now or hereafter to be carried on by employers." On the 21st of February, 1891, the defendant gave the plaintiffs a month's notice to terminate the engagement, and on leaving the plaintiffs he entered into the service of a rival firm in London, and, as the plaintiffs alleged, solicited the custom of the customers of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs had not any trade with Birmingham, but a considerable business with the other places mentioned in the agreement. This was a motion on the part of the plaintiffs asking, in the terms of the covenant (omitting the words "or hereafter" near the end), that the defendant might be restrained by injunction from committing a breach of the agreement.

Held, that the limit of time was reasonable; also that of space, with the exception of Birmingham, with which place the plaintiffs appeared to have no connection; that the words "principal, clerk, agent, or otherwise" in the agreement were not too wide; that the words "now or hereafter" in the agreement were not reasonable; and that the court could separate the different parts of the covenant, holding part good and part bad.

Injunction therefore granted in terms of the notice of motion, omitting the word "Birmingham," and adding the words "during the employment of the defendant by the plaintiffs.—Davies, Turner, & Co. v. Lowen, CH.D. KEK., J.—64 L. T. 655.

REVENUE:—

BODIES CORPORATE AND UNINCORPORATE—

1. Exemption—Property appropriated and applied for the promotion of science—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 51), s. 11, sub-section 3.—The property of the Institution of Civil Engineers, being legally appropriated and applied for the promotion of the "science" of civil engineering, comes within the exemption under sub-section 3 of section 11 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, and is consequently not liable to the duty imposed by that section.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (36 W. R. 598, 20 Q. B. D. 621) affirmed (Lord Halsbury, L.C., dissenting).—Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Forrest, H.L. (E.) 33—15 App. Cas. 334; 60 L. J. Q. B. 281; 63 L. T. 36.

EXCISE—

2. Spirits—Illicit distillation—Spirits found in house—1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 55, s. 17.—To constitute an offence under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 55, s. 17, the house or place where illicit spirits are found must be one in which illicit distillation was intended to be, and was being, or had been, carried on.—Doherty v. M'Clelland, EX.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 168.

INCOME TAX—

3. Deductions — Brewers acting as bankers and money-lenders for their customers—Losses or bad debts in the money-lending branch—Deduction of such losses from profits of the brewery business—5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, s. 100, Schedule D.—A firm of brewers carried on, in connection with their brewery business, a branch business of banking and money-lending confined to the customers of the firm, which they were entitled to do under their memorandum of association. They advanced money by way of loan or advance to their customers, upon various classes of security, such as deposit of deeds, mortgage, and promissory notes. They received money on deposit from their customers, and acted generally as bankers for such customers, but in no case was any loan or advance made by way of permanent investment. Losses in the nature of bad debts having been incurred in the banking and money-lending branch of the business,

Held, that the banking or money-lending branch was an adjunct to the brewery business, only one business being carried on; that the loans were not capital invested; and that the brewers were entitled to deduct the losses in the money-lending branch from their gains in the brewery branch in making their return for income tax.—Reid's Brewery Co. v. Male, Q.B.D. 459—[1891] 2 Q. B. 1; 60 L. J. Q. B. 340; 64 L. T. 294.

4. Deductions—Gasworks belonging to municipal corporation—Profit on trade with private customers—Deductions—Expenditure incurred in lighting streets—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100, Schedule D, Cases I. and II.—The corporation of a borough were empowered by Act of Parliament to erect gasworks and light the streets without contracting for the purchase of gas; and they were further empowered, after sufficiently lighting the streets, to supply gas to any persons who should be willing to pay for it.

Held, that, in estimating the profits of their trade with their private customers, for the purpose of assessment to the income tax, they were not entitled to deduct the amount expended in the public lighting of the streets.—Dillon v. Corporation of Haverfordwest, Q.B.D. 478—[1891] 1 Q. B. 575; 60 L. J. Q. B. 477; 64 L. T. 202.

5. Deductions—Offices of master and mistress of national school—Money necessarily expended in performance of duties of office—Expense of keeping servant—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 51, Schedule E.—The respondent and his wife were the master and mistress of a national school, and received a joint salary for their services. An assessment to the income tax was made upon the respondent under Schedule E. He claimed to deduct a sum in respect of expenses necessarily incurred by him in keeping a servant, in order that his wife might be able to perform her duties as schoolmistress.

Held, that such deduction could not be allowed,—Bowers v. Harding, Q.B.D. 558—[1891] 1 Q. B. 560; 60 L. J. Q. B. 474; 64 L. T. 201.

6. Exemption—Bursar of college—Salary as bursar—Exemption from income tax in respect of such salary—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 146, Schedule E.—The principal bursar of St. John Baptist College, Oxford, claimed to be exempt from income tax on his salary of £450 a year which he received as such bursar, on the ground that, though not actually a member of the corporation of the college, his salary is "by statute" a charge upon the revenues of the corporation, and is therefore equally exempt from direct taxation. The principal bursar is an officer appointed for five years by the president and fellows, who are members of the foundation, and he is, by the statutes of the college, one of the necessary officers of the college.

Held, that, as he was not one of the body who constitute the college, but merely an officer appointed by the president and fellows, he was not entitled to the exemption claimed, but was liable to be assessed for income tax, under Schedule E of section 146 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, upon the salary which he received as bursar.—Langton v. Glasson, Q.B.D. 476—[1891] 1 Q. B. 567; 60 L. J. Q. B. 356; 65 L. T. 159.

7. Exemption—Hospital—Hospital supported substantially by charitable funds—Exemption from inhabited house duty—5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, Schedule A—48 Geo. 3, c. 55, Schedule B (Exemptions), case 4.—A lunatic hospital had been carried on upon its present site for thirty years; it was a building provided for the reception and relief of lunatics who are not paupers, for whose maintenance and medical attendance sums from 10s. to 40s. a week are paid; it was founded and built with charitable donations, and managed by persons who derive no pecuniary benefit therefrom, but who assist it by their subscriptions. The annual reports showed that the hospital is substantially supported by funds derived from charitable sources, and the real property on which the hospital is carried on is vested in trustees upon trust to be used as a lunatic hospital.

Held, that, as the hospital was substantially supported from charitable sources, it came within the exemption in rule 6 of Schedule A of the Income Tax Act, and was not liable to be assessed to income tax under that schedule; also, that it was not liable to inhabited house duty, as it came within the exemption of case 4, Schedule B, of 48 Geo. 3, c. 55, as being a "hospital provided for the reception or relief of poor persons."

Needham v. Bowers, 37 W. R. 125, 21 Q. B. D. 436, distinguished. — Cawse v. Committee of the Lunatic Hospital, Nottingham, Q.B.D. 461—[1891] 1 Q. B. 585; 60 L. J. Q. B. 485; 65 L. T. 155.

8. Profits — Company in the United Kingdom—Branch establishments abroad—Profits earned abroad not remitted to the United Kingdom—5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, s. 100—16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, s. 2, Schedule D.—The appellants were a banking company registered under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, having their head office in London and branches in Mexico. The directors in London exercised the general control and management of the business in London and abroad. The dividends were paid in London, where the directors and shareholders met. A portion of the profits earned in Mexico not having been remitted to England, Held (affirming the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division), that, as the business carried on by the appellants in London and Mexico was one business, income tax was payable upon the profits of the business, though not actually received in England.

Colquhoun v. Brooks, 38 W. R. 289, 14 App. Cas. 493, distinguished.—London Bank of Mexico and South America v. Apthorpe, C.A. 564—[1891] 2 Q. B. 378.

LEGACY DUTY—

9. Direction to carry on business—Annual sum to be paid to trustees and a beneficiary, if and so long as they carry on the business—Legacy Duty Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 76), s. 4.—A testator devised his business to his executors and trustees, upon trust to carry on the business in conjunction with a son of the testator, and directed that each of the executors and trustees whilst carrying on the business, and that the son whilst managing the business in conjunction with them, should receive specified annual sums out of the profits of the business.

Held, that these annual sums were legacies, and liable to legacy duty.

In re Pooley, 37 W. R. 17, 40 Ch. D. 1, discussed.

Decision of North, J. (39 W. R. 233), affirmed.—In re Thorley, Thorley v. Massam, C.A. 565—[1891] 2 Ch. 613; 60 L. J. Ch. 537; 64 L. T. 515.

PROBATE DUTY—

10. Partnership — Local situation of business in England or India.—In an action for probate duty it appeared that the deceased had been a member of a partnership firm. By the articles of partnership it was provided that the business should be the carrying on and working of certain silks and indigo concerns, and zemindaries for the production or manufacture or working of indigo and silk and other produce, and for the sale in Calcutta or shipment for realization in Europe of such produce. The articles further provided that the entire business of the firm in India should be carried on by certain managing agents who were required to be partners, who were alone entitled to use the name of the firm, to keep the books, and prepare the balance-sheets, and who were also empowered (but subject to the opinion of the committee hereinafter mentioned) to determine what branches of business should be undertaken. A committee of the partners in England was appointed to advise with the agents, both in London and Calcutta, on all matters affecting the interest of the partnership, and, subject to the approval of a general meeting of the partners, to decide all matters affecting the partnership. It was further provided that, on the death of any partner, his representatives should not become partners in respect of his shares, but that the interest of the deceased partner should cease from the 30th of September next after his decease, with power for the representatives to sell the share within a stipulated period, or else to receive its fair value. A firm in London were declared to be the agents of the partnership in Europe, to whom the produce of the firm was to be consigned and the proceeds of the sales in India were to be remitted. The London agents were to make the advances necessary for carrying on the business, and held a mortgage over the assets which were vested in trustees resident in the United Kingdom. The estates cultivated by the firm were situate in India, and the business properly so called was entirely carried on there. There were sixteen partners, all but two of whom resided in the United Kingdom.

Held (reversing the decision of the Court of Session, 16 Court Sess. Cas., 4th series (Rettie), 959), that the share or interest of the deceased in the partnership was not property situated in the United Kingdom, and was therefore not liable to probate duty.—Laidlay v. Lord Advocate, H.L. (SC.) —15 App. Cas. 468.

STAMP—

11. Settlement—"Definite and certain amount of stock"—Contingent reversionary interest settled—Stock vested in trustees with power to vary investments —Stamp Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 97), s. 3, schedule, "Settlement."—By a marriage settlement the settlor's reversionary and contingent interests in divers specified sums of stock vested in trustees, with powers of varying the investments, were settled.

Held, that the settlement was an "instrument . . . whereby . . . a definite and certain amount of stock . . . is settled or agreed to be settled" within the definition of the word "settlement" in the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1870, and that it accordingly required an ad valorem stamp of 5s. for every £100, as provided by that schedule.—Onslow v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, C.A. 373 —[1891] 1 Q. B. 239; 60 L. J. Q. B. 138; 64 L. T. 211.

SUCCESSION DUTY—

12. Vendor and purchaser—Sale of expectancy in real estate—"Free from incumbrances"—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), s. 42.—The heir presumptive of an owner in fee simple of real estate contracted to sell his expectancy "free from incumbrances." The contract contained no express stipulation as to the succession duty to become payable in respect of the vendor's succession.

Held, as between the vendor and the purchaser, that the purchaser was liable to bear such succession duty.

Cooper v. Trewby, 8 W. R. 299, 28 Beav. 194, approved.—In re Langham's Contract, C.A. 156—60 L. J. Ch. 110.

See also LAND TAX; PAWNBROKER.

REWARD for INFORMATION LEADING to CONVICTION.—See ARREST.

RIVER.—See COPYHOLDS.

RULES of COURT:—

Ord 3, r 6 See PRACTICE, 62
Ord 8, r 1—See PRACTICE, 63
Ord 9, r 1—See ADMIRALTY, 8
r 2—See PRACTICE, 71
r 6—See PRACTICE, 64, 68
r 10—See ADMIRALTY, 8
Ord 11—See PRACTICE, 64
r 1 (e)—See PRACTICE, 65, 69
r 1 (f)—See PRACTICE, 70
r 1 (g)—See ADMIRALTY, 9; PRACTICE, 61
r 2—See PRACTICE, 70
r 7—See PRACTICE, 65
Ord 12, r 25—See PRACTICE, 35
Ord 13, r 1 See PROBATE, 23
Ord 14, r 1 See PRACTICE, 68
Ord 16, r 4 See TRUSTEE, 3
rr 6, 11—See PRACTICE, 48
r 14—See PRACTICE, 65
r 32—See PRACTICE, 20a
r 48—See PRACTICE, 47, 48
r 55—See PRACTICE, 47
Ord 19, r 3—See SOLICITOR, 1
r 7—See PATENT, 3
r 10—See PRACTICE, 24
r 15—See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, 2
Ord 22—See SOLICITOR, 1
Ord 23, r 4—See PRACTICE, 23
Ord 25, rr 2, 3—See PRACTICE, 6
r 4—See PRACTICE, 7
Ord 27, rr 2, 11—See PRACTICE, 23
Ord 28, r 10—See PRACTICE, 24
Ord 31, r 12—See PRACTICE, 27
rr 15-18—See PRACTICE, 29
r 26—See PRACTICE, 27, 28, 33
Ord 34—See WILL, 17
Ord 35, r 6a (1), (2) See SOLICITOR, 4
rr 13, 14, 16 See PRACTICE, 34
Ord 36, rr 6, 7—See PRACTICE, 57
r 32—See PRACTICE, 58
rr 48-50—See PRACTICE, 50
rr 50, 52a—See PRACTICE, 52
rr 54, 55—See PRACTICE, 51
Ord 37, r 5—See PROBATE, 25
r 7—See PRACTICE, 60; PROBATE, 25
Ord 38, r 8—See PRACTICE, 1
Ord 40, r 7—See PRACTICE, 51
Ord 42, r 10—See PRACTICE, 67
Ord 44, r 2—See PRACTICE, 11
Ord 45, r 1—See PRACTICE, 36
Ord 47, rr 1, 2 See MORTGAGE, 3
Ord 52, r 5—See PRACTICE, 11
Ord 55, rr 3-8 See PRACTICE, 47
r 70—See COMPANY, 30
Ord 58, r 3 See PRACTICE, 6
r 4—See PRACTICE, 43
r 15—See PRACTICE, 5, 6, 7, 54
Ord 59, r 10—See COUNTY COURT, 3
r 12—See COUNTY COURT, 3, 4
r 16—See COUNTY COURT, 4
Ord 62, r 18—See SOLICITOR, 4
Ord 64, r 7—See PRACTICE, 7, 63
Ord 65, r 1 See PRACTICE, 18, 19, 20a
r 6—See PRACTICE, 27
r 9—See PRACTICE, 3
r 27 (21)—See PRACTICE, 20
r 27 (48) See PRACTICE, 17
Ord 68, r 1—See DIVORCE, 17

SAILING RULES.—See SHIP, 15, 17 23.

SALE of FOOD and DRUGS ACTS.—See cases under ADULTERATION.

SALE of GOODS:—

Stoppage in transitu—Duration of right of unpaid vendor.—Where goods are delivered to a carrier to be carried to a destination indicated at the time of sale, it is immaterial whether the carrier is or is not thereby constituted an agent of the purchaser for the purpose of passing the property to him.

The transitus lasts until the destination is reached. —Lyons v. Hoffnung, P.C. 390—15 App. Cas. 391; 59 L. J. P. C. 79; 63 L. T. 293.

SALVAGE.—See SHIP, 36, 37, 38.

SCHOOL.—See NEGLIGENCE, 8.

SCHOOL BOARD:—

Member—Imprisonment for "crime"—Conviction by court of summary jurisdiction—Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), Schedule II., Part I., r. 14—Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 20).—The plaintiff, who was a member of a school board, was punished by imprisonment under the Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887, for "taking part in a criminal conspiracy to interfere with the administration of the law."

Held, that the offence for which he had been punished was a "crime" within the meaning of rule 14 of Schedule II., Part I., of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, and that, in consequence, he ceased to be a member of the school board, and his office had become vacant.—Conybeare v. London School Board, Q.B.D. 288—[1891] 1 Q. B. 118; 60 L. J. Q. B. 44; 63 L. T. 651.

SCOTCH ARRESTMENT.—See CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1.

SCOTCH LAW:—

1. Arbitration — Reduction of decree arbitral—Jurisdiction of arbitrator—Scotch Act of Regulation, 1695, s. 25—Constructive corruption of arbitrator.—The Act of Regulation of 1695, which provides that "for the cutting off of groundless processes in time coming the lords of session sustain no reduction of any decreet arbitral pronounced on a prescribed submission upon any cause or reason whatsoever unless that of corruption, bribery, or falsehood to be alleged against the judges arbitrators" was intended to put an end to the practice which had previously obtained of reviewing awards upon the merits, but not to prevent the courts from setting aside an award where the arbitrator has exceeded his jurisdiction, or has disregarded any of the expressed conditions of the submission, or the conditions implied by law, or has been guilty of misconduct in the course of the reference or in the making of the award.

There is nothing to warrant the conclusion that the word "corruption" in the above Act of Regulations should receive any other than its ordinary construction, and it cannot be taken to include irregular conduct on the part of the arbitrator with no suggestion of any corrupt motive.

The appellants contracted with the respondents, a railway company, to construct two sections of a railway, the second section to be ready on the 30th of September, 1884, "or on or before such respective days thereafter as might be respectively fixed by the arbiter after named," the appellants to be liable in all damages occasioned by their failing to complete the works, and as compensation for loss of profits, should the sections not be in a state to be open for traffic by the times stipulated, the appellants to be bound to pay the respondents £20 as the liquidated and agreed on compensation for every day which the sections should remain unfinished. The contract contained a clause referring to an arbitrator "all disputes and differences which should arise between the parties in reference to the contract or in regard to the construction of it, or of the specifications, conditions, and schedules." The specifications and conditions for the construction of the second section contained a clause to the effect that a specified portion of the embankment of the line should not be formed until the contractor for the bridge over the River Spey had completed the works in connection with the erection of the east abutment of the bridge, &c. The line was not completed till the 1st of May, 1886.

On application to the arbitrator after the time specified for the completion of the works as to the settlement of their accounts under the contracts, he found the appellants entitled to an extension of six months as regarded the completion of the second part of the works, but that they were liable in penalties for each day's delay from the 30th of March, 1885, to the 1st of May, 1886. It appeared that the appellants did not obtain access to the ground on which the embankment was to be formed till February, 1886.

Held, affirming the decision of the Court of Session (16 Court Sess. Cas., 4th series (Rettie), 843), that the award was good on the face of it, and there was no evidence that the arbitrator had awarded damages in respect of delay caused by the bridge not being completed.

Opinion expressed in Alexander v. Bridge of Allan Water Co. as to "constructive" corruption (7 Court Sess. Cas., 3rd series (Macph.), at p. 498), disapproved.—Adams v. Great North of Scotland Railway Co., H.L. (SC.)—[1891] A. C. 31.

2. Arrestment ad fundandam jurisdictionem—Judgment for costs—Solicitor's lien—Act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 28.—The appellant, a domiciled Englishman, being defendant in an action in the Queen's Bench Division, obtained, on the 25th of April, 1887, judgment for costs against W., the plaintiff, who was a domiciled Scotchman. On the 26th of May the respondent executed in Scotland an arrestment ad fundandam jurisdictionem against W. of the amount due under the judgment, and his summons was served on the appellant on the following day.

On the 13th of June the appellant's solicitors in the action in the Queen's Bench Division obtained a charging order, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 28, upon the costs recovered by him in the action.

Held, affirming the decision of the Court of Session (16 Court Sess. Cas., 4th series (Rettie), 927), Lord Morris dissenting, that, even assuming that the charging order was retrospective in its operation, the arrestment was effectual for the purpose of founding jurisdiction, as such arrestment could in no way affect the operation of the charging order.—North v. Stewart, H.L. (SC.)—15 App. Cas. 452; 63 L. T. 718.

3. Bankruptcy—Sequestration—Oath of creditor—Verity of—Appeals in formâ pauperis—Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 79), ss. 9, 15, 22.—Decision of the Court of Session affirmed. Censure upon bringing an appeal to the House of Lords in formâ pauperis for which there was not the slightest shadow of foundation.—Blair v. North British and Mercantile Insurance Co., H.L. (SC.)—15 App. Cas. 495.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION.—See COMPANY, 45.

SEAMAN.—See PROBATE, 28.

SEDUCTION:—

Service — Parent — Animus revertendi. — A girl under age was seduced by her master while in his service, and afterwards, having quitted his service, gave birth to a child in her father's house.

Held, that the father could not maintain an action for seduction, though the girl intended to return home at the termination of her service.—Gladney v. Murphy, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—26 L. R. Ir. 651.

SEPARATE PROPERTY of WIFE.—See cases under MARRIED WOMAN.

SEQUESTRATION.—See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW, 3.

SETTLED LAND ACTS:—

1. Absolute trust for sale vested in trustees—Application by tenant for life for leave to exercise power of sale—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 3, 63—Settled Land Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 18), ss. 6 (1), 7.—A testator directed that, if his residuary personal estate should be insufficient for payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies, they should be paid out of the proceeds of the sale of his residuary real estate, and he devised his residuary real estate to trustees upon trust for sale and investment, and to hold the trust funds in trust for two ladies during their joint lives, and for the survivor during her life, with remainder for their children, and if neither should have a child who attained a vested interest the testator gave the property to the trustees absolutely. Neither of the two ladies had married. The residuary personalty proved insufficient for the payment of legacies as well as debts. In 1887 the trustees commenced an action for the administration of the testator's estate in the Lancaster Palatine Court, and, under an order made in that action, money was raised by mortgage of the residuary real estate for payment of the legacies, and it was certified to be for the benefit of all parties interested that the sale should be postponed. All charges prior to the interest of the two ladies were paid off.

Held, on the application of the two ladies, that they should have leave, under section 7 of the Settled Land Act, 1884, to sell the real estate remaining unsold.—In re Harding's Settled Estate, CH.D. NOR., J. 118—[1891] 1 Ch. 60; 60 L. J. Ch. 277; 63 L. T. 539.

2. "Capital money" — "Improvements" — Land settled by deed—Will bequeathing money to be invested in lands to be settled to same uses—One settlement for purposes of Act—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2 (1), 33; 25 (xix.) (xx.).—By deed of settlement made in 1872 certain lands stood limited upon trusts for persons by way of succession, and the settlement gave the trustees power to sell. Other lands were subsequently devised by will to the trustees for the time being of the settlement of 1872 upon the same trusts as were declared in the settlement of 1872 concerning the lands therein comprised; and by the same will the testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate to his three executors (one of whom was also a trustee of the settlement of 1872) upon trust to convert and invest in the purchase of lands to be settled upon the trusts in the will declared concerning the lands therein devised. Part of the testator's residuary personal estate now consisted of a large sum of money remaining as yet uninvested in the hands of the executors.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (reversing North, J.), that, having regard to sections 2 (1) and 33 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and to the scope and purport of that Act, this money was "capital money" arising under the Act for the purposes both of the settlement of 1872 and of the will, or of either of them—the two constituting really one settlement for the purposes of the Act; and, consequently, that, as such "capital money," it might be applied in effecting improvements on the lands comprised in the settlement of 1872.

In re Mackenzie's Trusts, 31 W. R. 948, 23 Ch. D. 750, and In re Tennant, 37 W. R. 542, 40 Ch. D. 594, approved.

Held, by North, J., that, in the case of settled land consisting of a mining property, the erection of a new pumping engine and of new pumps for the purpose of carrying out an effective system of drainage were "improvements" authorized under section 25, sub-sections (xix.), (xx.), of the Settled Land Act, 1882.—In re Mundy's Settled Estates, C.A. 209—[1891] 1 Ch. 399; 60 L. J. Ch. 273; 64 L. T. 29.

3. Costs—Sale by tenant for life—Property not sold—Costs of attempted sale—Capital money—Charge on settled land—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 3, 4, 21 (x.) 46 (sub-section 6), 47, 55 (sub-section 3).—The costs, charges, and expenses incurred by a tenant for life of settled land in an unsuccessful attempt to sell the property may be paid out of capital moneys arising under the Settled Land Acts.

In re Llewellin, Llewellin v. Williams, 36 W. R. 347, 37 Ch. D. 317, considered and followed.

When there are no capital moneys out of which such costs, charges, and expenses can be paid, the court has jurisdiction, upon an application by the tenant for life for directions as to the payment of such costs, charges, and expenses, to order that the same be raised by means of a charge on the settled property.—In re Smith's Settled Estates, CH.D. KEK., J. 590—[1891] 3 Ch. 65; 60 L. J. Ch. 613; 64 L. T. 821.

4. Heirlooms—Sale by tenant for life—Discretion of court to allow sale—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 37, 53.—In exercising the power of sale of heirlooms conferred upon a tenant for life of settled estate by section 37 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the tenant for life is, by force of section 53, in the position of a trustee with a discretionary power to sell, and must have regard not to his own interests alone, but to the interest of all persons entitled under the settlement, the interest of those more remotely entitled being of less weight than the interest of those nearer to the succession.

The court, in giving its sanction to any such proposed sale, must in the exercise of its judicial discretion be satisfied that, under the circumstances of each particular case, the sale is reasonable and proper, having regard to the interests of all parties entitled.—In re the Earl of Radnor's Will Trusts, C.A.—45 Ch. D. 402; 59 L. J. Ch. 782.

5. Tenant for life — Owner of settled annuity charged on land—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2, 15, 58—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 10.—R. devised the mansion house and demesne of B. and other lands to F. (his wife) for life with remainder as she should by will appoint. F. entered into possession, and devised the estate to trustees, and created a number of perpetual rent-charges upon the lands, some of which were strictly settled and some were devised to individuals in fee, and subject thereto she devised the estate in fee. On the death of F. an application was made under the Settled Land Acts for the sanction of the court to a contract for the sale of the mansion house and demesne.

Held, (1) that the estate was "settled land" under the will of R., but there was no one under the will of F. who had the powers of a tenant for life within section 58 of the Settled Land Act, 1882; (2) that though the sale of each settled rent-charge might be carried out under the Settled Land Acts, the annuitants had no power to sell the mansion house and demesne or any part of the land.

The fact that part of an estate is settled land within the Acts does not render the entirety so.

Dictum of Malins, V.C., in In re Shepheard's Settled Estate, L. R. 8 Eq. 571, questioned.—In re Bective Estate, M.R. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 364.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 15; WILL, 2.

SETTLEMENT:—

1. Construction—Limitation—Estate tail or in fee—Portions.—By a marriage settlement lands were limited to the husband and wife successively for life, remainder to the first son of the marriage and the heirs of such first son, remainder to the second and other sons of the marriage and their heirs respectively, with remainder to the issue female of the marriage and their heirs as tenants in common, "subject, in case there should be a son and a younger child or younger children" of the marriage, to a charge of £1,000 for such younger child or younger children. There were issue of the marriage one son, who died after his father, but in the lifetime of his mother, and three daughters.

Held, (1) following Doe v. Smeddle, 2 B. & A. 126, that the son took an estate tail, and the daughters estates as tenants in common in fee; (2) that, the daughters having succeeded to the estates in fee, the portions could not be raised.—In re Smith's Estate, L.J. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 121.

2. Forfeiture—Life interest—Proviso for cesser on alienation—Agreement to settle—Settlement pursuant thereto.—By an agreement for a settlement made in contemplation of marriage, C. agreed that, after the marriage should have been solemnized, a settlement should be executed, whereby any moneys and property which he should receive and be entitled to under the will of his mother, should be settled in trust for his wife for life, then for himself for life, then for the children of the marriage. The marriage took place, and a settlement was subsequently executed pursuant to the agreement. The mother, having under her father's will a power to appoint a sum of money among her children, appointed by will a part thereof, to be held upon trust for C. for his life, subject to a proviso for the cesser of his life interest if he should at any time assign, charge, or otherwise dispose of it, or attempt so to do.

Held, that the agreement and settlement did not apply to the life interest of C., which he was incapable of assigning, and that the forfeiture intended to be avoided had not taken place.—In re Crawshay, Walker v. Crawshay, CH.D. NOR., J. 682—60 L. J. Ch. 583; 65 L. T. 72.

3. Marriage articles—Claim by husband to wife's property included in articles—Husband's right by survivorship—Non-performance of contract by husband—Assignee in bankruptcy of husband—Contract between adult and infant.—The assignee in bankruptcy of H. W., the husband of J. W., deceased, obtained a grant of letters of administration to J. W., and as such assignee and administrator claimed to be entitled to H. W.'s marital right to a share of certain trust funds in which J. W. had an interest, and to which, but for his bankruptcy, H. W. would have been entitled, having survived J. W.

H. W. by marriage articles contracted to settle his property specified therein upon certain trusts, and by the same articles J. W., then a minor, contracted to settle (in certain events which happened) her interest in the said trust funds for H. W. absolutely. H. W. failed to perform his part of the articles, and no settlement was ever executed in pursuance thereof.

Held, that neither H. W. nor his assignee was entitled to receive any benefit out of the property of J. W., the subject-matter of the articles, unless and until H. W. performed the obligation imposed upon him by his contract.

Marriage articles executed by an adult and an infant, there being no settlement under the Infants' Settlement Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 43), nor any afterwards executed in pursuance of the articles, though voidable by the infant on attaining twenty-one, are binding on the adult.—In re Smith's Trusts, V.C. Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 439.

4. Marriage settlement—Limitation in favour of volunteers—Subsequent conveyance by settlor.—A limitation in a marriage settlement in favour of the settlor's illegitimate child and his issue, not being within the marriage consideration, may be defeated by a subsequent conveyance by the settlor to a purchaser for value, unless such result would involve the defeat of other limitations within the marriage consideration. Special agreement between the parties thereto in favour of the limitation, acceptance by one of the parties of different interests in the settled property from those which the law would have given, omission to provide therein for all or some of the issue of the marriage, are insufficient to support such limitation against a purchaser for value.

Mackie v. Herbertson, 9 App. Cas. 303, approved.

Clarke v. Wright, 6 H. & N. 849, dissented from.

Newstead v. Searles, 1 Atk. 264, and Clayton v. Lord Wilton, 6 M. & S. 67, explained.—De Mestre v. West, P.C.—[1891] A. C. 264; 64 L. T. 375.

5. Policy of life insurance—Inability of settlor to pay premiums—Power of court to sanction surrender.—Where a policy of insurance has been settled upon marriage, and the settlor (the husband) is unable to perform his covenant to keep up the policy, the court can authorize the trustees to sell or surrender the policy, and obtain a fully paid-up policy in lieu thereof, even though there are funds out of which the premiums may be and have been paid by the trustees, provided it is satisfied that the sale or surrender would be for the benefit of the wife and children of the marriage.—Steen v. Peebles, In re Steen's Trusts, M.R. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 544.

6. Voluntary settlement—Assignment to trustees—Debts secured by bills of sale—Debts got in during lifetime of settlor—Liability of settlor's estate.—P. executed a voluntary settlement in favour of his wife and other relatives, by which he assigned to two trustees certain property, including four debts secured by registered bills of sale, for which he gave them power to sue, upon trust to convert the trust property into money, and execute all necessary assurances for this purpose. P. died intestate, having in his lifetime got in the four debts in question.

Held (affirming the decision of the court below), that the debts were completely assigned by the voluntary settlement, and the estate of the settlor was liable to make good to the trustees the amount of the debts got in by the settlor.—In re Patrick, Bills v. Tatham, C.A. 113—[1891] 1 Ch. 82; 60 L. J. Ch. 111; 63 L. T. 752.

See also BILL OF SALE, 9; DIVORCE, 21—26; INFANT, 4—6; LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 1; POWER OF APPOINTMENT; REVENUE, 11.

SHERIFF:—

Fees—Preparing for sale—Withdrawal of execution—Percentage—Ship—Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 55), s. 20—Order of the 31*st of August*, 1888—Table of Fees, paragraph 7.—By paragraph 7 of the Table of Fees annexed to the Order of the 31st of August, 1888, made under the Sheriffs Act, 1887, s. 20, the sheriff's fee "for the inventory and valuation, cataloguing, lotting, and preparing for sale when no sale takes place by reason of the execution being withdrawn, satisfied, or stopped" is fixed at "two and a half per cent. on the value of the goods."

A sheriff's officer seized a ship under a fi. fa., valued and prepared it for sale in one lot, but made no inventory or catalogue in connection with it.

Held, that paragraph 7 did not apply to such a subject-matter as a ship, and that the sheriff was not entitled to the two and a half per cent.—Cohen v. De Las Rivas, Q.B.D. 539—64 L. T. 661.

SHIP:—

BILL OF LADING—

1. Chartered ship—Liability of owner—Principal and agent—Master—Charterer's shipping agent ashore.—The defendant, being the owner of a ship and registered as managing owner, chartered her for a period of four months to G. It was provided by the charter-party that the captain, officers, and crew (with the exception of the chief engineer), should be appointed and paid by the charterer, and they were in fact so appointed and paid. The charter-party reserved to the owner sufficient space for ship's officers, crew, tackle, and stores; and it was also thereby provided that the captain should be under the orders of the charterer, and that the charterer should indemnify the owner from all liability arising from the captain signing bills of lading. The plaintiffs shipped on board her certain bales of cotton under bills of lading some of which were signed by the captain and the rest by the firm of R. K. & Co., who acted as the charterer's agents at the port of shipment. Neither the captain nor R. K. & Co. had any authority to sign bills of lading on behalf of the defendant. This fact was, however, unknown to the plaintiffs, who had no knowledge that the ship was under charter, but shipped the cotton under the belief that the bills of lading were signed on behalf of and with the authority of the owner. At the time the bills of lading were signed the defendant knew who the captain was, also who the charterer's shipping agents were, but he had no knowledge of the fact or circumstances of the shipment. The cotton having, during the currency of the charter, been lost at sea (as was alleged) by perils not excepted by the bill of lading, the plaintiffs sued the defendant for the loss.

Held, by Charles, J., that the plaintiffs, in the absence of notice to the contrary, were entitled to assume that the persons signing the bills of lading had authority from the owner to sign them on his behalf, and that the defendant was consequently, under the circumstances, responsible for the safe carriage of the goods; and that he was so as well in respect of the goods specified in the bills of lading signed by R. K. & Co. as in respect of those specified in the bill of lading signed by the captain.—Banmvoll Manufactur Von Scheibler v. Gilchrest and Furness, Q.B.D.—[1891] 2 Q. B. 310; 60 L. J. Q. B. 605; 65 L. T. 87.

2. Deviation—"Necessity"—Liability of shipowner.—The "necessity" which will justify a ship in deviating from the proper course of her voyage exists where the deviation is reasonably necessary, and in considering whether it is so danger, distance, accommodation, expense, and every other material circumstance must be taken in account; and if a competent master who is obliged to put back for repairs chooses one port in preference to a nearer one in bona fide exercise of his judgment for the benefit of both the shipowner and the owner of the cargo, the court or a jury ought not on light grounds to come to the conclusion that the deviation was unauthorized.

Goods were shipped by the plaintiffs at Swansea in the defendant's vessel for delivery at New York under a bill of lading which contained the usual exception from liability for collision. The vessel after leaving Swansea encountered bad weather, was injured, and the goods damaged by water, and it became necessary to put back to a port of refuge. The master cast anchor at Queenstown and telegraphed for directions to the defendants, who were shipbuilders at Bristol, but did not communicate with the plaintiffs. The defendants directed him to bring the ship back to Bristol. On her way to Bristol she was run into in the Avon by another vessel and sunk. At the trial of an action for non-delivery of the goods, on the ground that the vessel deviated from her course by proceeding to Bristol, and that the loss occurred after such deviation, it appeared that the ship was a general ship, and that there were other shippers of goods besides the plaintiffs, and, although Bristol was sixty miles further than Swansea from Queenstown, the vessel could have been repaired at less expense and with more despatch at the defendant's shipyards there than at Swansea, and that the defendants had other vessels into which they could have transhipped the goods. It did not however appear that Bristol was a more convenient place than Swansea for improving the condition of the damaged cargo. The judge left to the jury the question whether the master exercised the discretion of a reasonable man in the interests of the ship and cargo in going to Bristol instead of remaining at Queenstown or going to Swansea. The jury found that there was no deviation.

Held, first, that there was no misdirection by the judge in not telling the jury that the plaintiffs, as owners of the cargo, ought to have been communicated with at Queenstown, and consulted as to what ought to be done; secondly, that the judge was not bound to direct the jury that, upon the facts as proved, there was no evidence of necessity for the ship to return to Bristol; thirdly, that the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict on the ground that the master had acted for the best, having regard to the interests of the owners of the goods as well as of the shipowners.—Phelps, James, & Co. v. Hill, C.A.—[1891] 1 Q. B. 605; 60 L. J. Q. B. 382; 64 L. T. 610.

3. Exceptions—Damage to cargo.—A cargo of grain, shipped under a bill of lading, was damaged on the voyage by sea water entering the ship's hold through a rivet hole in one of the stanchions supporting the main rail, the rivet having "started" owing to the heavy seas encountered on the voyage. After discovering the leakage the master did not take proper means to prevent its continuance. The bill of lading contained an exception of "perils of the sea, . . . collisions, stranding, and other accidents of navigation excepted, even when occasioned by the negligence, default, or error in judgment of the pilot, master, mariners, or other servants of the shipowners."

Held, that the shipowner was protected by the exceptions from liability for the damage to the cargo.—The Cressington, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 152; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 25; 64 L. T. 329.

4. Exceptions—"All other conditions as per charter"—Charter-party containing further excepted peril—Exception of loss occasioned by negligence.—By a bill of lading goods were to be delivered, "the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation of whatever nature and kind soever excepted, unto order or assigns, they paying freight for the said coals, and all other conditions as per charter, with average accustomed." The charter-party contained a clause specifying the same exceptions as the bill of lading, with the following addition:—"Negligence clause as per Baltic Bill of Lading, 1885." This negligence clause excepted strandings and collisions, and all losses and damages caused thereby, even when occasioned by the negligence, default, or error in judgment of the pilot, master, mariners, or other servants of the shipowners. The vessel stranded in consequence of the negligence of the master or crew, and the goods were lost. In an action by the indorsees of the bill of lading against the shipowner for the loss of the goods,

Held (affirming the judgment of Huddleston, B.), that the words in the bill of lading, "all other conditions as per charter," incorporated only such conditions as were to be performed by the receiver of the goods, and did not incorporate the negligence clause; and that the shipowner was therefore liable.

Russell v. Niemann, 17 C. B. N. S. 163, 12 W. R. C. L. Dig. 121, approved.—Serraino v. Campbell, C.A. 356—[1891] 1 Q. B. 283; 60 L. J. Q. B. 303; 64 L. T. 615.

5. Exceptions—"Thieves of whatever kind, whether on board or not, or by land or sea"—Thefts by stevedores employed by shipowner.—Goods were shipped under a bill of lading which provided that the shipowner should not be liable for any loss or damage caused by (inter alia) "thieves of whatever kind, whether on board or not, or by land or sea." The goods were stolen during the stowage by some of the stevedore's men, who were paid by and in the service of the shipowner.

Held, that the words "thieves of whatever kind" did not relieve the shipowner from liability for thefts committed by persons in his service.—Steinman & Co. v. Angier Line, C.A. 392—[1891] 1 Q. B. 619; 60 L. J. Q. B. 425; 64 L. T. 613.

CHARTER-PARTY—

6. Advanced freight—"One-third freight, if required, to be advanced, less three per cent. for interest and insurance"—Loss of vessel before requirement of advanced freight.—Where a charter-party contained the clause, "One-third freight, if required, to be advanced, less three per cent. for interest and insurance," and the demand for payment of the advanced freight was not made until after the vessel and cargo had been totally lost,

Held, that the demand had been made too late, and that the charterers were not liable for the advanced freight.

Decision of Charles, J. (39 W. R. 318, [1891] 1 Q. B. 42), reversed.—Smith, Hill, & Co. v. Pyman, Bell, & Co., C.A. 466—[1891] 1 Q. B. 742; 60 L. J. Q. B. 621; 64 L. T. 436.

7. Cesser clause, construction of—Demurrage—Detention at port of loading.—In an action brought by shipowners against charterers for damages for detention at the port of loading, the defendants relied on the cesser and lien clauses as freeing them from responsiblity.

Held, that the word "demurrage" in the lien clause did not cover undue detention at the port of loading, and, therefore, that the charterers were not exempted from liability.

Where it is possible, the cesser and lien clauses should be construed as co-extensive.—Clink v. Radford & Co., C.A. 355—[1891] 1 Q. B. 625; 60 L. J. Q. B. 388; 64 L. T. 491.

8. Cesser clause, construction of—Bill of lading—Demurrage — Delay caused by strikes — Liability of consignee of cargo.—A charter-party provided that a vessel therein named should proceed to a port in the Sea of Azoff, and having there loaded a cargo of wheat should proceed to a port in the United Kingdom to discharge; that the charterers' liability should cease when the cargo was shipped, the owner or his agent having an absolute lien on the cargo for freight, dead freight, demurrage, and lighterage at the port of discharge; that the 1885 bill of lading should be used under the charter, and its conditions form part thereof.

The master signed bills of lading in the form prescribed by the charter, but they contained no reference to the charter nor any clause which would relieve the consignees of the cargo from loss to the ship occasioned by strikes; but it was provided that the goods were to be applied for within twenty-four hours of the ship's arrival, otherwise the master was to be at liberty to put into lighters and land the same at the risk and expense of the owners.

The vessel arrived in London on August 14, and the discharge of the cargo proceeded from the 15th to the 20th of August, when the dock labourers employed by the consignee of the cargo to discharge the vessel struck. In consequence of the strike the discharge of the vessel was not completed until the 18th of September.

Held, that, under the clause of the charter above set out, the liability of the charterers ceased upon the arrival of the vessel at the port of discharge, but that the consignees of the cargo were liable for the loss occasioned by the detention of the vessel, as they had not discharged the vessel within a reasonable time.—Hick v. Rodocanachi, Sons, & Co., Q.B.D.—64 L. T. 138.

9. Demurrage—Bill of lading—Fixed number of lay days—Strike causing delay—Liability of charterer.—A cargo of grain in bulk was shipped under a bill of lading which incorporated the conditions of a charter-party. By the charter-party a fixed number of days were allowed for unloading the cargo, demurrage to be payable over and above the lay days. Neither the bill of lading nor the charter-party contained any reference to strikes. According to the custom of the port where the ship was ordered to discharge in the case of grain cargoes in bulk, the unloading was effected by the shipowner and consignee jointly. The shipowner and the consignee each contracted with a separate firm of master stevedores to do their respective parts of the work. During the lay days the dock labourers employed by the master stevedores struck work and remained out on strike until after the expiration of the lay days, during which time the unloading ceased, and no work could be done. In a claim by the shipowner for demurrage, Held (affirming the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division, 39 W. R. 13, 25 Q. B. D. 320), that, as the delay in unloading was not caused by the default of the shipowner, or of those for whom he was responsible, demurrage was payable in respect of the time occupied in unloading beyond the fixed number of lay days.—Budgett & Co. v. Binnington & Co., C.A. 131—[1891] 1 Q. B. 35; 60 L. J. Q. B. 1; 63 L. T. 742.

10. Demurrage — Construction of charter-party — "Vessel to load always afloat" — "Lighterage, if any, to complete loading at" specified dock, "to be at merchant's risk and expense."—Stipulations in a charter-party of a vessel chartered to load in a specified dock, that the vessel should load always afloat, and that lighterage, if any, necessary to enable her to complete her loading at the dock in question, was to be at merchant's risk and expense, do not entitle the merchant to recover from the shipowner lighterage paid in respect of cargo which could, in ordinary course, have been loaded from the quay inside the dock whilst the vessel remained afloat, but was in fact loaded outside the dock from lighters merely because the vessel, if fully loaded inside the dock, must have waited a week before she would have had sufficient water to have passed over the dock sill.—The Curfew, P.D. & A.D. 367—[1891] P. 131; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 53; 64 L. T. 330.

11. Demurrage—Persons signing agreement—Liability as principals—"Ready to receive cargo"—Meaning of—Claim for loss of freight and for demurrage.—In an action for damages for loss of freight and for demurrage, it was proved that the defendants, who carried on business at O., made a contract with the agent of the plaintiff in L., in the form of a letter signed by the defendants and containing these clauses:—"Steamer to load end of November or early December. Charterers having the option of cancelling if she is not ready to receive cargo by the 12th of December next. Steamer to be loaded on usual berth terms, 2 per cent. commission to us." The defendants had made contracts with merchants at O. for loading the vessel, the merchants having the power of cancelling if the vessel was not ready to load on the 12th of December, and the vessel was not to be considered ready to load until moored alongside the quay. The plaintiff had no notice of these contracts. The vessel arrived at O. on the 10th of December, and her stern having been fastened to the breakwater, the captain gave the defendants notice that he was ready to receive cargo, but the merchants refused to take the notice that the vessel was "ready to receive cargo" until she was moored alongside the quay, which could not be done before the 18th of December. Meantime the merchants cancelled their contracts with the defendants, and the vessel was loaded at a lower rate of freight than that specified in the contract.

Held, (1) that the defendants were liable as principals, as they had contracted in their own names without any qualification, and (2), that the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages for the loss of freight, as the vessel was "ready to receive cargo" within the meaning of the contract, although not moored alongside the quay, and that the matter was not affected by an alleged custom at the port of O. that a vessel was not to be considered "ready to receive cargo" until moored alongside the quay; but (3), that the plaintiff was not entitled to damages for demurrage or detention of the vessel after the 12th of December, as the contract came to an end on that date.—Hick v. Tweedy & Co., Q.B.D. —63 L. T. 765.

12. Exceptions—Exception of negligence in the navigation of the ship in the ordinary course of the voyage.—By an exception in a charter-party shipowners were exempted from liability for damage to the cargo resulting from "any act, negligence, or default whatsoever of pilots, master, or crew in the navigation of the ship and in the ordinary course of the voyage." After the arrival of the vessel at the port of discharge the cargo, while still undischarged, was injured in consequence of the negligence of the chief engineer of the ship.

Held, that this was not within the exception, as it had not occurred "in the navigation of the ship," and that the defendants were liable.—The Acromac, C.A. 133—15 P. D. 208; 59 L. J. P. D. & A. 91; 63 L. T. 737.

13. Exceptions — "Neglect or default" of crew during the voyage — Effect on claims for general average contribution of clause exempting shipowner from negligence.—The owners of a ship entered into a charter-party whereby they agreed that the ship should proceed to a specified loading port and there load a cargo, and, being so loaded, should therewith proceed to her port of discharge and there deliver the same, the act of God or any act, neglect, or default whatsoever of the pilot, master, crew, or other servants of the shipowners during the said voyage always excepted. The ship duly arrived in a seaworthy condition at her loading port and commenced taking her cargo on board, but, before the loading was completed, a portion of it already shipped was, whilst the ship was lying at her mooring berth, damaged by water which accumulated in her hold, in consequence of one of her engineers having negligently left open a valve in her engine room. To recover for the damage so occasioned, the cargo owners brought an action for breach of contract against the shipowners, and the shipowners counter-claimed therein for expenses incurred by them in respect of discharging and warehousing the damaged cargo belonging to the plaintiffs and pumping the water out of the ship.

Held, that the damage proceeded for had arisen from the neglect or default of one of the crew during the said voyage within the meaning of the exemption contained in the charter-party, and that, consequently, the plaintiffs' claim must be dismissed.

Held, also, that the defendants were entitled to recover the amounts claimed by them in their counter-claim as general average on the cargo.—The Carron Park, P.D. & A.D. 191—15 P. D. 203; 59 L. J. P. D. & A. 74; 63 L. T. 356.

14. Payment of hire to cease until ship in an efficient state to resume service—Payment during discharge of cargo—Costs.—By charter-party between the appellants and the respondents it was agreed that the respondents should hire the appellants' steamship for the purpose of a voyage or voyages within certain limits at "8s. per gross registered ton per calendar month"—hire to continue until her redelivery to the appellants (unless lost) at a safe port in the United Kingdom or on the Continent, &c. By the charter-party it was stipulated that the appellants should provide and pay for the provisions and wages of the captain and crew, and maintain the ship in a thoroughly efficient state in hull and machinery for the service; and that "in the event of loss of time from deficiency of men or stores, break down of machinery, want of repairs, or damage, whereby the working of the vessel was stopped for more than forty-eight consecutive hours, the payment of hire should cease until she should be again in an efficient state to resume her service." While the vessel was on a voyage to Harburg, under the charter-party, her high pressure engine broke down, and it was found necessary to put back to the Port of Las Palmas. As repairs could not be effected in that port, the appellants and respondents agreed that a tug should be employed to tow the ship to Harburg, and that the expense, £1,100, should be treated as general average on cargo, ship, and freight. As their proportion of this expense the respondents eventually paid £867. The ship left Las Palmas on the 18th of October, 1887, towed by the tug and assisted by her own low pressure engine, and arrived at Harburg on the 31st of October. By the 10th of November the cargo intended for that port was discharged, the ship's steam winches being available. On the same day the repairs to the ship's navigating machinery were completed, and the voyage continued.

Held (affirming the decision of the Court of Session, 16 Court Sess. Cas., 4th series (Rettie), 599) (Lord Bramwell dissenting), that the appellants had no claim for hire for the voyage from Las Palmas to Harburg, the ship not being independently efficient for that purpose.

But held, varying the decision of the Court of Session (Lord Morris dissenting), that the appellants were entitled to payment of hire for the full time actually occupied in discharging the cargo at Harburg, the ship being in an efficient state for that particular employment.—Hogarth v. Miller, Brother, & Co., H.L. (SC.)—[1891] A. C. 48; 60 L. J. P. C. 1; 64 L. T. 205.

COLLISION—

15. Crossing ship—Rules and Bye-laws for the Navigation of the Thames, art. 24.—By article 24 of the Rules and Bye-laws for the Navigation of the River Thames, "Steam vessels crossing from one side of the river towards the other side shall keep out of the way of vessels navigating up and down the river," and by article 25 such other vessels shall keep their course.

Held, that a ship which has not completely accomplished the manœuvre of crossing is still under the obligation of the rule, although her stem may have got as near to the opposite shore as she can safely get, if she is still athwart the stream.

Judgment of the court below affirmed on the facts and evidence.—The River Derwent, H.L. (E.)—64 L. T. 509.

16. Damages — Consequential loss — Demurrage — Practice.—Where, as the result of a collision, a vessel was detained in port, while a substituted vessel, belonging to the same owners, was doing her work at the defendants' expense, claim for demurrage was disallowed.

There must be actual loss, and reasonable proof thereof, to support a claim for indemnity for consequential loss.

The Black Prince, 1 Lush. 568, distinguished.

Where a reference was directed to ascertain the actual expenses incurred for the detained vessel, as distinguished from loss of profits,

Held, that it should, in the circumstances, be made to the Registrar of her Majesty in Ecclesiastical and Marine Appeals.—The City of Peking v. Compagnie des Messageries Maritimes and Others, P.C. 177—15 App. Cas. 438; 59 L. J. P. C. 88; 63 L. T. 722.

17. Fishing smacks—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, arts. 14, 22—Both ships to blame—Costs.—It is the duty of a sailing smack during the day to have more than one hand on deck, and where a collision occurs between her and another smack, the primary cause of which is the wrongful manœuvre of the other smack, she will also be held to blame if it appears that had she had two hands on deck they might have taken means to have obviated the other's wrongful manœuvre.

In a collision case where both ships are to blame, the plaintiff is entitled to his costs if in his statement of claim he admits that he is to blame.—The General Gordon, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 117.

18. Fog—Alteration of helm.—There is no hard and fast rule of practice in the Admiralty Court that where two steamships in a fog are approaching one another so as to involve risk of collision, neither ship ought to alter her helm until the signals of the other give a clear indication of her direction: each case must depend on its own circumstances. and these may afford reasonable ground for believing what the direction must be.

The decision of the Court of Appeal (14 P. D. 172) affirmed. — Owners of The Vindomora v. Owners of The Haswell, H.L. (E.)—[1891] A. C. 1; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 1; 63 L. T. 749.

19. Foreign river—Steam vessels proceeding one up and the other down river—Navigation.—In an action for collision between two vessels under steam in the River Scheldt, it appeared that the vessels were proceeding in opposite directions, the one up and the other down the river, and that the vessel going up the river had the tide against her. The collision took place at a strong bend of the river. It did not appear that any positive rule had been printed and circulated with regard to the navigation of the river; but by the practice of navigation there, it was the duty of a vessel navigating against the tide to wait until a vessel coming in the opposite direction had cleared her at the bend.

Held, upon proof that the vessel navigating against the tide had disregarded this practice, that she must be taken to have been to blame for the collision.—The Talabot, P.D. & A.D.—15 P. D. 194; 63 L. T. 812.

20. Lights — Fairway of navigation — Whistle— Firth of Clyde.—Where a steamship under way at night in the Firth of Clyde stops her way and puts herself across the line of navigation for the purpose of coming to an anchor, she is to blame for not warning vessels coming up behind her of her manœuvres, even though she is carrying a fixed stern light.—The Queen Victoria, C.A.—64 L. T. 520.

21. Lights—Mersey River Rules, art. 4—Vessel carrying misleading light—Infringement by possibility contributing to collision—Merchant Shipping Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), s. 17.—By article 4 of the rules as to lights to be carried by vessels in the River Mersey contained in the schedule to the Order in Council of May 17, 1890, and made in pursuance of section 32 of the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), a vessel, having two or more masts, when at anchor in that river, shall carry two white lights, of the prescribed size and power, one on the forestay, at a height not exceeding twenty feet above the hull, and the other near the stern at double the height of the bow light.

By section 17 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 85), a vessel infringing any of the regulations contained in, or made under, the Merchant Shipping Acts, is, in case of collision, to be deemed in fault, unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that the circumstances of the case made departure from the regulation necessary.

The T., a steamship under way in the Mersey, came into collision with another vessel whilst carrying, in addition to the ordinary coloured side lights, white stern light, and white masthead light, another white light on the mizen truck, alleged to be a custom's signal light.

No regulation or practice to carry such last mentioned light was proved, and it being doubtful on the evidence whether the two white lights of The T. which were first seen—viz., that at the masthead and that at the mizen truck—might not have misled those in charge of the other vessel into thinking that these lights indicated that The T. was a vessel at anchor.

Held, that The T. must be deemed in fault under section 17 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873.—The Talbot, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 184; 64 L. T. 542.

22. Lights—Overtaking ship—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 11—Fixed stern light.—Article 11 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea provides that "a ship which is being overtaken by another shall show from her stern to such last-mentioned ship a white light or a flare-up light." This article is not necessarily infringed where it is proved, in an action of damage, that a vessel required to show a white stern light under its provisions has shown from her stern to a vessel overtaking her a fixed white light.—The Stakesby, P.D. & A.D. 80—15 P. D. 166; 59 L. J. P. D. & A. 72; 63 L. T. 115.

23. Lights—Trawler—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 10 (d)—Mutual collision club—Arbitration.—By article 10 (d) of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, "if a vessel when fishing becomes stationary, in consequence of her gear getting fast to a rock or other obstruction, she shall show the light and make the fog signal for a vessel at anchor."

Held, that the rule is applicable although the weather, when the vessel becomes stationary, is clear.

In an action for collision, it appeared that the plaintiff's vessel and the defendant's vessel were insured in a mutual insurance company, by the rules of which it was provided that, in the event of a collision occurring between two vessels insured in the company, &c., the owners of such vessels should immediately submit a statement of the whole circumstances of the collision, and the directors, after receiving such statement, should have power to arbitrate on the matter, and their decision should be final.

The plaintiff gave notice of the collision to the secretary of the company. The secretary obtained statements as to the collision from the master of the plaintiff's vessel, and from the master of the defendant's vessel. A meeting of directors was held, at which the defendant's master was present, but no one on behalf of the plaintiff, and a resolution was passed that the defendant's vessel had not been in collision with that of the plaintiff.

Held, that there had never been a proper hearing of the case by the directors; that the resolution passed by them was therefore not an arbitration within the meaning of the rule; and that the plaintiff was not estopped by it from bringing an action for damages.

Semble, that the rule must be taken to mean that it should be a condition precedent to an arbitration that both parties had agreed as to the fact of a collision having taken place.—The Warwick, P.D. & A.D.—15 P. D. 189; 63 L. T. 561.

24. Practice—Issue as to contributory fault must be first raised in the lower court.—Where in a case of collision no suggestion has been made in the pleadings and evidence by either party that, in the event of their vessel being found to be in the wrong, there was contributory fault on the part of the other vessel,

Held, that the vessel shown to have been at fault by reason of her failure to keep out of the way could not be allowed to raise the question for the first time in the final court of appeal whether the other vessel was not also in fault from failure to comply with article 18 of the Regulations.

The Tasmania, 15 App. Cas. 223, followed.—Owners of The Pleiades v. Owners of The Jane, P.C.—[1891] A. C. 259; 65 L. T. 169.

25. Practice—Tug and tow both to blame—Form of decree—No contribution amongst tort feasors.—Where, in an action of damage against two vessels and their owners, defendants intervening, the court absolves the plaintiffs' vessel from blame, and finds both the vessels proceeded against to blame for the collision, the proper practice is for the court, except in the case where one or both of the vessels are exonerated from liability on the ground of compulsory pilotage or other defence of the like nature, to pronounce a decree in the action condemning the owners of each vessel and their bail in the damage proceeded for and in costs, and under this decree the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the whole of their damages and costs from the owners of either vessel or their bail, without regard to any question of contribution between the defendants.—The Avon and The Thomas Jolliffe, P.D. & A.D. 176—[1891] P. 7.

26. Steamship and barge—Both to blame—Consequential loss.—Whilst a barge was by night lying astern of a steamship in a dock the latter moved her propeller and cut a hole in the barge. It appeared that there was no one on board the barge at the time of the accident. In a collision action,

Held, that, although the steamer was to blame, the barge was also to blame for not having anyone on board of her, as, had there been, the collision might have been avoided, and in any event the barge might have been beached before she sank, and, therefore, the plaintiffs could only recover half their damages.—The Scotia, P.D. & A.D.—63 L. T. 324.

27. Tug and vessel in tow—Collision with third vessel through negligence of tug—Liability of vessel in tow.—No general rule can be laid down as to the liability of a vessel in tow for a collision between it and a third vessel occasioned by the negligence of those on board the tug.

Whether the relation of master and servant exists between the owners of the vessel in tow and the crew of the tug, so as to make the former liable, depends upon the circumstances of each case.—The Quickstep, P.D. & A.D.—15 P. D. 196; 59 L. J. P. D. & A. 65; 63 L. T. 713.

CO-OWNERS—

28. Accounts—Managing owner.—It is the duty of a managing owner to account to his co-owners for the ship's earnings and disbursements within a reasonable time, but what is a reasonable time must depend upon the circumstances of each case. There is no fixed rule that a ship's accounts are to be ready before she sails on her next voyage.—The Mount Vernon, P.D. & A.D.—64 L. T. 148.

29. Managing owner—Principal and agent—Secret profits—Brokerage—Commission.—It is the duty of a managing owner of a ship to procure charters and freights, and therefore, in the absence of any special bargain, a managing owner who is also a shipbroker is not entitled to make a profit for himself by commission or brokerage for procuring charters and freights.—Williamson v. Hine Brothers, CH.D. KEK., J. 239—[1891] 1 Ch. 390; 60 L. J. Ch. 123; 63 L. T. 682.

MASTER—

30. Thames navigation—Steamboat towing barges into dock—"Navigating"—Watermen's and Lightermen's Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. cxxxiii.) ss. 8, 10—Bye-law 59.—The towing of barges into a dock by a steamboat is not "navigating a steamboat on the river" so as to render the master of the steamboat liable to a penalty under bye-law 59 made under the Watermen's and Lightermen's Amendment Act, 1859, which prohibits "a person in charge of and navigating any steamboat on the River Thames" within certain limits from towing at the same time more than six barges exceeding ten tons each.—Rolles v. Newell, Q.B.D. 96—25 Q. B. D. 335; 59 L. J. Q. B. 423; 63 L. T. 384.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACTS—

31. Limitation of liability—Deductions—Calculation of amount of plaintiff's liability in the case of steamships measured for purpose of registry since December 31, 1889—Merchant Shipping (Tonnage) Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 43), s. 3.—In a case where the owners of a British steamship, built since March, 1889, and measured for the purposes of registry since December 31 in that year, sought to limit their liability under the Merchant Shipping Acts for the consequences of improper navigation, the court, it appearing on the certificate of registry that the gross tonnage of the steamship was stated to be 1,922·82 tons, refused, no other evidence as to the gross tonnage of the steamship having been given, to allow the plaintiffs, in calculating the amount of the tonnage of their ship for the purpose of the suit, to deduct from such 1,922·82 tons any of the deductions ordered to be made from the measurement of tonnage by the 3rd section of the Merchant Shipping (Tonnage) Act, 1889, or any other deductions other than certain deductions which the defendants admitted ought to be made from such amount of 1,922·82 tons.—The Umbilo, P.D. & A.D. 336—[1891] P. 118; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 7; 64 L. T. 328.

32. Mortgage of fishing boat—"Ship and appurtenances"—Articles included in mortgage—Articles put on board subsequently to mortgage—Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), ss. 66, 70, 469, 484.—Under the word "ship" in the mortgage of "a ship with its appurtenances," in the statutory form under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), all articles and materials, whether stored or in use, necessary for the accomplishment of its voyage, and on board at the date of the mortgage, will pass to the mortgagee; and all articles and materials substituted for such articles and materials subsequently to the date of the mortgage will also pass.

The construction of the word "ship" in section 1 of 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, as laid down in Gale v. Laurie, 5 B. & C. 156, is applicable to the same word in the present statutory form of mortgage.—Coltman v. Chamberlain, Q.B.D. 12—25 Q. B. D. 328; 59 L. J. Q. B. 563.

33. Necessaries—Broker's commission—Charter-party—3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, s. 6.—Shipbroker's commission for effecting a charter for a ship (then upon a voyage) for a future voyage does not come within the meaning of the term "necessaries," so as to entitle the shipbrokers to proceed in an action in rem.—The Marianne, P.D. & A.D.—[1891] P. 180; 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 39; 64 L. T. 539.

PILOT—

34. Compulsory pilotage—Dues—Bye-laws—Port of Chester Act (16 Geo. 3, c. lxi.)—Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 and 1889 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104; 52 & 53 Vict. c. 68).—A public local Act, in force before the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, imposed a penalty on unlicensed persons conducting a ship into the port of Chester.

Held, that pilotage was compulsory.

Pilotage rates, fixed by bye-laws made under statutory authority to be paid to pilots, may be sued for and recovered by a pilot.

Section 1 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1889, is retrospective, which declares that "ship" in Part V. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, shall include a foreign ship.—Jones v. Bennett, Q.B.D.—63 L. T. 705.

35. Compulsory pilotage—Llanelly Pilotage District—Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), ss. 353, 388—6 & 7 Vict. c. lxxxviii., s. 158).—Subject to the provisions in the Merchant Shipping Acts exempting from compulsory pilotage certain vessels there referred to, pilotage is compulsory within the limits of the Llanelly Pilotage District for all vessels not exempted from compulsory pilotage by the terms of the pilotage bye-laws made by the Burry Navigation and Llanelly Harbour Commissioners.—The Ruby, C.A. 42—15 P. D. 164; 59 L. J. P. D. & A. 68; 63 L. T. 735.

SALVAGE—

36. Amount—Exorbitant agreement — Costs.—The plaintiffs, in an action of salvage brought to recover salvage remuneration for salvage services rendered in the Atlantic Ocean in towing for 350 miles to a port of safety a steamship disabled in her machinery and valued, with her cargo and freight, at above £23,000, but less than £25,000, pleaded an agreement made between the masters of the plaintiffs' and defendants' vessel before the commencement of the services, whereby it had been agreed that the master of the plaintiffs' vessel would make the attempt to tow the disabled vessel to the port where she was placed in safety for the sum of £5,000, and that, in case of failing in the attempt, the plaintiff's vessel should be paid for the service rendered, and claimed (1) the said agreed sum of £5,000 as and for salvage for the services rendered by them, and (2) alternatively, such an amount of salvage as to the court should seem right. At the hearing of the action the court, considering that £5,000 was an exorbitant sum for the salvage services rendered, awarded to the salvors £3,000 salvage remuneration, with costs, and apportioned the amount so awarded as follows:—£2,500 to the owners of the salving vessel, £150 to her master, and £350 to her officers and crew according to their rating.—The Mark Lane, P.D. & A.D. 47—15 P.D. 135; 63 L. T. 468.

37. Amount — Derelict boiler — Award—Costs.—Where five men having found a derelict marine boiler floating in the sea, pulled it ashore and hauled it beyond high water, the court, in a default salvage action, out of £58, the net proceeds of the said boiler, awarded £50 and costs.—The Boiler ex Elephant, P.D. & A.D.—64 L. T. 543.

38. Towage contract—Conversion of towage into salvage—Owners pro hac vice—Personal liability for salvage.—Barge-owners built at Chepstow a number of barges for her Majesty's service under a contract, whereby the full price of the barges was not to be paid until after delivery at Portland, and despatched them on their voyage to that port in charge of two men on board each barge and in tow of a steam tug. During the voyage four of the barges broke adrift from the steam tug, and her master and crew rendered salvage services to all the barges beyond what could reasonably be supposed to have been included in the towage contract. After some difficulty two of the barges were towed by the steam tug to Portland, and there delivered up to the proper Admiralty officials; the remaining barges being placed in safety by the exertions of other salvors. Subsequently the owners, master, and crew of the steam tug brought an action of salvage against the three barges so salved by other salvors, and by the writ in such action claimed to recover against the barge builders for salvage services rendered to the barges delivered up at Portland. The writ in the action was never served.

but the solicitors for the barge builders undertook to appear thereto, and, in pursuance of such undertaking, the barge builders appeared absolutely as defendants in the suit.

Held, that the defendants were liable to pay salvage remuneration, both in respect of the salvage rendered to the two barges delivered up at Portland, and also in respect of the services rendered by the plaintiffs to the remaining three barges.

Observations as to the right of instituting actions of salvage in personam.—The Steel Barges, P.D. & A.D. 127—15 P. D. 142; 59 L. J. P. D. & A. 77.

See also BANKRUPTCY, 1; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 4; NEGLIGENCE, 2, 9; SHERIFF; THAMES CONSERVANCY.

SHIPBROKER.—See SHIP, 29, 33.

SOLICITOR:—

1. Charging order — Property recovered or preserved — Money paid into court by a defendant — Counter-claim—Set-off—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28—Ord. 22—Ord. 19, r. 3.—The defendants in an action paid a sum of money into court, and put in a defence denying liability and a counter-claim arising out of the same matters as the claim. The plaintiff's solicitor obtained a charging order upon the fund in court. The action proceeded, and, in the result, judgment went for the plaintiff on the claim, and for the defendants on the counter-claim.

Held, that the sum recovered on the counter-claim must be set off against the sum recovered on the claim, and the solicitor's charging order limited to the balance due to the plaintiff, that being the only sum "recovered or preserved" within the 28th section of the Solicitors Act, 1860.—Westacott v. Bevan, Q.B.D. 363—[1891] 1 Q. B. 774; 60 L. J. Q. B. 536.

2. Charging order—Property recovered or preserved—39 & 40 Vict. c. 44, s. 3.—The plaintiff having obtained judgment declaring the validity of two mortgages, and ordering accounts to be taken, and a receiver to be appointed, the plaintiff's solicitor applied for a charging order for his costs upon the plaintiff's interest in the lands and on the amounts found due to the plaintiff.

Held, that the solicitor was entitled to the charging order.—Keenan v. Armstrong, V.C. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 371.

3. Costs—Action of contract begun in High Court and afterwards remitted to county court—Judgment for less than £50—Change of solicitors—Right of solicitor who had acted in High Court to High Court costs against client—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 118.—An action for some £30 for work done was commenced in the High Court, and was afterwards remitted to a county court, where judgment was given for the plaintiff for £30 and costs. Before the order to remit was made the plaintiff changed his solicitor, and the solicitor who had acted for him in the High Court ceased to act for him in the action. The registrar of the county court taxed the costs of the proceedings in the county court on the county court scale, but he refused to tax the costs of the solicitor who had acted for the plaintiff in the High Court on the High Court scale. In an action brought in a county court by this solicitor to recover from his client the costs incurred by him in the High Court on the High Court scale,

Held, that the solicitor was entitled to recover these costs from his client, as such costs did not come within section 118 of the County Courts Act, 1888, not being costs for work done in any county court.—Boydell v. Millar, Q.B.D. 335—60 L. J. Q. B. 251; 64 L. T. 299.

4. Costs—Order for delivery and taxation of bill—Petition of course—District Registrar of Liverpool—Jurisdiction—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), ss. 62-66—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 35, r. 6*a*, sub-rules (1), (2); ord. 62, r. 18.—A registrar of the Liverpool District Registry has no jurisdiction on a petition of course to make an order on a solicitor for delivery and taxation of his bill of costs.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (39 W. R. 333), reversed.—In re Porrett, C.A. 531—[1891] 2 Ch. 433; 60 L. J. Ch. 396; 64 L. T. 194.

5. Costs—Order to tax—Suppression of material facts—Right to obtain second order of course—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 37.—A client is not entitled to obtain a second common order to tax as of course where he has allowed the first to lapse by effluxion of time, nor may he suppress material facts in obtaining the order.—In re Webster, CH.D. NOR., J. 535—[1891] 2 Ch. 102; 60 L. J. Ch. 338; 64 L. T. 250.

6. Costs—Profit costs—Taxation—Solicitor-mortgagee acting in person—Redemption action.—A mortgagee-solicitor who acts for himself in a redemption action is only entitled to costs out of pocket not to profit costs—i.e., remuneration for personal trouble.

An objection to the allowance of such costs need not necessarily be taken at the hearing of the action.

Price v. M'Beth, 12 W. R. 818, not followed.—Stone v. Lickorish & Bellord, CH.D. STI., J. 331—[1891] 2 Ch. 363; 60 L. J. Ch. 289; 64 L. T. 79.

7. Costs—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881—Taxation—Negotiating sale subject to sanction of court—Fees paid to estate agents to obtain evidence as to value in order to procure sanction—"Commission"—Scale fee for negotiating sale by private contract—General Order under Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, Schedule I., Part I., r. 11.—Where real estate is being sold by private contract under the order and direction of the court in an administration action, a solicitor who does everything that a solicitor can do in arranging the sale and the price and terms and conditions thereof, which only further require the sanction of the court to become binding, "arranges the sale," &c., within the meaning of rule 11 of the General Order (under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881), Schedule I., Part I., and is, therefore, not disentitled to the scale fee "for negotiating a sale of property by private contract" under the scale of charges in Schedule I., Part I., aforesaid, by the mere fact that the contract for sale does not become a binding one till sanctioned by the court, provided that it is ultimately so sanctioned and an actual sale is consequently effected.

Fees paid or payable by the client in such a case to valuers (though they may be auctioneers or estate agents), not for assisting to negotiate the sale, but in order to obtain their evidence to satisfy the court that the price offered is a fair and proper one, and thus obtain its necessary sanction, are not "commission paid by the client to an auctioneer or estate or other agent" within the meaning of the said rule, so as to disentitle the solicitor to the aforesaid scale fee.

Decision of Kay, J. (39 W. R. 90), reversed.—In re MacGowan, MacGowan v. Murray, C.A. 227—[1891] 1 Ch. 105; 60 L. J. Ch. 118; 63 L. T. 793.

8. Costs—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44), s. 7—Mortgage—Investigating title—Separate mortgage transactions—Solicitors' Remunera- tion Order, 1882, Schedule I., Part I., r. 10.—The life interest of a tenant for life in the whole of the real estates comprised in a settlement made in 1871 was subject to a mortgage of £192,000 created by the tenant for life. In 1882 the trustees of the settled estates were empowered by a private Act to raise a larger sum, on mortgage of the fee of the settled estates, for the purpose of paying off the charge on the life estate and the other debts of the tenant for life. In August, 1883, the trustees accordingly executed a mortgage in fee of part of the settled estates, to the same mortgagees, for a sum of £232,000, out of which the sum of £192,000 was retained by the mortgagees in repayment of their charge on the life estate, and only the balance—viz., £40,000—paid in cash to the trustees. The mortgagees employed the same solicitors in respect of both mortgage transactions.

Held, that the mortgage of 1883 was not a further charge for £40,000, but an entirely new mortgage for £232,000, and, therefore, that the solicitors of the mortgagees were entitled to be remunerated on that footing, according to the scale fee prescribed in Schedule I., Part I., of the Solicitors' Remuneration General Order, 1882.

Decision of North, J. (reported 39 W. R. 106), reversed.—Aylesford (Earl) v. Poulett (Earl), C.A. 241—[1891] 1 Ch. 248; 60 L. J. Ch. 204; 64 L. T. 336.

9. Costs—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44)—Taxation—Negotiation fee—Commission paid by client to estate agent—General Order, Schedule I., r. 11.—In 1874 the owner of an estate in Devonshire appointed a local surveyor as the estate agent, with a view to its development as a building estate, and agreed that his remuneration should be two and a half per cent. on the purchase-money of all the land sold during his agency. In 1884 an offer to purchase a small part of the estate was made direct to the owner, and, the local agent being then ill, the negotiation for the sale was conducted, at the owner's request, by the owner's London solicitor, who went to Devonshire for the purpose. The local agent, however, assisted to some extent in the transaction by preparing plans and advising as to the price and as to the restrictive covenants to be imposed on the purchaser. On completion of the purchase, a sum of £360 (being two and a half per cent. on the purchase-money) was paid to the local agent by the vendor, on its being represented to the vendor that it was also remuneration for work done during the preceding ten years.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (Lindley, Bowen, and Fry, L.JJ.), affirming North, J., that this was "a commission paid by the client to an estate agent" within the meaning of rule 11 of the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, and that the vendor's solicitor was not entitled to the scale fee for negotiating the sale under Schedule I., Part I.—In re Withall, C.A. 529—[1891] 3 Ch. 8; 64 L. T. 704.

10. Costs—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, s. 2—General Order, 1884, r. (c), Schedule II.—Taxation—"Other documents."—The words "other documents" in the heading to Schedule II. of the General Order, 1884, made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, mean other documents ejusdem generis with deeds and wills.

An agreement between a contractor and town commissioners for the execution of sewage works comes within the term "conveyancing business" in section 2 of the Solicitors' Remuneration Act of 1881, and is taxable as such.

Ex parte O'Hagan, 19 L. R. Ir. 99, followed.

In re Atkinson and Lurgan Commissioners, 24 L. R. Ir. 182, considered.—Ex parte Caruth, M.R. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 478.

11. Costs—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881—General Order, Schedule I., Part I.—Vendor's solicitor—Costs of release of incumbrance.—The costs of obtaining the release of an outstanding incumbrance on property sold are not covered by the scale charge allowed to the solicitor for a vendor by Schedule I., Part I., of the General Order made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881.

In re Emanuel & Simmonds, 33 Ch. D. 40, considered.—Ex parte Bonass, M.R. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 375.

12. Costs—Taxation after payment—Special circumstances—Pressure—Payment "under protest"—Client abroad—Discretion of judge—Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), ss. 37, 38, 41.—In October, 1890, house property which was subject to a mortgage was sold by the mortgagor, the 8th of November being, as the mortgagee's solicitor was aware, the date fixed for completion. On the 24th of November, when the purchaser was pressing for completion of the contract, and threatening an action for specific performance, the mortgagee's solicitor delivered a bill of costs for £45, and three weeks afterwards a small supplementary bill for £3 16s. The mortgagor himself was in Australia, but on the 23rd of December his solicitor, acting as his agent, in order to get the purchase completed, paid "under protest" the sum of £42, which the mortgagee's solicitor had offered to accept in full discharge of the bills, and a receipt was given which stated that the amount was "paid under protest."

The mortgagor's solicitor having taken out a summons for taxation after payment, alleging as "special circumstances" within sections 38 and 41 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73—(1) the mortgagor's absence, (2) the payment having been made "under protest," and (3) the "pressure" arising from the necessity under which he lay of obtaining the mortgagee's concurrence in order to complete the contract for sale, Kekewich, J., acceded to the application.

Held, on appeal, that, though there might be some doubt whether the grounds alleged were sufficient to constitute a clear case of "special circumstances" within the meaning of the Act, yet, as some grounds for holding such special circumstances had been shown, and the judge had exercised his discretion, his decision ought not, under the circumstances of this case, to be interfered with, and that appeals in cases of this kind ought not to be encouraged where the amount in question was so trifling.

Decision of Kekewich, J., affirmed.—In re Cheesman (a Solicitor), C.A. 497—[1891] 2 Ch. 289; 64 L. T. 602.

13. Lien for costs—Charge by plaintiff to third person on money to be recovered in two actions—One action only successful—Lien of solicitor on money recovered for costs of both actions in priority to charge.—A difference exists between the lien of a solicitor on a fund recovered for his client in an action and on deeds coming into his possession, inasmuch as in the former case he has no lien for all costs due to him from his client, but only for the costs of recovering that particular fund; and even where the solicitor actually gets the fund into his possession he obtains no greater lien than if it had remained in court.

A. having threatened to sue B. on a dishonoured bill of exchange, B. agreed to give him a charge on certain money which B.'s solicitors were taking proceedings to recover from two insurance companies, on two separate policies of insurance on a ship. The charge was prepared by B.'s solicitors, after an interview at which A. and B. were also present, and the solicitors sent it to A. in a letter, in which, "in pursuance of the enclosed written charge," they undertook out of any moneys received by them from either the S. Association or the M. Association under the policies to hand over to A., "after payment of the legal charges," so much of the amount recovered from the said association (sic) as might be sufficient to repay him the amount secured by the charge.

The proceedings against the M. Association were compromised on the association agreeing to pay a certain sum. Some time afterwards the S. Association obtained judgment in their favour.

Held, that the undertaking given by B.'s solicitors could not be construed as entitling them to payment of their legal charges in respect of the proceedings relating to both policies; so that the undertaking was not inconsistent with the general principle as to a solicitor's right of lien.

Decision of Kekewich, J., 64 L. T. N. S. 318, reversed.—Mackenzie v. Mackintosh, C.A.—64 L. T. 706.

14. Lien for costs—Extent of lien—Taxable costs, charges, and expenses—Advances—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28—Taking security for costs—Interest—Waiver of lien.—A solicitor can only have a lien on his client's documents for taxable costs, charges, and expenses incurred by him as solicitor of the client, which will include all advances, made by the solicitor in the course of his business as a solicitor, which are liable to be moderated by the taxing master; but the lien does not extend to ordinary loans or advances by the solicitor not so made as aforesaid, and not liable to be so taxed or moderated.

As to whether the taking of a security from the client operates as a waiver of the lien where one exists, no fixed rule can be laid down; but it depends on the position of the parties and the circumstances of the particular case, as affording an inference of the intention of the parties. If that position and the circumstances of the case, or the nature of the security, are such that the taking of the security is inconsistent with the continuance of the lien, a sufficient indication is afforded of an intention to abandon the lien and rely on the security so taken.

A solicitor took as security from his client (a married woman) a promissory note (in which her husband joined as surety), with a provision for payment of interest at five per cent., and also a charge on a life policy; and nothing was said about the lien continuing, notwithstanding the taking of the security.

Held, that, inasmuch as a solicitor owes a duty to his client to explain clearly the effect of every transaction between them, and as the security in question gave more than the lien, the taking of it was inconsistent with the continuance of the lien, and afforded an inference of an intention to abandon the lien and rely on the security.

Robarts v. Jefferys, 8 L. J. Ch. (O. S.) 137, approved.

Decision of Stirling, J., reversed.—In re Taylor, Stileman, & Underwood, Ex parte Payne-Collier, C.A. 417—[1891] 1 Ch. 590; 60 L. J. Ch. 525; 64 L. T. 605.

15. Lien for costs—Proceeds of execution in hands of sheriff—40 & 41 Vict. c. 56, s. 62.—A. having recovered judgment against M. issued execution for the costs. M. paid the amount due to the sheriff, in whose hands it was seized under a fi. fa. at the suit of a third person who had obtained judgment against A. A.'s solicitor applied to the court for a declaration that the money in the hands of the sheriff was subject to their lien.

Held, that, in the absence of evidence that the solicitor could not otherwise recover the costs, the court in its discretion would not make the order.—Croghan v. Maffett, EX.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 97.

15a. Lien for costs—Title deeds held for mortgagee—Payment off of mortgage — Costs of mortgagee's solicitor—Right of mortgagor to return of deeds.—Where a mortgagor has paid his mortgagee his principal, interest, and costs, and taken a release from him, the mortgagee's solicitor has no right to retain the deeds as against the mortgagor, even for costs due by the mortgagee for work done relating to the mortgaged property pending the mortgage, the equitable right of the mortgagor to have his deeds back from the mortgagee on such payment prevailing against the solicitor's lien claimed in right of the mortgagee.

Ogle v. Story, 4 B. & Ad. 735, distinguished.—In re Llewellyn (a Solicitor), CH.D. CHI., J. 713.

16. Misconduct—Solicitor struck off roll on conviction for criminal charge—Conviction still standing—Application to restore to roll—Previous refusals by court to restore—Jurisdiction of court to restore—Special circumstances.—The court has power to restore to the roll of solicitors a gentleman who has been struck off the rolls as a consequence of his conviction on a criminal charge, although such conviction stands, and although applications to restore have been previously refused by the court; but such power will not be exercised by the court unless under the most special circumstances. — In re Brandreth, Q.B.D. 687—60 L. J. Q. B. 501; 64 L. T. 739.

17. Trust money passing into hands of firm with notice of trust—Investment by partner on improper security—Negligence—Liability of partners—Notice—Implied retainer — Liability of deceased partner's estate—Contribution—Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), s. 4 (1).—Trust funds were deposited in 1883 at a bank in the name of a firm of solicitors (consisting of three partners, of whom S. was one) who acted for the trustees. The last surviving trustee died in 1883, and in 1884 the trust funds were invested in a mortgage of house property of a hazardous nature. The mortgage was taken in the names of S. and two other persons, all of whom had then agreed to become new trustees of the trust funds, but who were not actually appointed trustees until after the execution of the mortgage.

S. acted for his firm throughout the whole transaction as to the investment, and the costs of his firm in relation to the transaction were retained out of the trust fund. S. had full knowledge of the nature of the property taken as security, but the other members of his firm had no actual knowledge on the matter. The security proved insufficient, and in 1888, in an action brought by the beneficiaries against S. and the two other trustees of the fund, it was held that they were jointly and severally liable to make good the loss sustained by the trust fund. This not having been done, the present actions were brought.

Held (1), that the trust funds having come into the hands of the firm of solicitors with notice of the trusts, all the partners were affected with knowledge of the nature of the security through S., who acted throughout within the scope of his authority as partner, and were therefore implicated in the breach of trust; that the liability, being joint and several, was not discharged by the judgment, obtained in 1888, against S.; that the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 4, afforded no defence, as the security was one of a class attended with hazard; and that the estate of a deceased partner of S. and the surviving partner personally, were liable to make good the loss.

Lechmere v. Fletcher, 1 Cr. & M. 623, 3 Tyr. 450, and King v. Hoare, 13 M. & W. 494, followed.

Held (2), that the relation of solicitor and client existed between the firm of S. and each of the two new trustees, although no express retainer had been given, and that S., and through him the firm, having failed in the duty of calling the attention of the trustees to the rules as to investment of trust money, the firm was liable for negligence, and that such liability extended to the estate of the deceased partner.

The law as to implied retainer, as laid down in Bean v. Wade, 1 Times L. R. 404, 2 Ibid. 157, followed.

As to an action for indemnity where no claim had actually been made, Hughes-Hallett v. Indian Mammoth Gold Mining Co., 31 W. R. 285, 22 Ch. D. 561, distinguished.—Blyth v. Fladgate, Morgan v. Blyth, Smith v. Blyth, CH.D. STI., J. 422—[1891] 1 Ch. 337; 60 L. J. Ch. 66; 63 L. T. 546.

18. Unqualified person—Acting as solicitor—Affidavit prepared by process-server—Contempt of court—6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 2—23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 26.—A person who was employed by a firm of solicitors as a process-server prepared the usual affidavit with reference to a failure to effect service, whereupon an application was made to attach him for contempt of court in having acted as a solicitor contrary to section 2 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73.

Held, that he had not acted as a solicitor, and that no contempt of court had been committed.—In re Louis, Ex parte Incorporated Law Society, Q.B.D. 511—[1891] 1 Q. B. 649; 60 L. J. Q. B. 500; 64 L. T. 565.

19. Unqualified person—Debt collector—Solicitor acting as agent for debt collector—Sharing costs—Discretion of court to inflict minor punishment—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 32.—A solicitor agreed to act for a debt collector, who had started a trade protection society, to act as his solicitor in the county court, upon the terms that when the solicitor recovered costs he would share the costs with the debt collector, but when no costs were recovered the solicitor received no costs.

Held, that the solicitor was acting as agent for an unqualified person within section 32 of the Solicitors Act, 1843; but that the court had jurisdiction under that section to inflict a lesser punishment than striking the solicitor off the rolls.—In re a Solicitor, Ex parte Incorporated Law Society, Q.B.D—63 L. T. 350.

See also ADMIRALTY, 8; BANKRUPTCY (COSTS), 14, 15; BANKRUPTCY (IRELAND), 2; COUNTY COURT, 3, 6, 8; MORTGAGE, 10; PARTNERSHIP, 3.

SOLICITORS' REMUNERATION ACT, 1881.—See SOLICITOR, 7—11.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.—See VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 5, 6.

STAMP DUTY.—See REVENUE, 11.

See also EVIDENCE, 3.

STATUTE, REPEAL of.—See WATERCOURSE.

STATUTES:—

1 Edw 6, c 14—See WILL, 30

5 Eliz c 4—See APPRENTICE, 1

13 Eliz c 5, s 6—See FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE

21 Jac 1, c 16, s 3—See LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF; PARTNERSHIP, 6

10 Car 1, sess 3, c 15 (Pretenced Titles Act), s 2 (Ir)—See JUDGMENT, 1; MORTGAGE, 7a

29 Car 2, c 3, ss 4, 7—See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, 2

1 W & M c 30, ss 2, 4—See MINE, 1

5 W & M c 6, ss 2, 3—See MINE, 1

9 & 10 Will 3, c 15, s 1—See ARBITRATION, 7

8 Anne c 18, s 7—See VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 7

3 Geo 2 (Ir), c 7—See JUDGMENT, 3

9 Geo 2, c 36 (Mortmain Act)—See CHARITY, 6, 7, 8

16 Geo 3, c 61 (Port of Chester Act)—See SHIP 34

38 Geo 3, c 5 (Land Tax), s 4—See LAND TAX

39 & 40 Geo 3, c 98 (Thellusson Act)—See WILL, 2

42 Geo 3, c 119, s 2—See GAMING

48 Geo 3, c 47—See LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 5b

48 Geo 3, c 55—See REVENUE, 7

54 Geo 3, c 96, s 2—See APPRENTICE, 1

57 Geo 3, c xxix. (Michael Angelo Taylor's Act), s 79—See METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 6

58 Geo 3, c 45 (Church Building Act), s 33—See METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 3

59 Geo 3, c 12, s 7—See POOR LAW, 1

59 Geo 3, c 56—See CROWN

59 Geo 3, c 134 (Church Building Act), s 34—See METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 3

3 Geo 4, c 72 (Church Building Act). s 34—See METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 3

4 Geo 4, c 60, s 41—See GAMING

4 Geo 4, c 99, s 43—See TITHES

9 Geo 4, c 14 (Lord Tenterden's Act), s 6—See COMPANY, 26

9 Geo 4, c 35—See JUDGMENT, 2

9 Geo 4, c 61 (Licensing Act, 1828), s 1—See LICENSING ACTS, 4: s 14, LICENSING ACTS, 2

11 Geo 4 and 1 Will 4, c 40, s 1—See WILL, 22

1 & 2 Will 4, c 37 (Truck Act, 1831), ss 1, 3, 23—See MASTER AND SERVANT, 5

1 & 2 Will 4, c 55, s 17—See REVENUE, 2

2 & 3 Will 4, c 45 (Reform Act, 1832), s 36—See PARLIAMENT, 2

2 & 3 Will 4, c 71 (Prescription Act), ss 1, 3—See LIGHT, 1: ss 1, 4, 6, COPYHOLDS

3 & 4 Will 4, c 15, ss 1, 2—See COPYRIGHT, 2, 3 s 2, PRACTICE, 15

3 & 4 Will 4, c 42, s 28—See INTEREST, 2: s 29, INTEREST, 1: s 39, ARBITRATION, 7

3 & 4 Will 4, c 47, s 42—See LIMITATIONS STATUTE OF, 2

3 & 4 Will 4, c 74 (Fines and Recoveries Act), ss 1, 15, 19, 40, 77—See MARRIED WOMAN, 12

5 & 6 Will 4, c 50 (Highway Act, 1835), s 65—See HIGHWAY, 4: s 105, HIGHWAY, 1: s 109, NEGLIGENCE, 3

5 & 6 Will 4, c 76 (Municipal Corporations Act, 1835), s 92—See CHARITY, 6

5 & 6 Will 4, c 83, s 2—See PATENT, 1

6 & 7 Will 4, c 32 (Building Societies Act, 1836), s 4—See BUILDING SOCIETY, 2

1 Vict c 26 (Wills Act), s 11—See PROBATE, 28: s 27, POWER OF APPOINTMENT, 2

1 & 2 Vict c 72—See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 7

1 & 2 Vict c 109, s 32—See TITHES, 1, 2

1 & 2 Vict c 110, s 14—See LUNATIC, 2; s 15, PRACTICE, 13: s 17, BANKRUPTCY, 4

3 & 4 Vict c 56, s 6—See SHIP, 33

3 & 4 Vict c 82, s 1—See LUNATIC, 2

3 & 4 Vict c 88 (Police Act, 1840), ss 3, 27—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 6

4 & 5 Vict c 25—See PARLIAMENT, 6

5 & 6 Vict c 35 (Income Tax Act, 1842), s 100—See REVENUE, 4: s 146, REVENUE, 6

5 & 6 Vict c 45 (Copyright Act, 1842)—See COPYRIGHT, 5: ss 2, 11, COPYRIGHT, 1: ss 20, 21, 24, COPYRIGHT, 2, 3: s 26, PRACTICE, 16

5 & 6 Vict c 97, s 2—See PRACTICE, 15

6 & 7 Vict c 18 (Registration Act, 1843), s 38—See PARLIAMENT, 4: s 51, CRIMINAL LAW, 5: s 74, PARLIAMENT, 6

6 & 7 Vict c 73 (Solicitors Act, 1843), s 2—See SOLICITOR, 18: s 32, SOLICITOR, 19: s 37, SOLICITOR, 5, 12: ss 38, 41, SOLICITOR, 12

6 & 7 Vict c 82, s 5—See PRACTICE, 59

6 & 7 Vict c 88, s 158—See SHIP, 35

7 & 8 Vict c 12 (International Copyright Act, 1844)—See COPYRIGHT, 5

7 & 8 Vict c 90—See JUDGMENT, 3

8 & 9 Vict c 16 (Companies Clauses Act, 1845), s 36—See RAILWAY, 8: s 45, BILL OF SALE, 4

8 & 9 Vict c 18 (Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845), ss 7, 9—See LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 1: s 69, LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 1; UNIVERSITY, 2: s 70, LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 1: s 79, LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 2: s 133, POOR RATE, 3

8 & 9 Vict c 70 (Church Building Act), s 13—See METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 3

8 & 9 Vict c 76 (Legacy Duty Act, 1845), s 4—See REVENUE, 9

9 & 10 Vict c 93 (Lord Campbell's Act)—See DAMAGES; NEGLIGENCE, 1

9 & 10 Vict c 111—See LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 3

10 & 11 Vict c 17 (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847), s 6—See WATERWORKS, 1: s 12, NUISANCE, 2: ss 22, 25, 27, WATERWORKS, 1

10 & 11 Vict c 96 (Trustee Relief Act, 1847)—See TRUSTEE, 13

11 & 12 Vict c 43 (Jervis's Act)—See MASTER AND SERVANT, 3

12 & 13 Vict c 92, s 2—See CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

13 & 14 Vict c 69, ss 26, 113—See PARLIAMENT, 9

14 & 15 Vict c 99 (Petty Sessions, Ireland, Act, 1851), s 10, sub-section 4—See CRIMINAL LAW (IRELAND), 2

15 & 16 Vict c lxxvii. (London, City, Small Debts Extension Act, 1852), s 39—See CITY OF LONDON COURT

15 & 16 Vict c 83 (Patent Law Amendment Act, 1852), s 25—See PATENT, 1: s 41, PRACTICE, 32

16 & 17 Vict c 34 (Income Tax Act, 1853), s 2—See REVENUE, 8: s 51, REVENUE, 5

16 & 17 Vict c 51 (Succession Duty Act, 1853), s 42—See REVENUE, 12

16 & 17 Vict c 65, s 1—See POOR LAW, 1

16 & 17 Vict c 97 (Lunatic Asylums Act, 1853), s 54—See POOR LAW, 3: ss 95, 96, POOR LAW, 2

16 & 17 Vict c 119 (Betting Act, 1853), ss 1, 3, 4—See GAMING

16 & 17 Vict c 137 (Charitable Trusts Act, 1853), s 17—See ENDOWED SCHOOL

17 & 18 Vict c 31 (Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854), s 2—See RAILWAY, 11

17 & 18 Vict c 36 (Bills of Sale Act, 1854)—See BILL OF SALE, 4

17 & 18 Vict c 103 (Towns Improvement, Ireland, Act, 1854)—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND), 1

17 & 18 Vict c 104 (Merchant Shipping Act, 1854), ss 66, 70, 469, 484—See SHIP, 32: ss 353, 358, SHIP, 35

17 & 18 Vict c 125 (Common Law Procedure Act, 1854), s 26—See EVIDENCE, 1

18 & 19 Vict c 43 (Infants' Settlement Act, 1855)—See INFANT, 4: ss 1, 2, INFANT, 6

18 & 19 Vict c 120 (Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855), s 6—See METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 7: s 73, LANDLORD AND TENANT, 5: s 96, NEGLIGENCE, 3: s 105, METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 3: s 119, METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 2: ss 125, 128, METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 4: s 250, METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 3

18 & 19 Vict c 122 (Metropolitan Building Act, 1855), s 3—See METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 1: s 26, METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 2: ss 82, 85, METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 1

18 & 19 Vict c 124 (Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855), s 29—See CHARITY, 5

18 & 19 Vict c 128 (Burial Act, 1855), s 18—See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW, 2

20 & 21 Vict c 43, s 2—See JUSTICES, 1

20 & 21 Vict c 57 (Malins' Act)—See MARRIED WOMAN, 8, 9

20 & 21 Vict c 60, s 313—See BANKRUPTCY (IRELAND), 3

20 & 21 Vict c 77, s 70—See PROBATE, 9

20 & 21 Vict c 85 (Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857), s 35—See DIVORCE, 1: s 45, DIVORCE, 22a, 26

20 & 21 Vict c 93 (Legitimacy Declaration Act)—See LEGITIMACY DECLARATION ACT

20 & 21 Vict c 147 (Thames Conservancy Act, 1857)—See THAMES CONSERVANCY

21 & 22 Vict c 44 (Universities and College Estates Act, 1858), ss 27, 28—See UNIVERSITY, 1

21 & 22 Vict c 72 (Landed Estates Court, Ireland, Act), s 64—See CONVERSION

22 & 23 Vict c 61 (Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859), s 4—See DIVORCE, 1: s 5, DIVORCE, 24, 26

22 & 23 Vict c 133 (Watermen's and Lightermen's Amendment Act, 1859), ss 8, 10—See SHIP, 30: s 66, THAMES CONSERVANCY

23 & 24 Vict c 97 (Railways, Ireland, Act, 1860), s 2—See RAILWAY, 5

23 & 24 Vict c 116 (County Coroners Act, 1860), s 4—See CORONER

23 & 24 Vict c 127 (Solicitors Act, 1860), s 26—See SOLICITOR, 18: s 28, SOLICITOR, 1

23 & 24 Vict c 144, s 7—See DIVORCE, 16

23 & 24 Vict c 145—See LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 3

23 & 24 Vict c 154, s 10—See LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 1

24 & 25 Vict c 96 (Larceny Act), s 75—See

CRIMINAL LAW, 4; EXTRADITION, 1: s 76, EXTRADITION, 1

24 & 25 Vict c 100, s 43—See DIVORCE, 14

25 & 26 Vict c 68 (Copyright, Works of Art, Act, 1862)—See COPYRIGHT, 1

25 & 26 Vict c 89 (Companies Act, 1862), ss 4-6—See COMPANY, 20: s 6, COMPANY, 11: s 7, COMPANY, 34: s 15, COMPANY, 6: s 16, EXECUTOR, 3: s 18, COMPANY, 11: s 23, COMPANY, 32: s 35, COMPANY, 19, 44a: s 38, sub-section 7, COMPANY, 44: s 43, BILL OF SALE, 4: s 62, COMPANY, 19: s 67, COMPANY, 4, 22: s 75, EXECUTOR, 3: s 85, COMPANY, 46: s 87, COMPANY, 45: s 95, BUILDING SOCIETY, 4; COMPANY, 40: s 96, COMPANY, 40: s 98, COMPANY, 44a: s 101, COMPANY, 33: s 102, COMPANY, 33, 34: s 111, COMPANY, 42: s 120, COMPANY, 33: s 133, sub-section 7, COMPANY, 40: s 138, COMPANY, 39: s 145, COMPANY, 28: s 149, COMPANY, 40: s 151, COMPANY, 40: s 153, COMPANY, 44a: s 163, COMPANY, 45: s 180, COMPANY, 20: s 203, BUILDING SOCIETY, 4

25 & 26 Vict c 102 (Metropolis Local Management Act, 1862)—See METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 3: s 75, RAILWAY, 10: s 96, LANDLORD AND TENANT, 5: s 106, NEGLIGENCE, 3

25 & 26 Vict c 108 (Confirmation of Sales Act, 1862)—See TRUSTEE, 5

26 & 27 Vict c 41 (Innkeepers Act), s 1—See INNKEEPER, 2

26 & 27 Vict c 117 (Nuisances Removal Act, 1863), s 2—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 15

27 & 28 Vict c 73 (Liverpool Sanitary Amendment Act, 1864), ss 5, 13—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 7

29 & 30 Vict c 32, s 1—See DIVORCE, 4

29 & 30 Vict c 109 (Naval Discipline Act, 1866), ss 19, 87—See NAVY

30 & 31 Vict c 44 (Chancery, Ireland, Act, 1867), s 170—See PRACTICE (IRELAND), 18

30 & 31 Vict c 102 (Representation of the People Act, 1867) s 3, sub-section 2—See PARLIAMENT, 1: ss 3, 7, 61, POOR RATE, 5

30 & 31 Vict c 118, s 6—See POOR LAW (IRELAND), 2

30 & 31 Vict c 127 (Railway Companies Act, 1867), s 4—See RAILWAY, 8, 9: s 23, RAILWAY, 9

30 & 31 Vict c 131 (Companies Act, 1867), ss 9, 11—See COMPANY, 16, 17: s 25, COMPANY, 31: s 27, NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT

30 & 31 Vict c 134 (Traffic Regulation, Metropolis, Act, 1867), s 15—See METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 5

30 & 31 Vict c 144—See BANKRUPTCY (IRELAND), 4

31 & 32 Vict c 40 (Partition Act, 1868), s 10—See PARTITION ACTION, 2

31 & 32 Vict c 71 (County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868), s 3—See ADMIRALTY, 2, 3, 4: s 9, ADMIRALTY, 2, 3; PRACTICE, 18: s 21, COUNTY COURT, 1, 2

32 & 33 Vict c 27 (Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869), s 8—See LICENSING ACTS, 1

32 & 33 Vict c 51 (County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1869), s 2—See COUNTY COURT, 1: s 4, ADMIRALTY, 4

32 & 33 Vict c 62 (Debtors Act, 1869), s 4, sub-section 4—See DEBTORS ACT, 2: s 5, DEBTORS ACT, 1: s 11, sub-sections 13, 14, CRIMINAL LAW, 2

32 & 33 Vict c 67 (Valuation, Metropolis, Act, 1869), ss 19, 32—See POOR RATE, 1

32 & 33 Vict c 68 (Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869), s 3—See DIVORCE, 17

32 & 33 Vict c 71 (Bankruptcy Act, 1869), s 81—See BANKRUPTCY, 7

32 & 33 Vict c 79 (Local Officers' Superannuation Act, Ireland, 1869), s 7—See PRACTICE (IRELAND), 2

32 & 33 Vict c 92—See FISHERY ACTS

33 & 34 Vict c 46, s 69—See LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 8

33 & 34 Vict c 52 (Extradition Act, 1870)—See EXTRADITION, 2

33 & 34 Vict c 71 (National Debt Act, 1870), ss 51, 52—See NATIONAL DEBT COMMISSIONERS

33 & 34 Vict c 75 (Elementary Education Act, 1870)—See SCHOOL BOARD

33 & 34 Vict c 78 (Tramways Act, 1870), ss 28, 29, 55—See TRAMWAY

33 & 34 Vict c 97 (Stamp Act, 1870), s 3—See REVENUE, 11: s 54, sub-section 1, EVIDENCE, 3

33 & 34 Vict c 104 (Joint-Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870), s 2—See COMPANY, 27

33 & 34 Vict c 109 (Common Law Procedure Amendment Act, 1870), s 6—See PRACTICE (IRELAND), 14

34 & 35 Vict c 31 (Trade Union Act, 1871), s 7—See TRADE UNION

34 & 35 Vict c 45 (Sequestration Act, 1871), ss 1, 5, 6—See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW, 3

35 & 36 Vict c xxxi (Manchester Waterworks and Improvements Act, 1872), s 34—See CHARITY, 7

35 & 36 Vict c 58 (Bankruptcy, Ireland, Act, 1872), s 49—See BANKRUPTCY (IRELAND), 5: ss 97, 98, BANKRUPTCY (IRELAND), 1

35 & 36 Vict c 60 (Corrupt Practices, Municipal Elections, Act, 1872), s 15, sub-section 6—See PRACTICE, 2

35 & 36 Vict c 76 (Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1872), s 17—See MINE, 3

35 & 36 Vict c 77 (Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872), s 23, sub-section 10—See MINES, 2

35 & 36 Vict c 93 (Pawnbrokers Act, 1872), s 39—See PAWNBROKER

35 & 36 Vict c 94 (Licensing Act, 1872), s 8—See LICENSING ACTS, 5: s 37, LICENSING ACTS, 3: s 42, LICENSING ACTS, 4

36 & 37 Vict c 48 (Regulation of Railways Act, 1873), s 14—See RAILWAY, 6

36 & 37 Vict c 66 (Judicature Act, 1873), s 19—See PRACTICE, 8: s 24, sub-section 5, COMPANY, 46; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2: s 25, sub-section 6, ASSIGNMENT OF DEBT: s 39, CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2: s 47, PRACTICE, 4: s 58, PRACTICE, 52: ss 62, 66, SOLICITOR, 4

36 & 37 Vict c 85 (Merchant Shipping Act, 1873), s 17—See SHIP, 21

37 & 38 Vict c 15 (Betting Act, 1874), s 3, sub-section 3—See GAMING

37 & 38 Vict c 42 (Building Societies Act, 1874), s 13—See BUILDING SOCIETY, 2: s 15, BUILDING SOCIETY, 2, 3: s 36, BUILDING SOCIETY, 1

37 & 38 Vict c 49 (Licensing Act, 1874), s 22—See LICENSING ACTS, 3: s 26, LICENSING ACTS, 4

37 & 38 Vict c 57 (Real Property Limitation Act, 1874), ss 2, 8—See LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF, 4

37 & 38 Vict c 62 (Infants' Relief Act, 1874)—See BANKRUPTCY, 28: s 2, INFANT, 4

37 & 38 Vict c 78 (Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874), s 5—See TRUSTEE, 11

37 & 38 Vict c 85 (Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874), ss 8, 9—See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW, 6

38 & 39 Vict c 55 (Public Health Act, 1875), s 4—See WATER COMPANY, 2; LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 10, 11, 13: ss 51, 52, WATER COMPANY, 2: ss 91, 96, PRACTICE, 4: ss 116, 117, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 14: s 150, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 10, 11: s 151, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 10: s 156, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 8: s 157, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 1, 13: s 161, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 12: s 175, CHARITY, 6: ss 211, 229, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 12: s 257, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 10: s 276, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 11, 12: s 334, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 9

38 & 39 Vict c 60 (Friendly Societies Act, 1875), s 16, sub-section 9—See FRIENDLY SOCIETY, 2: s 22, FRIENDLY SOCIETY, 1

38 & 39 Vict c 63 (Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875), s 6—See ADULTERATION, 1, 3: s 9, ADULTERATION, 2: s 25, ADULTERATION, 1, 3

38 & 39 Vict c 76 (Land Transfer Act, 1875), s 48—See TRUSTEE, 11

38 & 39 Vict c 86 (Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875), s 16—See MASTER AND SERVANT, 2

38 & 39 Vict c 90 (Employers and Workmen Act, 1875), s 4—See MASTER AND SERVANT, 3: s 10, MASTER AND SERVANT, 6

38 & 39 Vict c 91 (Registration of Trade-Marks Act, 1875), ss 5, 10—See TRADE-MARK, 8

39 & 40 Vict c 37—See LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 5b

39 & 40 Vict c 45 (Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1876), s 11, sub-section 12—See APPRENTICE, 1

39 & 40 Vict c 57 (Winter Assizes, Ireland, Act)—See CRIMINAL LAW (IRELAND), 1

39 & 40 Vict c 59, s 3—See PRACTICE, 5

39 & 40 Vict c 61 (Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876), ss 34, 36—See POOR LAW, 5

39 & 40 Vict c 63 (Notices to Quit, Ireland, Act, 1876)—See LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 8

40 & 41 Vict c 26 (Companies Act, 1877), s 3—See COMPANY, 17: s 4, COMPANY, 18

40 & 41 Vict c 33 (Contingent Remainders Act, 1877)—See WILL, 11a

40 & 41 Vict c 56 (County Officers and Courts, Ireland, Act, 1877), s 37—See COUNTY COURT (IRELAND): s 51, PRACTICE (IRELAND), 15: s 62, SOLICITOR, 15

40 & 41 Vict c 57 (Judicature, Ireland, Act, 1877)—See PRACTICE (IRELAND), 17: s 28, sub-section 1, ADMINISTRATION, 7

41 & 42 Vict c 11 (Marine Mutiny Act, 1878)—See NAVY

41 & 42 Vict c 19 (Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878), s 2—See DIVORCE, 16: s 4, DIVORCE, 14

41 & 42 Vict c 26 (Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878), s 5—See POOR RATE, 5: ss 24, 28, sub-sections 1, 12, 13, PARLIAMENT, 5

41 & 42 Vict c 31 (Bills of Sale Act, 1878)—See BILL OF SALE, 2, 4: s 3, BILL OF SALE, 11: s 4, BILL OF SALE, 1, 4, 9, 11, 13: s 10, sub-section 3, BILL OF SALE, 15: s 11, BILL OF SALE, 12

41 & 42 Vict c 52 (Public Health, Ireland, Act, 1878), ss 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 118, 119, 121—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND), 4

41 & 42 Vict c 77 (Highway and Locomotive Act, 1878), ss 13, 14, 15—See HIGHWAY, 2

42 & 43 Vict c 30 (Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1879), s 3—See ADULTERATION, 2

42 & 43 Vict c 49 (Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879), s 33—See JUSTICES, 2

42 & 43 Vict c 104 (Local Government Board Provisional Orders Confirmation Act, 1879)—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 7

43 & 44 Vict c 42 (Employers' Liability Act, 1880)—See MASTER AND SERVANT, 4

43 & 44 Vict c 46 (Universities and College Estates Amendment Act, 1880), ss 2, 4—See UNIVERSITY, 1

44 & 45 Vict c 41 (Conveyancing Act, 1881), s 14—See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 2: s 39, MARRIED WOMAN, 7: s 43, INFANT, 3

44 & 45 Vict c 44 (Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881), s 2—See SOLICITOR, 10: s 7, SOLICITOR, 8

44 & 45 Vict c 49 (Land Law, Ireland, Act, 1881), s 1—See LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 12, 13, 14: s 2, LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 13: s 8, LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 8b, 14: s 20, sub-section 1, LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 8a: s 21, LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 5c, 11: s 27, LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 11: s 57, LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 8b: s 58, LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 7, 10

44 & 45 Vict c 58 (Army Act, 1881), s 136—See ARMY

45 & 46 Vict c 22 (Boiler Explosions Act, 1882), ss 3, 4—See BOILER

45 & 46 Vict c 38 (Settled Land Act, 1882), s 2—See SETTLED LAND ACTS, 2, 5; LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 15; WILL, 2: s 3, SETTLED LAND ACTS, 1, 3: s 4, SETTLED LAND ACTS, 3: s 15, SETTLED LAND ACTS, 5: s 21, SETTLED LAND ACTS, 3: s 25, SETTLED LAND ACTS, 2; WILL, 2: s 26, WILL, 2: s 33, SETTLED LAND ACT, 2: s 37, SETTLED LAND ACTS, 4: s 38, LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 15: ss 46, 47, SETTLED LAND ACTS, 3: s 53, SETTLED LAND ACTS, 4: s 55, SETTLED LAND ACTS, 3: s 58, SETTLED LAND ACTS, 5; WILL, 2: s 63, SETTLED LAND ACTS, 1

45 & 46 Vict c 43 (Bills of Sale Act, 1882)—See BILL OF SALE, 1, 2, 14: s 3, BILL OF SALE, 11, 12, 15: s 5, BILL OF SALE, 15: s 8, BILL OF SALE, 5, 11, 12: s 9, BILL OF SALE, 3, 5—8, 11: s 10, BILL OF SALE, 3: s 17, BILL OF SALE, 4

45 & 46 Vict c 50 (Municipal Corporations Act, 1882), ss 9, 11—See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION, 2: ss 12, 22, MUNICIPAL CORPORATION, 1: ss 41, 73, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 5: ss 139—143, CHARITY, 6: ss 169, 248, sub-sections, 2, 5, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 2

45 & 46 Vict c 61 (Bills of Exchange Act, 1882), s 7, sub-section 3—See BILL OF EXCHANGE, 2: s 8, CHEQUE: s 18, CRIMINAL LAW, 4: s 19, BILL OF EXCHANGE, 1: s 22, BANKRUPTCY, 28; ss 29, 35, 73, 81, CHEQUE

45 & 46 Vict. c 75 (Married Women's Property Act, 1882)—See MARRIED WOMAN, 1: s 1, sub-section 1, MARRIED WOMAN, 12; s 1, sub-section 2, ADMINISTRATION, 5; EXECUTOR, 3; MARRIED WOMAN, 2, 9a, 10: s 2, INFANT, 5; MARRIED WOMAN, 12: s 4, MARRIED WOMAN, 2, 9a: s 5, MARRIED WOMAN, 10: s 11, INSURANCE, LIFE: s 19, ADMINISTRATION, 5; INFANT, 5: s 23, MARRIED WOMAN, 23

46 & 47 Vict c 52 (Bankruptcy Act, 1883), s 4—See BANKRUPTCY, 1, 4: s 9, DEBTORS ACT, 2;

WILL, 15: s 18, BANKRUPTCY, 37: s 20, PARLIAMENT, 1: s 27, BANKRUPTCY, 24: s 28, BANKRUPTCY, 17—23, 37: s 37, BANKRUPTCY, 30, 31: s 43, BANKRUPTCY, 1: s 44, BANKRUPTCY, 27, 37; s 45, BANKRUPTCY, 25, 26: s 47, BANKRUPTCY (VOLUNTARY SETTLEMENT), 39: s 48, BANKRUPTCY, 1, 22: s 49, BANKRUPTCY, 1: s 53, BANKRUPTCY, 12: s 55, BANKRUPTCY, 14: s 70, WILL, 15: s 74, BANKRUPTCY, 38: s 95, BANKRUPTCY, 16: s 97, BANKRUPTCY, 10: s 104, BANKRUPTCY, 17: s 125, BANKRUPTCY, 16: s 168, BANKRUPTCY, 37; PARLIAMENT, 1

46 & 47 Vict c 57 (Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883)—See PATENT, 5: s 5, sub-section 3, s 9, sub-section 1, PATENT, 7: s 18, PATENT, 6: s 26, sub-section 3, PATENT, 7: s 29, PATENT, 3; PRACTICE, 32: s 32, PATENT, 8: s 64, TRADE-MARK, 3: ss 69, 71, TRADE-MARK, 6: s 72, TRADE-MARK, 6, 9: s 73, TRADE-MARK, 11: s 74, TRADE-MARK, 5, 6: s 90, TRADE-MARK, 8: s 103, PATENT, 5: s 113, PATENT, 1: s 117, COUNTY COURT, 9

46 & 47 Vict c 61 (Agricultural Holdings, England, Act, 1883), ss 29, 61—See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 1

47 & 48 Vict c 18 (Settled Land Act, 1884), ss 6 (1), 7—See SETTLED LAND ACT, 1

47 & 48 Vict c 68 (Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884) —See MARRIED WOMAN, 5: s 3, DIVORCE, 21, 22

48 Vict c 15 (Registration Act, 1885), s 1, sub-section 2—See PARLIAMENT, 5: s 18, PARLIAMENT, 3

48 & 49 Vict c 17, s 20—See PARLIAMENT, 8

48 & 49 Vict c 51 (Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885), s 11, sub-section 3—See REVENUE, 1

48 & 49 Vict c 63 (Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1885), s 6—See PATENT, 5

48 & 49 Vict c 69 (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885), s 4—See CRIMINAL LAW, 3

49 & 50 Vict c 27 (Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886)—See INFANT, 1: s 7, DIVORCE, 10, 10a

49 & 50 Vict c 33 (International Copyright Act, 1886)—See COPYRIGHT, 5: ss 6, 11, COPYRIGHT, 4

50 & 51 Vict c 20 (Criminal Law and Procedure, Ireland, Act, 1887)—See CRIMINAL LAW (IRELAND), 1; SCHOOL BOARD

50 & 51 Vict c 28 (Merchandise Marks Act, 1887), s 2, sub-section 1 (a), s 5, sub-section 1 (d)—See TRADE-MARK, 2

50 & 51 Vict c 33 (Land Law, Ireland, Act, 1887) —See LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 9: s 1, LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 5c, 6, 10: s 7, LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 5: s 8, LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND), 15

50 & 51 Vict c 46 (Truck Amendment Act, 1887) —See MASTER AND SERVANT, 5

50 & 51 Vict c 55 (Sheriffs Act, 1887), s 20—See SHERIFF

51 & 52 Vict c 25 (Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888), ss 7, 27—See RAILWAY, 11: s 29, RAILWAY, 12

51 & 52 Vict c 41 (Local Government Act, 1888) —See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 5: s 3, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 6; POOR RATE, 6: s 9, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 6: s 11, sub-sections 1, 6, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 3: s 28, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 6: s 29, PRACTICE, 10: s 30, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 6: ss 35, 38, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 2: s 62, POOR LAW, 3: s 81, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 6: s 86, POOR LAW, 3: s 100, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 2

51 & 52 Vict c 43 (County Courts Act, 1888), ss 53, 54—See BANKRUPTCY, 25: s 56, COUNTY COURT, 9: s 65, COUNTY COURT, 10: s 74, CITY OF LONDON COURT; COUNTY COURT, 2: s 116, COUNTY COURT, 5; PRACTICE, 15: s 118, COUNTY COURT, 8; SOLICITOR, 3: s 119, COUNTY COURT, 8: s 126, COUNTY COURT, 11: s 185, CITY OF LONDON COURT: s 186, BANKRUPTCY, 25

51 & 52 Vict c 50 (Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1888), ss 10, 16—See TRADE-MARK, 3: s 64, TRADE-MARK, 4

51 & 52 Vict c 52 (Public Health, Buildings in Streets, Act, 1888), s 3—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 8

51 & 52 Vict c 59 (Trustee Act, 1888), s 4—See SOLICITOR, 17: s 6, TRUSTEE, 4: s 8, PARTNERSHIP, 3; TRUSTEE, 3

52 & 53 Vict c 30 (Board of Agriculture Act, 1889), s 2, sub-section 1 (b)—See UNIVERSITY, 1

52 & 53 Vict c 32 (Trust Investment Act, 1889), ss 3, 6—See TRUST

52 & 53 Vict c 43 (Merchant Shipping, Tonnage, Act, 1889), s 3—See SHIP, 31

52 & 53 Vict c 49 (Arbitration Act, 1889)—See ARBITRATION, 7: s 2, ARBITRATION, 1: s 4, ARBITRATION, 5: s 11, sub-section 2, ARBITRATION, 4: FRIENDLY SOCIETY, 1: s 13, PRACTICE, 51, 52: s 14, ARBITRATION, 3; PRACTICE, 52: s 15, ARBITRATION, 3; PRACTICE, 51, 52: ss 19, 24, BUILDING SOCIETY, 1: s 25, ARBITRATION, 1

52 & 53 Vict c 57 (Regulation of Railway Act, 1889), s 5, sub-section 3—See RAILWAY, 4

52 & 53 Vict c 63 (Interpretation Act, 1889), s 38—See BANKRUPTCY, 18

52 & 53 Vict c 68 (Merchant Shipping Act, 1889) —See SHIP, 34

53 & 54 Vict c 35 (Boiler Explosions Act, 1890), s 2—See BOILER

53 & 54 Vict c 44 (Judicature Act, 1890)—See PRACTICE, 45, 54: s 1, PRACTICE, 43: s 2, BILL OF SALE, 13

53 & 54 Vict c 62 (Companies, Memorandum of Association, Act, 1890)—See COMPANY, 10: s 1, COMPANY, 8, 9

53 & 54 Vict c 63 (Companies, Winding-up, Act, 1890—See COMPANY, 28, 43, 46: s 5, COMPANY, 41: ss 6, 9, COMPANY, 40: s 12, Company, 40, 41

53 & 54 Vict c 69 (Settled Land Act, 1890), s 10—See SETTLED LAND ACTS, 5

53 & 55 Vict c 70 (Housing of Working Classes Act, 1890)—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 8a

53 & 54 Vict c 71 (Bankruptcy Act, 1890), s 8—See BANKRUPTCY, 18: s 11, sub-section 2, BANKRUPTCY, 37: s 26, CRIMINAL LAW, 2

STATUTORY POWERS:—

1. Liability of a statutory body—Construction of statutes—Nonfeasance—Claim for damages.—The liability of a body created by statute is governed by the statutes which create it. The powers conferred when exercised at all must be executed with due care. In the absence of a contrary intention, its duties and liabilities are the same as those imposed by the general law on a private person doing the same thing. But for mere nonfeasance no action lies except in regard to a duty towards the plaintiff imposed by the statute and negligently omitted.

Mersey Docks v. Gibbs, L. R. 1 H. L. 93, approved.

In an action to recover damages for injury to the respondent's property arising from the fall of an overhanging road, consequent upon the giving way of its retaining wall, which the appellant corporation was under a statutory duty to maintain for the purpose merely of road conservancy, it appeared that the result was due to original defects in the structure of the wall, and that the appellant was not negligently ignorant thereof, and not guilty of misfeasance.

Held, that, according to the true construction of the Orders in Council constituting the appellant corporation, it was vested with administrative powers, subject to the control of the Government, and there was no intention to render it responsible to the respondents in respect of such injury.—Sanitary Commissioners of Gibraltar v. Orfila, P.C.—15 App. Cas. 400; 59 L. J. P. C. 95; 63 L. T. 58.

2. Waterworks—Reservoir—Lateral deviation—Unauthorized structure—Acquiescence.—Case in which certain works, constructed under the powers of an Act, were held to be authorized by the Act. The meaning of lateral and vertical deviation explained.

To constitute acquiescence in the unlawful exercise of statutory powers, even when public works have been completed and their construction has extended over several years, there must be either actual knowledge by the parties injured of the fact that the works were not in accordance with the statute, or fraudulent abstention from acquiring such knowledge.—Herron v. Rathmines and Rathgar Commissioners, C.A. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 179.

STOCKBROKER.—See COMPANY (SHARES), 23, 24; NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT.

STOCK EXCHANGE.—See BANKRUPTCY, 21.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.—See SALE OF GOODS.

"STREET."—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 11, 13.

STRIKE.—See SHIP, 8, 9.

SUCCESSION DUTY.—See REVENUE, 12.

TENANT for LIFE.—See APPORTIONMENT; LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 1; SETTLED LAND ACTS; TENANT FOR LIFE AND REMAINDERMAN; WASTE.

TENANT for LIFE and REMAINDERMAN:—

1. Bonus—Dividend—Reserve fund—Company—Capital or income.—A testator possessed of shares in a company gave his property upon trust as to one moiety of the income for his daughter, and as to the other moiety for his wife during widowhood, and after her decease or second marriage upon trust to divide the corpus among his children. He died in 1884 having had one child only.

The company had power by resolution to increase its capital, but no such resolution was ever passed. The directors were empowered to create a reserve fund out of the profits, to declare dividends with the sanction of the company in general meeting, and to declare interim dividends in the interval between general meetings, but no dividend was to be declared except out of profits. In 1884 the reserve fund amounted to £3,000. In 1888 it had risen to £9,000. In 1889 a special bonus or interim dividend amounting to £15,000 was paid to the shareholders, extraordinary expenses amounting to about £5,000 were incurred, and the reserve fund was reduced to £2,000; but there was no evidence to show that £7,000 of the interim dividend came out of the reserve fund.

Held, that the whole of the interim dividend was income, and not capital, and as such belonged to the tenants for life.—In re Alsbury, Sugden v. Alsbury, CH.D. NOR., J. 136—45 Ch. D. 237; 60 L. J. Ch. 29; 63 L. T. 576.

2. Bonus—Dividend—New shares—Capital or income—Tenant for life and remainderman.—Directors of a company resolved to distribute accumulated profits as a bonus dividend of fifty per cent. on the capital paid, the dividend to be payable on the 6th of September, 1890. New £10 shares were to be issued to the shareholders on the terms that £10 per share should be paid up on the 6th of December, 1890. The dividend was, at the option of the shareholders, payable in cash or applicable to the payment of the amount then due in respect of new shares or of calls. The old shares were £10 shares, some fully paid up, others with £7 10s. or £5 paid up. The new shares were to be offered at par to the shareholders holding shares fully paid up or with £7 10s. paid up, in the proportion of one new share for every two old shares paid up, and one new share for every eight old shares with £7 10s. paid up. A call of £2 10s. per share was to be made at the same time on such of the shares as were not fully paid up. The trustees of a will, who held 150 old shares fully paid up (the tenant for life consenting, without prejudice to his rights, to treat the dividend as income), accepted seventy-five new shares in lieu of the £750 bonus dividend on the 150 shares. The shares were sold for £1,363. The tenant for life claimed £750 out of the purchase-money, on the ground that it was income; he did not dispute that the balance was capital.

Held, that the £750 was income, on the ground that the declaration of the bonus dividend and the issue of the new shares were two distinct transactions, and not one transaction, as in Bouch v. Sproule, 12 App. Cas. 385, 56 L. J. Ch. 1037, the shareholders having the option of taking the dividend in cash without taking up the new shares. —In re Northage, Ellis v. Barfield, CH.D. NOR., J.—60 L. J. Ch. 488; 64 L. T. 625.

See also APPORTIONMENT; LANDS CLAUSES ACT, 1; WASTE.

TENANT in COMMON.—See SETTLEMENT, 1; WILL, 18.

TENANT in TAIL.—See MARRIED WOMAN, 12; SETTLEMENT, 1.

THAMES CONSERVANCY:—

Barge over fifty tons burthen—Navigation of same—"One competent man on board and one man in addition"—One competent man and boy on board—Thames Conservancy Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. cxlvii.)—Bye-law 16 of the Thames Conservators—Watermen's and Lightermen's Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. cxxxiii.), s. 66—Bye-law 35 made under this Act.—Bye-law 16 of the Thames Conservators, made under the powers of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857, provides that all barges, boats, lighters, and other navigating the River Thames shall when under craft way have at least one competent man constantly on board for the navigation and management thereof, and all such craft of above fifty tons burthen shall when under way have one man in addition on board to assist in the navigation of the same.

Held, that "one man in addition" in this bye-law means one competent and skilful man in addition, and that where the craft is above fifty tons burthen the bye-law requires two competent men on board, and is not satisfied by having on board one competent man, being a licensed lighterman, and a boy about sixteen years of age.

Perkins v. Gingell, 50 J. P. 277, followed.—Goldsmith v. Slattery, Q.B.D.—63 L. T. 273.

THAMES NAVIGATION.—See SHIP, 15.

TIMBER.—See WASTE.

TIME, COMPUTATION of. — See INSURANCE (ACCIDENT), 1.

TITHES :—

1. Tithe rent-charge—Application to vary—Average price of wheat—4 Geo. 4, c. 99, s. 43; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 109, s. 32.—In October, 1889, notices were served by persons paying more than £3 per annum each of tithe rent-charge on the titheowners of applications to justices at quarter sessions to reduce the amount of the tithe rent-charge. The tithe rent-charges had been originally fixed in 1833, and had been raised in 1875 on the application of the tithe owners. The quarter sessions held that it was necessary that the average price of wheat should decrease one-tenth from that ascertained in original certificate, and dismissed the applications.

Held (affirming the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division), that the order of quarter sessions must be quashed, and a writ of mandamus should issue requiring the justices to ascertain the average price of wheat for the past seven years, and if it varied by more than one-tenth since the date of the order of 1875 that the tithe rent-charge should be varied accordingly.—Reg. v. Justices of Cork, C.A. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 185.

2. Tithe rent-charge—Septennial variation of certificate according to price of corn—Petition for—Tithe Rent-charge Act (1 & 2 Vict. c. 109), s. 32—Jurisdiction of justices at quarter sessions—Objection to jurisdiction—Waiver of—Certiorari—Costs.—Where a certificate of tithe composition made pursuant to 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 119 was dated the 21st of January, 1834, and a petition was presented upon the 23rd of June, 1890, to vary the tithe rent-charge which had been substituted for the said composition, Held, that the composition thereby fixed commenced on the 1st of May, 1834, and that inasmuch as such composition was only liable to variation between the 1st of May and 1st of November in any seventh year of its currency (and the impropriate rent-charge in lieu thereof to a like variation), the justices at quarter sessions had no jurisdiction to vary such rent-charge on a petition instituted between the 1st of May and 1st of November, 1890, a new septennial period having then commenced to run.—The Queen v. Justices of Cork, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 369.

TOWN COMMISSIONERS (IRELAND). — See LOCAL GOVERNMENT (IRELAND), 1.

TRADE-MARK :—

1. Injunction—Fraudulent use of names—Intention to deceive the public—"Stone ale"—The perpetual injunction granted by the Court of Appeal (41 Ch. D. 35) affirmed.—Montgomery v. Thompson, H.L. (E.) —[1891] A. C. 217; 64 L. T. 748.

2. Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 2, sub-section (1) (d); s. 5, sub-section (1) (d)—False trade description—Invoice of goods.—A false trade description contained in an invoice delivered with goods may be an application of a false trade description within the meaning of section 5, sub-section (1), of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, although such invoice may not be physically attached to the goods.—Budd v. Lucas, Q.B.D. 350—[1891] 1 Q. B. 408; 60 L. J. M. C. 95; 64 L. T. 292.

3. Registration—Alteration of registered trade-mark—Essential particulars—Terms—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 64, sub-section (c); s. 74, sub-section 2; s. 92—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), ss. 10, 16.—On motion for leave to alter the registration of certain trade-marks registered under the Act of 1883, by striking out of each of them as registered the words "trade-mark,"

Held, that this ought only to be allowed on the terms that the applicants should undertake to indorse on their application and enter on the register a statement of the essential particulars of their marks, and a disclaimer of the exclusive right to the added matter (if any) to the satisfaction of the comptroller.—In re Colman's Trade-Marks, CH.D. KEK., J. 487—[1891] 2 Ch. 402; 60 L. J. Ch. 550; 64 L. T. 507.

4. Registration—Essential particulars—Claim in application—Prize medal—Distinctive device—Distinctive label—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Acts, 1883 and 1888, s. 64.—On an application for the registration of a trade-mark it must be shown that the trade-mark consists of or contains an essential particular as defined by section 64 of the Patents, &c., Acts, 1883 and 1888, and that such essential particular has been claimed in the application.

A representation of an exhibition prize medal is not a "distinctive device" within section 64, even though no other similar medal was granted for the same class of goods at the same exhibition.—In re Bryant & May's Trade-Mark, CH.D. NOR., J.—59 L. J. Ch. 763; 63 L. T. 676.

5. Registration—New mark—Previous fraudulent user—Omission of misleading words—Refusal of registration — Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 74 (11).—In 1887 F. applied to register as a new mark certain labels to be applied as trade-marks to cigars. Previous to 1887 he had used the mark on cigar-boxes in combination with the word "Habana," though the cigars contained in the boxes were in fact of Mexican growth and manufacture. There were words in the labels used by F. previously to 1887 implying that he was the successor in business of a certain firm of M. & Co., which he was not. The marks, for the registration of which as new marks application was made in 1887, omitted the word "Habana," and stated the true place of the applicant's manufactory, and gave the applicant's own name, without any false addition as to previous businesses.

Held, that the former fraudulent user of the marks disentitled the applicant to have them registered as new marks, even though the dishonest portions were omitted, since to permit registration would, in effect, be allowing the applicant to benefit by his former fraudulent conduct.—In re Fuente's Trade-Marks, CH.D. ROM., J. 489—[1891] 2 Ch. 166; 60 L. J. Ch. 308; 64 L. T. 196.

6. Registration—"Old mark"—User of part—Amendment of application — Disclaimer — User in British port—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 69, 71, 72, 74, sub-section (2).—An applicant seeking to register a trade-mark as an "old mark" must prove that the entire mark proposed (with the exception of immaterial differences) was used as a whole before the 13th of August, 1875. Proof that some part of such mark was used before that date will not entitle him to register that part as an old mark.

In re Palmer's Trade-Mark, 32 W. R. 306, 24 Ch. D. 504, discussed.

The court has no power judicially to amend an application, but can merely determine whether or not the comptroller shall proceed with such application as it stands.

Orr-Ewing v. The Registrar of Trade-Marks, 28 W. R. 17, 4 App. Cas. 479, explained.

Section 74, sub-section (2), of the Patents,

Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, must be strictly construed, so that disclaimer of part of the mark proposed can only be made in the application, and only of devices, words, &c., that are common to the trade.

Semble, user of a distinctive mark on goods lying in the holds of ships which are merely touching at British ports is not sufficient user to acquire a trade-mark here.—In re Meeus's Application, CH.D. CHI., J. 216—[1891] 1 Ch. 41; 60 L. J. Ch. 96; 63 L. T. 610.

7. Registration—Old mark—"Special and distinctive word" — "User" — Combination with other marks—Separation of marks—Composite mark—Registration—Trade-Marks Registration Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 91), s. 10—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57)—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 10.—In 1882 Heidsieck & Co., a French firm of champagne growers, registered under the Trade-Marks Registration Act, 1875, the words "Monopole" and "Dry Monopole" as separate trade-marks for separate kinds of champagne, on the ground of user of those marks before the Act; but they never had, in fact, used those words alone as marks; for upon the labels, wrappers, and corks, and cases for their bottles they had always used them in conjunction with the name of the firm, "Heidsieck & Co.," which they also registered by itself in 1882 as a trade-mark under the Act; and upon the corks and cases there were besides various devices which had been registered as trade-marks under the Act. On the cases "Monopole" or "Dry Monopole" appeared on one side alone, while on another side was "Heidsieck & Co." alone, and on one of the ends was one of the firm's registered devices alone. The firm sold other brands of champagne under distinctive registered labels, bearing the name of the particular brand, and always the names of the firm underneath.

Upon a motion under the Act of 1875 and the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Acts, 1883 and 1888, to expunge "Monopole" and "Dry Monopole" from the register of trade-marks,

Held, by Kay, J., and by the Court of Appeal, that those words had not been so "used as trade-marks before the passing of the Act" within the meaning of section 10 of the Act of 1875 as to entitle Heidsieck & Co. to have them registered; and they were acccordingly ordered to be expunged from the register.

What is "user as a trade-mark" under section 10 of the Act of 1875 explained.

In re Spencer's Trade-Marks, 3 Rep. Pat. Cas. 73, discussed.—Richards v. Butcher, C.A.—[1891] 2 Ch. 522; 60 L. J. Ch. 530.

8. Registration—"Person aggrieved"—Importer—Foreign producer—Natural products—"Distinctive trade-mark"—Part of label pointed out as "trade-mark"—Disclaimer of words in label—"Fancy words"—"Geographical name"—Name of mineral spring—"Place of business—"Common to the trade"—Time for disclaimer — Trade-Marks Registration Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 91), ss. 5, 10—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 90—Amendment of Act while application pending.—The intention of the Trade-Marks Registration Act, 1875, s. 5, and the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, s. 90, in requiring an applicant for rectification of the register of trade-marks to be a "person aggrieved" is only to prevent the interference of common informers, or of persons actuated by merely sentimental notions, and not to require evidence of serious damage.

Any person who is in the same trade as the person who has wrongfully registered a trade-mark, and who desires to deal in goods covered by the wrongful registration, is primâ facie a person aggrieved.

Whenever one trader, by the wrongful registration of a trade-mark, narrows the area of business open to his rivals, and thereby either immediately excludes, or with reasonable probability will in the future exclude, a rival from a portion of the trade into which he desires to enter, that rival is a "person aggrieved."

Although the effect produced, or likely to be produced, by the wrongful registration is not the exclusion, but only the hampering of the rival trader, the rival trader is a "person aggrieved."

Whenever one trader uses the fact of his having a trade-mark already on the register as any part of his case against another trader in any legal proceedings, e.g., for the purpose of supporting an application for the registration of another trade-mark, which the second trader is opposing, the second trader is a "person aggrieved" and none the less because he may have other means of defending himself. A trade-mark must at the date of registration distinguish the goods of the trader registering it from all others.

An importer of foreign goods cannot register as his own the trade-mark of the foreign producer, whether the goods are produced by a course of manufacture or by a process of nature; nor whether the importer has or has not an exclusive contract for this country; nor whether the producer does or does not consent to the registration.

Whether an importer can or cannot register as his own the producer's trade-marks after the importer has acquired the control of the producer's entire output (as to which, quære), the registration by the importer in his own name, while only having a lesser right, of trade-marks belonging to the producer cannot be rendered valid by the subsequent acquisition by the importer of the right to the whole output.

Although in the case of a new trade-mark it will ordinarily be presumed that a mark tendered for registration is intended to be used, yet, if it is proved that a mark which it is sought to register, without prior user, is not intended to be used by the applicant, but that he is an importer of foreign goods, and is only seeking to register the mark for the purpose of excluding from the English market similar goods intended for foreign consumption, and having the mark affixed to them by the foreign producer, whose mark it is, registration ought not to be allowed.

Where a label tendered for registration contains, with other matter, a device to which special attention is directed as being the "trade-mark," registration ought to be refused, on the ground that the effect of the label is likely to be to mislead the public into the belief that the device alone is protected or claimed.

Words contained in a distinctive label registered as a whole under the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, need not be disclaimed under section 74 of that Act, inasmuch as they form a part of the label, and are not additions to it.

Where a trade-mark has been wrongfully registered, and an application to remove it from the register is made by a person aggrieved, the mark will not be allowed to remain on the register, on the ground that if it were removed it could (by reason of some intervening events) be immediately re-registered on a new application, inasmuch as an opportunity must be given to the public by the insertion of the usual advertisements to come in and oppose the new application.

The names of well-known mineral water springs, such as "Apollinaris," "Hunyadi Janos," and "Friedrichshall," are geographical, and are not "fancy words not in common use" within section 64 of the Act of 1883, nor "invented words," or "words having no reference to the character or quality of the goods, and not being a geographical name," within the same section as amended by the Act of 1888, whether sought to be registered in respect of the waters of the springs or of products of those waters.

Per Kekewich, J.: The names of foreign springs, when added to a trade-mark tendered for registration under the Act of 1888 by a limited company with a registered office in England, are not protected against the requirement of a disclaimer under sections 64 and 74 of that Act by the exception contained in those sections in favour of a "place of business."

Per Kekewich, J.: Where an application for the registration of a trade-mark was made while the Act of 1883 was in force, but being opposed was not heard until after the amending Act of 1888 had come into force, the applicants were held to be entitled to avail themselves of whichever of the two Acts was the more favourable to their application.

Per Kekewich, J.: "Common to the trade" in section 74 of the Acts of 1883-8 means "open to the trade," and not "in common use in the trade."

Per Kekewich, J.: When a disclaimer is required by section 64 of the Act of 1888, or by section 74 of the Acts of 1883-8, such disclaimer must be made in the application for registration, and cannot be made afterwards.—In re Apollinaris Co.'s Trade-Marks, C.A.—[1891] 2 Ch. 186; 65 L. T. 6.

9. Registration—Similarity—Mode of comparison—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, s. 72.—Where an application for the registration of a trade-mark is opposed by the proprietor of an earlier trade-mark already on the register, on the ground that the new mark has too great a resemblance to the old one, regard must be had to the way in which the new mark will be fairly used in the ordinary course of trade; and if, when so used, the mark will be likely to produce deception, registration will be refused.

An application by F. for the registration of a device of a charging bison, which he used with many other details on wrappers on tins of mustard, being opposed by Messrs. C., the proprietors of a registered device of a "bull's head," which they used with other details on wrappers on tins of mustard very similar to those used by F. and the general style and colouring of the wrappers and some of the details being in common use in the trade,

Held, that F.'s mark, as it would be used, would be calculated to deceive, and that registration must be refused.—In re Farrow's Application, CH.D. STI., J.—63 L. T. 233.

10. Registration—Special and distinctive words used as a trade-mark before the passing of the Act of 1875—Words descriptive of article—Words used in conjunction with other words—Trade-Marks Registration Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 91), s. 10.—To entitle "any special and distinctive word or words" to be registered as a trade-mark under the Trade-Marks Registration Act, 1875, s. 10, they must have been used alone as a trade-mark before the passing of the Act, and not merely in combination with other words. Before the passing of the Trade-Marks Registration Act, 1875, the appellants used the words "Perry Davis' Vegetable Pain Killer" as their trade-mark for a medicine manufactured and sold by them. After the passing of the Act they registered the words "Pain Killer" as their trade-mark under section 10. Upon a motion to amend the register, Held, affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal, that the entry must be removed from the register, the words "Pain Killer" not having been used alone before the passing of the Act.

Held, also, by Lord Halsbury, L.C., and Lord Morris, that the words "Pain Killer" were not special and distinctive words within the meaning of section 10, there being nothing to distinguish goods manufactured by the appellants from goods manufactured by other persons.—Perry Davis & Son v. Harboard, H.L. (E.)—15 App. Cas. 316; 60 L. J. Ch. 16; 63 L. T. 389.

11. Registration — Words calculated to deceive — "Fruit Salt"—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 73.—The respondent applied to register a trade-mark, of which the words "Dunn's Fruit Salt Baking Powder" formed a conspicuous part. The appellant had for many years used the words "Fruit Salt" as his trade-mark for a powder for an effervescing drink, and opposed the application.

Held (Lords Halsbury and Morris dissenting), that the proposed words were calculated to deceive the public, that the registrar had a discretion whether to register or not under section 73 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, and should refuse where it is not clear that the public would not be misled.

Decision of the Court of Appeal reversed.—Eno v. Dunn, H.L. (E.) 161—15 App. Cas. 252; 63 L. T. 6.

TRADE NAME:—

Imitation—Name calculated to deceive—Joint-stock company—Injunction.—W. Edgcumbe Rendle, the patentee of an invention of glass-roofing, carried on business as W. Edgcumbe Rendle & Co. He took his son, J. Edgcumbe Rendle, into the business, and the son agreed not to carry on any opposition business. The father died, giving by his will an interest in the business to his son. The son then started a similar business on his own account, under the name of J. Edgcumbe Rendle & Co., and having got into financial difficulties he assigned his business to his creditors. The son then promoted a company, styled "J. Edgcumbe Rendle & Co. (Limited)," to carry on the business of glass-roofing. The trustees of the father's will having applied for an injunction, Held, that an injunction must be granted to restrain the company and the son from carrying on the business of glass-roofing under that name, as the son, who was not at the time carrying on his business of glass-roofing, had no right to lend his name to a company, which name was calculated to deceive.—Rendle v. J. Edgcumbe Rendle & Co. (Limited), CH.D. KAY, J.—63 L. T. 94.

See PARTNERSHIP, 4.

TRADE UNION:—

Devise to—Mortmain—"Benevolent Fund"—Perpetuity—Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 7—Meaning of "purchase" in.—A testator devised and bequeathed certain freehold and leasehold properties for lives, with a condition that each devisee and legatee should keep the property held by him in repair and pay an annual sum to go to the Benevolent Fund of a registered trade union, for the benefit of distressed members of the society and widows and children of deceased members.

Held, that, the annual sum being a charge connected with land and the nature of the Benevolent Fund being charitable, the gift to it was void as offending against the Statutes of Mortmain.

The word "purchase" in section 7 of the Trade Union Act, 1871, has not the technical meaning of "take otherwise than by descent," and does not include taking by devise.

There is nothing repugnant to the law in an estate being given to a man for the combined periods of his own life and the life of the person who may be his heir.—In re Amos, Carrier v. Price, CH.D. NOR., J. 550—60 L. J. Ch. 570; 65 L. T. 69.

TRAMWAY:—

Repair of road—Contract with road authority to repair—Liability of tramway company—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), ss. 28, 29, 55.—Where a tramway company has entered into an agreement with the road authority under section 29 of the Tramways Act, 1870, whereby the road authority undertakes to maintain and keep in repair the roadway between and adjoining the tramway lines, the tramway company is not liable for injuries to a person caused by the road where the tramway is laid not being maintained in proper repair.

Howitt v. Nottingham Tramway Co., 32 W. R. 248, 12 Q. B. D. 16, followed.—Alldred v. West Metropolitan Tramway Co., C.A. 609—[1891] 2 Q. B. 398; 60 L. J. Q. B. 631; 65 L. T. 138.

See CONTRACT, 4; LOCAL GOVERNMENT, 4.

TRESPASS:—

Accidental injury—Shooting—Negligence.—In the absence of negligence a man who accidentally shoots another is not liable in an action of trespass.—Stanley v. Powell, Q.B.D. 76—[1891] 1 Q. B. 86; 60 L. J. Q. B. 52; 63 L. T. 809.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 7.

TROVER:—

Title of plaintiff to sue—Trustee—Possession by cestui que trust*—Auctioneers, under what circumstances liable—Practice—Calling opposite party as a witness when permitted.*—Trustees can maintain an action for wrongful conversion of chattels which were in possession of their cestui que trust under the provisions of a trust instrument, his possession being in law their possession for this purpose. In such a case a defendant cannot set up, by way of defence, the title of a third person, who has not asserted or who has waived his claim to the chattels.

A broker or auctioneer who only settles the price as between vendor and purchaser, receiving commission for so doing, is not liable as for wrongful conversion if the vendor is not entitled to sell the goods. Secus, if the broker or auctioneer receives the goods into his own custody, and, on selling them, delivers them to the purchaser with the intention of passing the property in them.

Turner v. Hockey, 56 L. J. Q. B. 301, 35 W. R. Dig. 209, commented on.

After a defendant's case was closed, the defendant himself not having been called as a witness in support of it, an application by plaintiff's counsel to call him as a witness refused, it being admitted that plaintiff's counsel had not been led by any misrepresentation to suppose that the defendant would be called.—Barker v. Furlong, CH.D. ROM., J. 621—[1891] 2 Ch. 172; 60 L. J. Ch. 368; 64 L. T. 411.

TRUCK ACTS.—See MASTER AND SERVANT, 5, 7.

TRUST.—See ASSIGNMENT OF DEBT; CHARITY, 2; INFANT, 6.

TRUST INVESTMENT ACT, 1889.—See TRUSTEE, 10.

TRUSTEE:—

1. Breach of trust—Contributory mortgage—Sale of trust funds—Liability of trustees to replace stock sold—Consent of tenant for life to investment.—The trustees of a settlement had power to invest the trust funds "in their names" in Government or real securities, and to vary investments with the consent in writing of the tenant for life. In 1875 they sold a sum of Consols and other stock forming part of the trust fund, and with the consent of the tenant for life invested the proceeds of sale in a contributory mortgage of real estate, which was effected in the names of themselves and the persons advancing the remainder of the money. In 1879 a mortgage in the names of the trustees only was substituted for the contributory mortgage, but the consent in writing of the tenant for life was not previously obtained, although upon hearing of the change of investment he did not make any objection thereto. Upon the death of the tenant for life the money on mortgage was called in. The whole of the principal invested was forthcoming, but the remaindermen, who were entitled to the capital, claimed that the trustees ought to replace the sums of stock sold in 1875, which at that time stood at a lower price than in 1887, when the proceedings were commenced.

Held, that the sale in 1875 was improper, as having been made for the purpose of effecting another investment which was a breach of trust as not being in the names of the trustees solely, and that the investment of 1879 was also a breach of trust, as the previous consent of the tenant for life after the facts were fully laid before him was not obtained, and that consequently the trustees were liable either to replace the stock sold, or to pay the difference in price of the stock sold in 1875, and of the same amount of stock at the time of the commencement of the proceedings.

Decision of Kay, J. (60 L. T. N. S. 620), affirmed.—In re Massingberd's Settlement, Clark v. Trelawney, C.A.—63 L. T. 296.

2. Breach of trust—Enforcement of payment of trust funds—Default.—A testator by will gave his son in succession the option of purchasing his leasehold mill at a valuation, the purchase-money being payable by half-yearly instalments. The son purchasing was to execute a mortgage. The sale moneys were to be invested, the trustees having discretion to invest in certain securities, or, in case either of the sons elected to carry on the testator's business, upon the security of the mill. The eldest bought the mill, which was valued at £50,000, the trustees agreeing to take payment in half-yearly instalments of £2,000, and the son executed a mortgage of the mill for £50,000. Further capital being wanted for the business a company was formed which purchased the property comprised in the mortgage, at a slight advance in price, and the equity of redemption was assigned to it. The company having failed,

Held, that the trustees were authorized to take the mortgage for £50,000; and that under the circumstances of the case they acted honestly and to the best of their ability, and were not, therefore, liable to make good the loss.—In re Hurst, Addison v. Topp, CH.D. CHI., J.—63 L. T. 665.

3. Breach of trust—Following assets—Statute of Limitations—Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), s. 8 (1) a, b, (3)—Parties—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, r. 8.—An action for breach of trust was brought by a newly-appointed trustee against the survivor of the former trustees and the representatives of two deceased former trustees to make them replace trust money, lost through investments made (more than six years before the action) without proper valuations and on insufficient securities. The executor of G., one of the deceased trustees, had, after duly issuing the statutory advertisements, administered his testator's estate, and then retained the balance as trustee of certain trust legacies, which it was insufficient to pay in full. The court gave leave at the trial to amend the statement of claim so as to make the action one against G.'s executor as a trustee, and not merely as an executor, and so that the amount retained for the legacies might be followed in his hands; but such amendment was allowed only upon the terms that the action was to be treated as commenced on the day of the trial, and that the defence was to be treated as amended so as to allow G.'s executor to claim the benefit of any statutes of limitation.

Held, that the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8, sub-section (1) (b), did apply to the case, though sub-section (1) (a) did not.

Held, also, that, in view of R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, r. 8, the beneficiaries entitled to the legacies were not necessary parties to an action to follow the legacies in the hands of a trustee.—In re Bowden, Andrew v. Cooper, CH.D. FRY, L.J. 219—45 Ch. D. 444; 59 L. J. Ch. 815.

4. Breach of trust — Indemnity — Instigation of cestui que trust—Married woman—Reversionary interest—Impounding interest—"Beneficiary in the trust estate"—Trustee Act, 1888, s. 6.—R. was entitled absolutely in remainder to the trust funds of his mother's marriage settlement, which she had appointed to him by deed, subject to her own life interest. By his own marriage settlement R. covenanted to pay £10,000 to his trustees within six months after his mother's death, and, in case of his death in his mother's lifetime, that his executors should pay his trustees, during his mother's life, £400 per annum, to be applied as if it were income of the £10,000. R. took the first life interest under his settlement, with remainder to his wife for life. R. assigned to his trustees, as security, the trust funds of his mother's settlement. The trustees of the mother's settlement had notice of the assignment. R. having become embarrassed, the trustees of the mother's settlement were induced, on the entreaty of R., his mother, and his wife, to apply a large portion of the trust funds in discharge of R.'s debts. The trustees of R.'s settlement brought an action against the trustees of the mother's settlement for breach of trust, claiming that they might replace the funds. The defendants counter-claimed (inter alia) that the interest of R. and his wife in the funds might be impounded and declared liable to indemnify them.

Held, (1) that there was no right of imdemnity to the defendants out of the interest of either R. or his wife under R.'s settlement, such interest not being an interest of a "beneficiary in the trust estate" of which the defendants were trustees, so as to come within the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 6; (2) that, even if the interest of R.'s wife had been such an interest, the court would not in its discretion under the Act have impounded it, there having been no misrepresentation on the part of R.'s wife, and as the defendants must be taken to know that she could not validly deal with her reversionary interest.—Ricketts v. Ricketts, CH.D. ROM., J.—64 L. T. 263.

5. Confirmation of Sales Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 108)—Petition—Power of sale—Minerals apart from surface — Beneficiaries — Service. — Petition under the Confirmation of Sales Act by trustees with an absolute power of sale for the sanction of the court to the sale of minerals apart from the surface. The beneficiaries, who were all infants, were not made parties to the petition.

The court made the order without directing service on the beneficiaries.—In re Wadsworth's Trust, CH.D. KAY, J.—63 L. T. 217.

6. Discretion—Gift of income to A.—Cesser on assignment or bankruptcy—Discretionary trust to apply income for the benefit of A. only—A discretionary trust to apply income for the benefit of a cestui que trust, arising upon cesser of his life interest by assignment or bankruptcy, may be exercised by the trustees, notwithstanding that the cestui que trust is the only object of the discretionary trust.

A testatrix directed trustees to stand possessed of a fund upon trust to pay the income to T. W. B. during his life, or until he should become a bankrupt or liquidating debtor, or should cease to be entitled to receive such income for his own benefit: and, in case any of those events happened, then "to pay to him or apply for his benefit during the remainder of his life" either the whole or so much only of the said income as the trustees should, in their uncontrolled discretion, think fit, and, "subject to the aforesaid interest," upon trust for other beneficiaries. T. W. B. assigned his interest, and subsequently became bankrupt.

Held, that the trustees might, in the exercise of their discretion, expend the whole or any part of the income for the maintenance of T. W. B., and that any part not so applied by them went to the persons entitled under the gift over.

Semble, that payment of the debts of T. W. B. might be an application of the income for his maintenance.—In re Bullock, Good v. Lickorish, CH.D. KEK., J. 472—60 L. J. Ch. 341; 64 L. T. 736.

7. Investment—"Company incorporated by Act of Parliament"—Charter granted in pursuance of a statute.—By an Act of Parliament the Crown was empowered to grant a charter of incorporation to a marine insurance company, with certain special privileges and limitations. In pursuance of this Act the Crown granted a charter to the London Assurance. By a subsequent Act the capital stocks of the London Assurance and another corporation were amalgamated, and the name and seal of the London Assurance were to be used for both corporations, and the London Assurance was to exercise the powers of both corporations.

A trustee of a will, who had power to invest in shares of "any company incorporated by Act of Parliament," invested in shares of the London Assurance.

Held, that the London Assurance was a company incorporated by Act of Parliament within the meaning of the investmet clause.

Semble, that if the London Assurance had not been originally within the terms of the investment clause, it would not have come within the terms by virtue of the subsequent Act amalgamating its stock with that of another corporation and enlarging its powers.—Elve v. Boyton, C.A.—[1891] 1 Ch. 501; 60 L. J. Ch. 383; 64 L. T. 482.

8. Investment—"Railway or other public company"—Ejusdem generis.—A testator directed his trustees to invest the residue of his estate (inter alia) "upon the debentures or securities of any railway or other public company carrying on business in any part of the United Kingdom." The trustees proposed to invest in the securities of certain companies incorporated under the Companies Acts.

Held, that the companies having been incorporated by public statute, the instruments forming their constitution being accessible to the public, and their shares being transferable to the public, they were public companies within the investment clause; and that the reference to railway companies in the same clause did not restrict the meaning of the words "public companies."

The decision of Stirling, J., affirmed.—In re Sharp, Rickett v. Sharp, C.A.—45 Ch. D. 286; 60 L. J. Ch. 38; 62 L. T. 677.

9. Investment—Power to trustees to continue money in business—Pressure by trustees for money due to trust estate—Postponement of investment—Discretion.—A testator, who died in 1872, had by his will bequeathed a legacy of £1,000 in trust for G. R. J., and by a codicil, which recited that he desired his widow after his death to enter into the business then carried on by him in partnership with D., and that the bulk of his property was invested as capital in the said business, the testator had empowered his trustees to invest or continue invested moneys in their hands as trustees in the aforesaid business, or any other business in which they, in their uncontrolled discretion, might think fit, without being liable for loss. D. and M. J. were appointed executors and trustees. The widow entered into partnership with D. in the business for ten years from the 1st of January, 1873. The £1,000 was left in the business during and after the said term of ten years. In June, 1883, the widow having then left the business, D. filed a petition for liquidation of his affairs, and a composition of 10s. in the pound was agreed to, payable by three instalments—on the 2nd of January, 1884, the 2nd of April, 1884, and the 2nd of October, 1884. Only one instalment was received by the trustee, M. J., and it was not invested, but placed on deposit at a bank. No pressure was made for payment of the unpaid instalments. G. R. J., having come of age, brought an action against the trustee M. J. and others seeking relief on the ground of breaches of trust.

Held, as regards M. J., (1) that the not calling in the £1,000 on the widow's retirement from the partnership was not a breach of trust, but that, on the true construction of the codicil, the power was not restricted to lending to any particular partners in the business; (2) that the not calling in or pressing for payment of the two instalments unpaid was not a breach of trust, the trustee, M. J., not having been guilty of negligence, but having acted honestly in the belief that pressure would not have resulted in benefit to the estate, and with a reasonable ground for acting as he did; (3) that having regard to the fact that the loss of income, if any, through non-investment of the first instalment was very small, coupled with the probability, then existing, of another instalment being shortly received, when both might be invested together, it would be going too far to make an order on that head against the trustee M. J., who acted on his solicitor's advice in placing the money on deposit at a bank instead of investing it.—In re Earl, Johnson v. Davies, CH.D. ROM., J. 107.

10. Investment—Power to vary existing investments—Trust Investment Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 32), ss. 3, 6.—In the absence of any express prohibition in the instrument creating the trust, the power to vary investments given by section 3 of the Trust Investment Act, 1889, applies as well to investments—of the classes specified in sub-sections (a) to (o) of that section—existing prior to, or not made under, the Act of 1889, as to investments made under the powers given by that Act.

In re Manchester Royal Infirmary, 38 W. R. 460, 43 Ch. D. 420, disapproved on this point.—In re Dick, Lopes v. Hume-Dick, C.A. 225—[1891] 1 Ch. 423; 60 L. J. Ch. 177; 64 L. T. 32.

11. New trustees—Power of appointing new trustees—Exercise of power by co-heiress of last surviving trustee—"Acting" trustee—"Bare" trustee—Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 5—Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 76), s. 48.—A power of appointing new trustees was given by deed in 1836 to "the acting trustee for the time being" of the indenture. The last acting trustee, T. P., died intestate, leaving his son T. H. P. his heir-at-law, who subsequently died intestate, leaving his son T. H. S. P. his heir-at-law. He died intestate in 1876, leaving his three daughters his co-heiresses. The three co-heiresses executed the power of appointing new trustees contained in the deed of 1836.

Held, that this was a valid execution of the power, the trust estate having devolved on the three daughters as co-heiresses of the last surviving trustee; these having shown themselves "acting" trustees by exercising this power, and the legal estate having descended to them from their father, who, as a trustee with active duties to perform, was more than a "bare trustee" within the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, and the Land Transfer Act, 1875.

Christie v. Ovington, 24 W. R. 204, 1 Ch. D. 279, followed, in preference to Morgan v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority, 27 W. R. 283, 9 Ch. D. 582.—In re Cunningham and Frayling's Contract, CH.D. STI., J. 469—[1891] 2 Ch. 567; 60 L. J. Ch. 591; 64 L. T. 558.

12. Remuneration—Administration action—Trustees appointed by the court to receive rents and to manage estate with commission upon rental—Commission to rent collector.—Trustees who have been appointed by the court to receive the rents of, and to manage a trust estate, receiving a commission upon the rental, will not be allowed to charge additional payments made by them to a collector of rents.—Cox v. Bennett (No. 1), C.A. 308.

13. Trustee Relief Act—Payment into court—Affidavit—Notice to persons interested—Trustee Relief Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 96)—Chancery Funds Consolidated Rules, 1874, r. 34—Chancery Funds Amended Orders, 1874, ord. 5—Supreme Court Funds Rules, 1884, rr. 2, 41—Supreme Court Funds Rules, 1886, rr. 2, 41.—Under the present practice (dating in this respect from the 1st of March, 1884) a trustee who pays money into court under the Trustee Relief Act, being no longer required to state in his affidavit the names of the persons interested, need not serve them with notice of such payment in, the Chancery Funds Amended Orders, 1874, ord. 5, which directed such notice, being, as from such date, rendered nugatory owing to the repeal of the Chancery Funds Consolidated Rules, 1874, by the Supreme Court Funds Rules, 1884, r. 2.

In re Stening, 50 L. T. N. S. 586, 32 W. R. Dig. 217, explained and distinguished.

Quære, whether the Chancery Funds Amended Orders, 1874, ord. 5, is repealed by the Supreme Court Funds Rules, 1886, r. 2.—In re Graham's Trust, CH.D. CHI., J. 157—[1891] 1 Ch. 151; 60 L. J. Ch. 98; 63 L. T. 664.

See also ADMINISTRATION, 1, 6, 8; LANDLORD AND TENANT, 11; PRACTICE (PARTIES), 48; SETTLED LAND ACT, 1; SOLICITOR, 17; TROVER; VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 2; WILL, 11, 24, 25.

TRUSTEE ACT, 1888.—See PARTNERSHIP, 3; SOLICITOR, 17; TRUSTEE, 3, 4.

TRUSTEE RELIEF ACT.—See TRUSTEE, 13.

ULTRA VIRES.—See COMPANY (SHARES), 26; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, 4.

UNDUE INFLUENCE:—

Execution of deed—Married woman—Threat to prosecute husband.—The plaintiff's husband, who was the secretary of a land society, misappropriated the moneys of the society. The plaintiff brought an action to set aside a mortgage of her own property to the trustees of the society to secure the moneys so misappropriated, on the ground that the mortgage was obtained under threats of a criminal prosecution against the husband.

The court ordered the deed to be cancelled, on the ground that, though there might have been no threat, it was present to the mind of the plaintiff and of the trustees that the husband would be liable to a prosecution unless something was done; that this knowledge came to her either directly or indirectly from the trustees; and that the deed was executed by her to free the husband from a prosecution.—M'Clatchie v. Haslam, CH.D. KEK., J.—63 L. T. 376.

UNIVERSITY:—

1. College—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845—Application of purchase-money—Universities and College Estates Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 44), ss. 27, 28—Universities and College Estates Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 46), ss. 2, 4—Board of Agriculture Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 30), s. 2, sub-section 1 (b).—The consent of the Board of Agriculture must be obtained to the application of money in court representing college lands taken by a company under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, in pursuance of the Universities and College Estates Amendment Act, 1880, ss. 2, 4.—Ex parte King's College, Cambridge, CH.D. NOR., J. 331—[1891] 1 Ch. 333; 60 L. J. Ch. 508; 64 L. T. 623.

2. College—Erection of new buildings—Application of purchase-money of land paid into court under Lands Clauses Consolidation Act—Repayment by instalments—Universities and College Estates Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 44), ss. 27, 28—Universities and College Estates Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 46), ss. 2, 4—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 69.—The effects of sections 27 and 28 of the Universities and College Estates Act, 1858, in conjunction with sections 2 and 4 of the Universities and College Estates Amendment Act, 1880, is to provide, in the case of land belonging to a university or a college which is taken compulsorily under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, another mode of investment of the purchase-money in addition to those mentioned in section 69 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.—Ex parte King's College, Cambridge (No. 2), CH.D. NOR., J.—[1891] 1 Ch. 677; 60 L. J. Ch. 508; 64 L. T. 623.

UNREGISTERED COMPANY. — See BUILDING SOCIETY, 4.

VALUATION (METROPOLIS) ACT, 1869.—See POOR RATE, 1.

VALUERS.—See MORTGAGE, 14.

VENDOR and PURCHASER:—

1. Conditions of sale—Misleading condition—Condition requiring purchaser to assume facts believed to be true — Non-disclosure of dependence of title on facts to be assumed.—The title of persons, claiming under a trustee of real property, to the beneficial ownership (under the doctrine of Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden. 177) of the same property (the trusts affecting it having become exhausted in 1876) depended on the death intestate without heirs before 1870 of the original settlor, who was believed (though legal proof was wanting) to have so died in 1851; and no claim had in fact ever been made by anyone as his heir. The property was sold in 1890 under conditions of sale one of which required the purchaser to assume that the settlor did in fact die before 1870 intestate and without an heir; but the condition contained nothing to show that the title depended entirely on the facts which the purchaser was required to assume, or to explain how or why it so depended. A vendor and purchaser summons having been taken out, the vendor and his solicitor deposed to their belief that the facts were as the purchaser was required to assume.

Held (affirming the decision of Bristowe, V.C.), that, under the circumstances, the condition was not a misleading one, but was aptly and properly framed to prevent the purchaser from insisting on proof of what was then, and was still, believed to be the fact (though the vendor was not in a position to furnish legal proof of it), and that the condition was accordingly binding on the purchaser.—In re Sandbach and Edmondson's Contract, C.A. 193—[1891] 1 Ch. 99; 60 L. J. Ch. 60; 63 L. T. 797.

2. Conditions of sale—Right to rescind—Costs of investigating title—"Notwithstanding previous litigation"—Will—Devise to trustee "if and when he shall return to England."—The words "notwithstanding any previous negotiation or litigation" in a condition of sale stipulating that the vendor should be at liberty to annul the sale if unable to satisfy any objection insisted on by the purchaser, cannot be construed as including litigation in which a judicial decision adverse to the vendor has been actually given. Consequently, when, on a vendor and purchaser summons, an order had been made declaring that the vendor had not shown a good title, and directing him to pay the purchaser the costs of investigating the title, Held, that it was then no longer open to the vendor to avail himself of the above condition.

A testator who died in 1877 appointed B., "now residing at Adelaide, Australia, if and when he shall return to England," and C., executors and trustees of his will, and devised real estate to his said trustees on trust for sale. The will was proved by C., with power reserved to grant probate to B. if and when he returned to England. B., at the time of the testator's death, and down to and at the present time, was domiciled in Australia, but in 1885 he came on a visit to England for the benefit of his health, and stayed there six months, after which he returned to his home in Australia. B. never proved the will, and although in 1879 he had indicated an intention to act as trustee, he had not, during his visit to England or since, assented to the devise or taken any part in the administration of the trusts of the will, but he had not actually disclaimed.

Held, that, under the above circumstances, the condition "if and when he shall return to England" had been satisfied by B.; and, consequently, that the trusteeship had become vested in him in 1885.—In re Arbib's and Glass's Contract, C.A. 305—[1891] 1 Ch. 601; 60 L. J. Ch. 263; 64 L. T. 217.

3. Conditions of sale—Prior voluntary settlement.—A purchaser may be precluded by a condition of sale from making any objection or requisition to the vendors' title in respect of a voluntary settlement previously executed by the vendor.

A purchaser for value, though precluded as above, is entitled to proof that the settlement, though voluntary in its inception, has not been set up by an ex post facto consideration.—Small v. Torley, M.R. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 388.

4. Conditions of sale—Time of essence of contract—Subsequent negotiations—Waiver—Defect in title.—A vendor offered for sale his interest in a farm, one of the conditions of sale providing that, if the title were approved, possession should be given on or before May 10, 1889, and if, through the default of the vendor, the sale was not closed by May 20, the agreement should be void. The lands were pasture lands, and unless the purchaser could get possession so as to stock the lands by the end of May, they would be valueless to him for the season, and the vendor was aware of this. Negotiations were proceeding between the parties after May 24 for the completion of the purchase, when a deed was discovered by the purchaser on searching the Registry of Deeds affecting the title not disclosed on the abstract. The vendor explained the omission and proposed to remedy the defect in the title, which, however, would necessitate the adoption of a new root of title and further investigation; but the purchaser refused to complete.

Held (affirming the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, 25 L. R. Ir. 342), that the continuance of the negotiations after the time fixed for completion did not amount to a waiver of the condition; that under the circumstances time was of the essence of the contract; and that the purchaser ought not to be compelled to complete.—Dyas v. Rooney, C.A. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 4.

5. Contract—Specific performance—Contract contained in letters—Subsequent negotiation—Contract to sell freehold—Minerals found not to belong to vendor—Right of purchaser to rescind before time for completion—Rights of vendor to specific performance or damages on acquisition of minerals prior to time for completion—Damages.—D. offered by letter to purchase from B. (assuming the title to be satisfactory) the freehold of a house, with about a quarter of an acre of land, with possession at a fixed date (beyond which nothing was said about the time for completion), and B. accepted that offer by letter. B.'s solicitor subsequently attempted to introduce into the contract some additional terms, which, however, he ultimately abandoned. In the meantime, D.'s solicitor, having discovered that the minerals under the property, which was enfranchised copyhold, belonged to the lord of the manor, and not to the vendor, wrote that he could not advise his client to go on with the matter. D. adopted this advice of his solicitor, and neither of them ever receded from that position. Before the day fixed for delivery of possession the lord had agreed to convey the minerals to the vendor, but they were not actually conveyed till more than two months after that day. The vendor had in the meantime commenced an action for specific performance and (alternatively) for damages for breach of contract.

Held, first, that, assuming (without deciding the question) that there was a concluded agreement, the purchaser was not bound to wait till the day fixed for delivery of possession, which, in the circumstances of this case, was the end of a reasonable time, for the completion of the contract, but was entitled to rescind the contract as soon as he found that the vendor had not got what he had contracted to sell; and held, that the contract was in fact so rescinded by the conduct of the defendant and his solicitor.

Held, secondly, that, as the plaintiff was not in a position to carry out his contract on the said day fixed for delivery of possession, he could not maintain an action for damages for breach of contract.

Whether he could have done so if he had been in a position to carry out his contract on that day, quære.

Hoggart v. Scott, 1 Russ. & My. 293; Forrer v. Nash, 14 W. R. 8, 35 Beav. 167; In re Head's Trustees, 38 W. R. 657, 45 Ch. D. 310; and Weston v. Savage, 27 W. R. 654, 10 Ch. D. 736, followed.

Decision of North, J. (45 Ch. D. 481, 34 S. J. 638), affirmed.—Bellamy v. Debenham, C.A. 257—[1891] 1 Ch. 412; 60 L. J. Ch. 166; 64 L. T. 478.

6. Contract—Specific performance—Purchaser in possession—Title accepted—Purchaser's option to pay purchase-money into court or give up possession—Interest.—The underlessee of some property contracted to purchase it, paid a deposit, and accepted the title. By the contract the day fixed for completion was the date of the expiration of the lease, and the purchaser was to pay interest on the purchase-money in default of completion. The purchaser remained in possession, but refused to complete or pay the purchase-money; he claimed to be in possession under the sub-lease, not under the contract, and now offered to pay rent. On motion for an order on the purchaser to pay the purchase-money into court, Held, that the purchaser had an option, and must elect to pay the purchase-money into court within a month or to give up possession; and, if he should give up possession, that he must pay interest on the purchase-money at four per cent. from the day fixed for completion.

There is no rule that a purchaser in possession loses this option by accepting the title.—Greenwood v. Turner, CH.D. KEK., J. 315—[1891] 1 Ch. 144; 60 L. J. Ch. 351; 64 L. T. 261.

7. Sale under order of court—Conditions as to possession—Conditions of tenancy—Non-payment of rent by outgoing tenant—Distress by receiver—Statute of 8 Anne, c. 18, s. 7.—P. was yearly tenant of a farm under a written agreement, which provided (inter alia) that, in the last year of his tenancy, he should consume on the farm all the hay, &c., produced thereon; that he should stack in the barns and rick yards all the corn, grain, and hay produced, and the hay, straw, &c., were to be consumed by cattle, and the dung, &c., to be left on the premises, for which purpose he was to have the use of the barns and yards necessary until the 25th of March next after the end of the tenancy; that the landlord or the incoming tenant should be at liberty to enter upon the lands and prepare them for seeds, &c.; that the tenant should also leave for the landlord or incoming tenant "all the hay, straw, and roots remaining unconsumed, being paid or allowed for the same"; and that, at the end of the tenancy, the landlord or the incoming tenant should allow to him for the manure and other things done, and "for the unconsumed hay, straw, and roots."

The farm was sold under the order of the court to A., subject to "such tenant right as the occupier might be entitled to on quitting"; and by one of the conditions the purchaser was to pay the balance of his purchase-money on or before the 29th of September, 1890; and upon payment he was to be entitled to possession of the farm as from the 29th of September, from which day he was to pay all outgoings.

P.'s tenancy expired at Michaelmas, 1890. A. paid his purchase-money into court on the 13th of October, 1890, and he was let into possession, but only on the terms of the above contract of tenancy, and no conveyance had been executed. The rent payable by P. at Michaelmas, 1890, had not been paid; and on the 24th of October a distress was put in by H., the receiver appointed in the action, and under it certain stacks of hay and straw produced during the last year of the tenancy were seized.

A. moved for an injunction to restrain the receiver from remaining in possession of, or from removing or selling any of, the distrained goods.

Held, that the legal reversioners were entitled to distrain on the goods of the tenant, but were in equity trustees for the purchaser, and could not exercise their rights so as to prevent his enjoying every benefit of his ownership.

Held, also, that the statute of 8 Anne, c. 18, did not apply to such a case.—In re Powers, Manisty v. Archdale, CH.D. STI., J. 185—63 L. T. 626.

8. Title—Defect not disclosed by abstract—Restrictive covenant—Discovery of restriction by purchaser after expiration of time for delivering requisitions upon abstract.—A purchaser at a sale by auction discovered that a deed immediately preceding the deed which, by the conditions of sale, was made the root of title, and which gave a title of thirty-eight years only, contained a restrictive covenant affecting the right of building upon part of the property purchased by him, which covenant was not disclosed by the abstract. The discovery was made after the expiration of the time fixed for delivering requisitions upon the abstract. The purchaser did not immediately acquaint the vendor with his objection to the restrictive covenant, but, the vendor's replies to the requisitions sent in not being satisfactory, the purchaser took out a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, for a declaration that the requisitions had not been sufficiently answered, and that a good title had not been shown to the property, and in his affidavit in support of the summons stated his objection with respect to the restrictive covenant.

Held, that the objection was not taken too late, and that it was a good objection to the title.—In re Cox and Neve's Contract, CH.D. NOR., J. 412—[1891] 2 Ch. 109; 64 L. T. 733.

9. Title—Power of executrix to apply proceeds of property for her own benefit—Agreement that she should sell part for her own benefit and settle remainder—All the property vested in executrix and another person as trustees—Power to mortgage the part which the executrix had power to sell under the agreement.—R. by his will appointed his wife sole executrix, with power to appoint another person to assist her in carrying out the trusts of the will, and gave her certain leasehold houses during her widowhood, with power to sell, mortgage, or lease any part thereof, and to apply the money to her own use, and subject thereto he gave the same on certain trusts in favour of his children. R. died in 1883. By indenture of the 31st of October, 1887, between the widow and other beneficiaries under the will, it was agreed that the widow should appoint another person to act with her in the trusts of the will, and that she should, prior to such appointment, sell the leaseholds and apply the money as therein mentioned. The leaseholds were not sold according to this agreement, but the widow, by indenture of the 8th of December, 1887, appointed W. to act with her as co-trustee, and vested the leaseholds in themselves jointly, and by indenture dated the 19th of May, 1888, they mortgaged the leaseholds to the defendant. He afterwards contracted as mortgagee to sell a part of the leaseholds to the plaintiff, who refused to complete the purchase, and sued the defendant for the return of his deposit. Romer, J., held that the title was one which the court would not force on a purchaser.

Held, that the widow and W. had power to mortgage the leaseholds, and that the defendant could make a good title to them.

Decision of Romer, J. (63 L. T. N. S. 695), reversed.—Saxby v. Thomas, C.A.—64 L. T. 65.

See also REVENUE, 12; TRUSTEE, 11.

VESTRY.—See METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS, 4, 7; NEGLIGENCE, 3.

VICTORIA, LAW of:—

1. Chinese Act, 1881, s. 3—Aliens—Collector of customs.—By section 3 of the Victorian Chinese Act, 1881, a Chinese immigrant has no legal right to land in the colony until a sum of £10 has been paid for him.

Where the master of a vessel had committed an offence under the Act by bringing a greater number of Chinese immigrants into a port of the Colony than the Act allowed,

Held, that the collector of customs was under no legal obligation to accept payment tendered by the master on behalf of any such immigrants, nor when tendered either by or for any individual immigrant.

Held, further, that, apart from the Act, an alien has not a legal right enforceable by action to enter British territory.—Musgrove v. Chun Teeong Toy, P.C.—[1891] A. C. 272; 60 L. J. P. C. 28; 64 L. T. 378.

2. Public Service Act, 1883, s. 49—Powers of classifiers—Construction—Junior assistant.—Where, under Victorian Public Service Act, 1883, s. 49, every school teacher employed in a State school at the date of the Act was directed to be classified as in the Act provided, and the classifiers thereunder assigned to the respondent the status of a junior assistant,

Held, that, according to the true construction of the Act, the respondent not being in point of fact at the date of the Act a junior assistant, could not legally be classified as such; but that, having had at that time a definite status as assistant teacher, she was entitled to be classified accordingly.

The term "junior assistant" was not interpreted by the Act, and did not denote any denomination of teacher existing at its date, and there was no power under the Act to apply the term to the respondent so as to alter her position.—Main v. Stark, P.C.—15 App. Cas. 384; 59 L. J. P. C. 68; 63 L. T. 10.

3. Transfer of Land Statute—Forged transfer—Fictitious transferee—Forged mortgage—Effect of registration.—The Victorian "Transfer of Land Statute" protects those who derive a registered title bonâ fide and for value from a registered owner. Accordingly they need not investigate the title of such owner, for they are not affected by its infirmities. But they must ascertain at their own peril his existence and identity, the authority of any agent to act for him, and the validity of the deed under which they claim.

The name of a registered owner having been removed in favour of a fictitious and non-existing transferee as the result of a forged transfer, a mortgage purporting to have been executed by such transferee was subsequently put upon the register by a bonâ fide mortgagee.

In a suit by the true owner against the registrar, the mortgagees, and the perpetrator of the fraud.

Held, (a) that the plaintiff's name must be restored to the register; (b) that the mortgage was invalid, and did not, in favour of the mortgagee, constitute an incumbrance on the plaintiff's title, though under the Act it would have that effect in favour of a bonâ fide registered assignee thereof.—Gibbs v. Messer, P.C.—[1891] A. C. 248; 60 L. J. P. C. 20; 64 L. T. 237.

VIVISECTION.—See CHARITY, 1.

VOLUNTARY SETTLEMENT.—See BANKRUPTCY, 39; SETTLEMENT, 6; VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 3.

VOTERS.—See PARLIAMENT, 1-13.

WAIVER. — See COMPANY, 7; SOLICITOR, 14; VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 4.

WARRANTY.—See ADULTERATION, 3.

WASTE :—

Timber—Timber estate—Custom—Tenant for life and remainderman.—The owners of an estate had for years periodically cut beech trees (beech being by local custom timber), cutting the older trees to make room for the younger ones, so as to maintain a continual succession of trees, which were sold for the purposes of a local industry.

Held, that a tenant for life impeachable for waste did not commit waste by continuing the periodical cuttings, and that the proceeds thereof belonged to the tenant for life.—Dashwood v. Magniac, CH.D. CHI., J.—60 L. J. Ch. 210; 64 L. T. 99.

WATERCOURSE :—

Nuisance—Pollution of steam—Prescription—Act unlawful by statute—Repeal of statute—Previous user.—The Irish statute, 11 Eliz. sess. 3, c. 5, prohibiting the steeping of flax in any stream was repealed in 1878. In 1888 a lower riparian proprietor brought an action against a higher riparian proprietor to restrain him from permitting water in which flax had been steeped to flow into the stream, and the defendant pleaded a right by user.

Held, that the acts done during the operation of the statute could not confer rights, and that the period of enjoyment commenced to run when the statute was repealed.

The general rule that a man cannot prescribe against a statute means that prescription cannot be proved by acts prohibited by statute.

The prescription must be one which could have had a legal origin, and the right must be such that it could have been lawfully granted by the owner of the servient tenement to the owner of the dominant tenement; and if such a grant would have been unlawful either at common law or by statute, it cannot be presumed, and the claim of right cannot be supported by the continuance of acts, thus unlawful, for any length of time.—Traill v. M'Allister, V.C. (Ir.)—25 L. R. Ir. 524.

See also NUISANCE, 3.

WATERWORKS :—

1. Minerals—Reservoir—Compensation for minerals not workable—Prospective injury to mine—Apprehended injury—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 6, 22, 25, 27.—A special Act incorporating the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, empowered the making of a reservoir in lands containing coal mines. The waterworks undertakers having given the mine owners notice to treat for part of the coal, the mine owners claimed compensation (to be settled by arbitration) not only for the value of the land to be taken (as to which no question arose) but also for injurious affection and prospective damage. The arbitrator found that the workings of the mine owners had not as yet approached the reservoir so as to cause any present risk to the mines from the existence of the reservoir; that if the mine owners were free to work their mines without risk of interruption from the undertakers' work, they could and would have got the whole of a certain seam of coal under the reservoir and within forty yards of the boundary, and that if the undertakers purchased and retained in situ the coal which they had given notice to take and no other coal, the mine owners, by reason of the undertakers' works and of apprehension of injury therefrom to one seam, could not get more than fifty per cent. of the coal under the reservoir or within twenty yards of its boundary; that a prudent lessee working without right to compensation would be compelled by reason of such apprehension of injury to abstain from working more than fifty per cent. of the coal within the defined area; and that there was no reason to apprehend injury present or future from the undertakers' works to any part of the mines if fifty per cent. of the coal in the defined area were retained in situ.

Held, affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal (20 Q. B. D. 699), that the mine owners were not entitled to claim or to recover compensation for the prospective prevention of the working of more than fifty per cent. of the coal within the defined area; inasmuch as, though the word "land" in section 6 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, includes "mines," the mine owners were not injuriously affected within the meaning of section 6, neither could they at present claim or recover under the mines clauses of that Act, sections 18—27.—Holliday v. The Mayor, &c., of Wakefield, H.L. (E.)—[1891] A. C. 81; 60 L. J. Q. B. 361; 64 L. T. 1.

2. Water supply—Profits from supplying water—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 51, 52.—The commissioners of a township entered into an agreement with a water company to take the water supply for the township from the company. The undertaking of the company was afterwards transferred to the corporation of a borough by a private Act of Parliament, which confirmed and made perpetual the agreement respecting the water supply of the township; and, by subsequent private Acts of Parliament, provision was made for the application of the profits or revenue obtained by the corporation from supplying the water for the benefit of the borough and of the water consumers therein.

Held, that the agreement continued to bind the commissioners to take the water supply for the township from the corporation, and that the commissioners might be restrained by injunction from obtaining the supply elsewhere, and also that the corporation supplied water for their own profit, and were a "water company" within section 52 of the Public Health Act, 1875.—Corporation of Wolverhampton v. Bilston Commissioners, CH.D. NOR., J. 394—[1891] 1 Ch. 315.

See NUISANCE, 2; POOR RATE, 9; STATUTORY POWERS, 2.

WAY.—See EASEMENT, 2.

WILL :—

ADEMPTION—

1. Double portions — Presumption — Legacy to testator's three sons of all testator's shares in a partnership—Gift inter vivos to one son, of two out of the testator's twenty-one shares—Difference in character of gifts—Gift inter vivos in lieu of salary for services rendered — How presumption may be rebutted. — A testator by his will gave to his three sons equally as tenants in common all his shares and interest in a brewery business in which he was the principal partner, being at the date of the will the owner of twenty-one out of twenty-four shares in the business. Between that date and his death he made E. (one of the three sons), a partner, and assigned him two of his twenty-one shares, which were to be in lieu of a salary as manager. The two shares thus given carried with them certain powers which did not attach to those devolving under the will. E., at the time he was so made a partner, had had many years' experience in the business, and was at the time in fact a paid manager of an important branch of the business, and had been pressing for an increase of his salary as such.

Held (reversing the decision of Romer, J., 39 W. R. 299), that, even assuming that the gift inter vivos to E. came within the definition of a "portion," which was doubtful, there was amply sufficient in the circumstances of the case to rebut the presumption that such gift was intended as an advancement pro tanto of the shares given him by the will, and accordingly there was no ademption.

Whether the gift inter vivos to E. was a gift in the way of a "portion," quære.—In re Lacon, Lacon v. Lacon, C.A. 514—[1891] 2 Ch. 482; 60 L. J. Ch. 403; 64 L. T. 429.

CONSTRUCTION—

2. Accumulations — Trust—Settled land—Annuitant — Tenant for life — Surplus income — Capital money — "Improvements" — Improvement of landed estate—Maintaining houses in good habitable repair—Building houses—Thellusson Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98)—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2 (sub-sections 5, 8), 25, 26, 58 (sub-section 5.)—A testator directed his trustees to invest his residuary moneys, together with all accumulations, in the purchase of a landed estate, and that out of the income thereof an annuity should be paid to his nephew for life, and that the surplus income should from time to time during the life of the nephew be expended on the purchase of additional land, "or in the improvement of the landed estate, and in maintaining in good habitable repair houses and tenements on the property," and that on the death of the nephew, his son (if any) should have a life interest in the whole of the landed property, subject to one-third of the yearly rental being expended year by year in improving, keeping up, or extending the estate; with remainder to the male heir of his nephew in succession for ever.

The testator died in 1865. His nephew survived him and had a son, an infant. Shortly after the testator's death an action was commenced for the administration of his estate, and a receiver was appointed. Subsequently the trustees purchased, out of money in court representing the testator's residuary estate, a freehold estate, which was conveyed to them upon the trusts of the will. Under an order made in the action the income of the testator's estate, after keeping down the annuity to the nephew and providing for repairs, was during twenty-one years from the testator's death invested and accumulated. Upon the expiration of the twenty-one years a further order was made directing the receiver, after keeping down the annuity "and maintaining in good habitable repair the houses and tenements on the property," to divide the residue of the income, as from the expiration of the twenty-one years, among the testator's next of kin; whereupon the receiver applied part of the income of the landed estate, after keeping down the nephew's annuity, in repairs and "improvements" on the estate. The question was then raised, on a summons by the next of kin, whether the trust or direction in the will to expend surplus income in improvements was not, though indirectly, a trust or direction for "accumulation" and therefore void, under the Thellusson Act, after the expiration of twenty-one years from the testator's death; and thus, whether the expenditure by the receiver for such purposes was valid.

Held, by Chitty, J., that the trust or direction being in the nature of a discretionary trust to apply, in due course of administration, a portion of the income for the purpose of improving the property, did not fall within the Thellusson Act, and was therefore good; and accordingly the order made on the summons declared "that the trust for improvement and maintenance contained in the will was valid, notwithstanding the expiration of twenty-one years from the testator's death." On appeal, that order was affirmed, but with an addition that the declaration "was not to authorize the application of income to purposes the expense of which ought to be defrayed out of capital"; the trustees thus having power to apply to the court for direction in case of difficulty.

Per Chitty, J.: The distinction between a trust to improve land and to purchase land is well settled: under the former you cannot buy land; under the latter you cannot improve land, although you may build a new house, which is regarded as acquiring land (Drake v. Trefusis, L. R. 10 Ch. 364).

Per the Court of Appeal: All improvements in substance which could in any fair sense be regarded as coming under the words, "maintaining in good habitable repair houses and tenements on the property," are outside the Thellusson Act altogether. Money laid out in building houses on the land would be within the Act.—Vine v. Raleigh, C.A.—[1891] 2 Ch. 13.

3. Annuity—Charge upon corpus—Trustees—Power to mortgage.—A testator bequeathed a pecuniary legacy and a life annuity to his widow, and gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, subject to the payment of the legacy and annuity, to pay the rents and income to his daughter for life, and he directed that, after her death, the estate should be held in trust for his grandchild. He empowered his trustees to continue his business of a brick manufacturer, and to increase or diminish the real or personal estate employed therein at his death.

Held, that the annuity was a first charge upon the corpus of the real and personal estate; and further, that the trustees could not create a paramount charge by mortgaging the real estate to raise moneys for the discharge of debts incurred by them in carrying on the testator's business.—In re Webb, Leedham v. Patchett, CH.D. NOR., J.—63 L. T. 545.

4. Annuity—Gift over on death without "leaving" child.— A testator gave to L. an annuity during her life, payable out of the rents of leaseholds, and directed that after L's death the annuity should be payable to and among such of L's children as, being sons, should attain twenty-one, or, being daughters, should attain that age or marry; and, in the event of the death of L. "without leaving" any such child, then over. L. survived the testator, and had one child only, who attained twenty-one and died in L.'s lifetime.

Held, that the gift over took effect, the annuity being a personal provision for the annuitant and her children.—In re Hemingway, James v. Dawson, CH.D. KAY, J. 4—45 Ch. D. 453; 60 L. J. Ch. 85; 63 L. T. 218.

5. Annuity—Life annuity charged on land—Power of trustees to sell land and purchase Government annuity—Death of annuitant before completion of sale—Right of representatives to value of annuity.—

A testatrix bequeathed life annuities charged on land, and, subject to the annuities, devised the land to trustees on trust for sale. By codicil she empowered the trustees to purchase Government annuities, to be in place of the annuities given by her will, and directed that the purchase-money should be a first charge on the proceeds of sale of the land, and that, upon purchase of the Government annuities, the land should be discharged. The trustees sold the land, and, pursuant to the conditions of sale, a sufficient sum was deposited in a bank for the purchase of the Government annuities, but such annuities were not actually purchased. One of the annuitants died after the date of the contract of sale, but before completion or payment of the purchase-money. Another annuitant died subsequently to completion.

Held, that the representative of the annuitant who died before completion was not entitled to the value of her annuity, but that the representative of the other annuitant was so entitled.—In re Mabbett, Pitman v. Holborrow, CH.D. KEK., J. 537—[1891] 1 Ch. 707; 60 L. J. Ch. 279; 64 L. T. 447.

6. "Children"—Bequest to illegitimate children.—A testatrix by her will dated in 1867 gave to her executors a sum of stock upon trust to pay the income to her niece Martha M. (wife of Walter John M.) during her life, and after her death to pay the same income to the said Walter John M. during his life, and after the death of the survivor to divide the stock between the children of her said niece, the same to be vested interests at twenty-one.

At the date of the will Martha M. had eight children. She had for many years prior to the date of the will lived with Walter John M. as his wife, and all the children were born before her marriage with him, which took place shortly before the date of the will. The testatrix always believed that her niece and her husband were married before they commenced living together, and that the children were legitimate. She always took great interest in the children, and paid their school and other expenses. At the date of the will Martha M. was fifty years of age, and she had not had a child for six years.

Held, that the children were not entitled to the fund.—In re Brown, Penrose v. Manning, CH.D. NOR., J.—63 L. T. 159.

7. "Contents of desk"—Choses in action—Key of strong box—Intention of testator.—A testator gave his desk "with the contents thereof" to his nephew J., he also gave him a legacy of £200, and made him one of his executors and residuary legatees. The desk contained bank notes and coin, a banker's deposit receipt, a cheque to the order of the testator, but unindorsed, divers promissory notes, payable to the testator or order, also unindorsed, a promissory note payable on demand, and the key of a tin box in which some securities were kept. It was admitted that the bank notes and coin passed to the nephew, J., but the residuary legatees contended that the choses in action did not pass.

Held, that by the desk and its "contents" the testator intended to pass all that was found therein at the time of his death, and that the words used were sufficient to pass all the choses in action, including those which were negotiable only after indorsement by the executors.

Held, also, that the key of the security box gave no title to the contents of that box.

Robert v. Kuffin, 2 Atk. 112, discussed and distinguished.

Effect of In re Prater, 37 Ch. D. 481, on the older authorities stated.—In re Robson, Robson v. Hamilton, CH.D. CHI., J.—[1891] 2 Ch. 559; 65 L. T. 173.

8. Conversion—Election.—A testator devised and bequeathed to his trustees all his real and personal estate upon trust to convert such part thereof as should not consist of investments producing interest and invest the proceeds and receive the income of all property, and thereout to pay to his wife an annuity of £104 for her life, and to pay out of the remaining income to his son George such a sum as, in the discretion of his trustees, should be proper and sufficient for his maintenance, but so that he should not have power to mortgage or anticipate the same. After the son's marriage, in the event of there being any issue, the trustees were to apply such part of the income as they might think reasonable in the maintenance and bringing up of such issue. After the death of the wife and son the trustees were to pay and divide the capital of the trust estate unto and amongst such issue equally. The testator's wife died in his lifetime. His son George survived him, and died in 1884, leaving an only child, a son, R. W. S. The testator left real estate. In 1882 an order was made for the administration of the testator's estate. In 1885 an order was made directing an inquiry whether it would be fit and proper and for the benefit of R. W. S. (who was an infant) that any, and what, part of the testator's estate should be retained in the condition in which the same was at the testator's death. R. W. S. died an infant in 1888, before any certificate had been made in answer to the inquiry. After the infant's death the question was raised whether, in the events that had happened, the real estate remaining unsold passed to the infant's heir-at-law or to his legal personal representative.

Held, that the real estate passed to the legal personal representative of the infant as personalty.—In re Wragg, Wragg v. Small, CH.D. NOR., J.—63 L. T. 219.

9. "Death without leaving children"—Life estate—Gift over—Implied gift to children—Residuary gift.—Where in a will there is a gift to A. for life, with a gift over "on the death of A. without leaving children," those words are not, by themselves, without assistance from other parts of the will, sufficient to create a gift by implication to the children.

A testator gave his real and residuary personal estate to his wife and his nephews S. and W. upon trust for his wife during her life; and after her death he gave his real estate to his brother during his life, with remainder, as to three freehold houses, to his (the testator's) nephews S. and W., upon trust to pay the rents and interest to his niece during her life for her separate use; and after the decease of his said niece, "she leaving no child or children," the testator gave one of the three freehold houses to his nephew S., and the other two to his nephew W. And after bequeathing certain legacies, which he directed should be paid out of any residue there might be left, or, if none, then out of the rents of the real estate, the testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to his nephews S. and W. equally. The testator's niece survived his wife and brother, and died leaving two children.

Held, by Kay, J., that the niece took an absolute interest in fee simple in the three houses; but held, on appeal, that she took a life interest only; and that on her death the houses passed under the ultimate residuary gift to the two nephews equally, there being no implied gift to the children of the niece.

The rules of construction laid down in Kinsella v. Caffrey, 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 154, 162, as to implied gifts to children, approved.—In re Rawlin's Trusts, C.A.—45 Ch. D. 299; 59 L. J. Ch. 599; 63 L. T. 655.

10. Description of subject-matter of bequest—Leasehold house and premises—Alteration of, between execution of will and death of testator.—A testator, who died on the 28th of December, 1869, by his will dated the 3rd of August, 1868, made the following bequest: "I give my leasehold house and premises called the Anchor Inn, where I now reside . . . unto my son." The testator made a codicil to his will, dated the 25th of December, 1869, which did not mention this legacy. At the date of the will the Anchor Inn was in course of reconstruction, with the view of separating two rooms from the inn to be let to a tenant who was to occupy them as a shop. The alterations were completed between the date of the will and the death of the testator, and at the latter date were occupied as a shop by a tenant of the testator. Prior to and during the alterations the premises were occupied solely by the testator, who continued up to the date of his death to reside in the inn which had been separated from the shop.

Held, that as the shop was not leased by the testator until after the date of his will, it was included in the terms of the bequest, and so passed to the testator's son.—In re Edwards, Rowland v. Edwards, CH.D. CHI., J.—63 L. T. 481.

11. Discretionary trust—Residue—All or any portion—Maintenance or benefit of legatee—Non-exercise of discretion—Interest of legatee in fund.—A testator devised a share of his residue, subject to a life interest therein, to trustees upon trust "to pay or apply all or any portion of the income or corpus of the same in or towards the support or maintenance, or otherwise for the benefit, of their brother, R. T., in such manner and proportions in every respect, and at such times, as they shall deem most conducive to his welfare." R. T. died during the continuance of the life interest. On the fund subsequently falling into possession, the legal personal representative of R. T. claimed it as part of R. T.'s estate. The trustees had not attempted to deal with the fund while reversionary.

Held, (1) that the trustees had not waived their discretion, or been guilty of default or refusal to exercise it; (2) that no trust could be implied making it their duty to apply the whole fund for R. T.'s benefit, but that they were only bound to apply so much of it as, in their discretion, they thought fit for his personal benefit and welfare; and (3) that, under the circumstances, no transmissible interest in the fund ever vested in R. T. so as to pass to his legal personal representative.

In re Sanderson's Trusts, 5 W. R. 864, 3 K. & J. 497, followed.

Gough v. Bult, 16 Sim. 45, and Gude v. Worthington, 3 De G. & Sm. 389, distinguished.—In re Stanger, Moorsom v. Tate, CH.D. CHI., J. 455—60 L. J. Ch. 326; 64 L. T. 693.

11a. Equitable contingent remainder—Legal estate in mortgagees—Contingent Remainders Act, 1877—Acquisition of legal estate—Intermediate rents—Heir-at-law—Next of kin.—A testator devised freeholds, the legal estate in some of which was outstanding in mortgages, to his son for life, with remainder to such of the children of the son as, being sons, should attain the age of twenty-one, or, being daughters, should attain that age or marry under it; he gave his residuary real and personal estate to his son absolutely. The will was executed before the passing of the Act 40 & 41 Vict. c. 33. The testator died in 1878. In 1888 the son, as tenant for life, sold part of the unincumbered freeholds, and out of the proceeds of sale paid off the mortgages on the incumbered freeholds, which were reconveyed to the uses of the will. Shortly afterwards the son died intestate, leaving three infant sons only surviving him.

Held, that the reconveyance of the mortgaged real estate did not defeat the contingent remainder created by the will.

Held, that the intermediate rents of the freeholds during the suspense of vesting of the remainder went to the estate of the son under the residuary devise as real property.—In re Freme, Freme v. Logan, CH.D. NOR., J. 696—60 L. J. Ch. 562; 65 L. T. 183.

12. Executory devise—Life estate—Contingent remainder—Children who attain twenty-one "before or after the death of the tenant for life"—Powers of maintenance and advancement—No estate in trustees.—Devise, subject to a life estate in E. D., to the use of such child or children of the said E. D. "as, either before or after the death of the said E. D.," should attain the age of twenty-one.

Held, an executory devise.

In re Lechmere and Lloyd, 18 Ch. D. 524, 30 W. R. Dig. 225, and Miles v. Jarvis, 24 Ch. D. 633, 32 W. R. Dig. 231, followed.

Brackenbury v. Gibbons, 2 Ch. D. 417, 24 W. R. Dig. 315, not followed.

The legal effect of powers of maintenance and advancement in cases where the trustees take no estate, explained.—Dean v. Dean, CH.D. CHI., J. 568—60 L. J. Ch. 553; 65 L. T. 65.

13. Forfeiture clause—Annuity—Interfering with management—Frivolous action against trustees.—A testator gave his freehold estate at R. to two trustees in trust to pay certain annuities to the plaintiff during his life, and after his death for the plaintiff's unborn sons in fee; provided always that if the plaintiff should in any way intermeddle or interfere with or attempt to meddle or interfere with the management of the testator's real or personal estate the said annuities should immediately cease. And the testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to his daughter E. A., who was one of the trustees. E. A. entered into possession of the estate at R., and paid the annuities regularly to the plaintiff; but the plaintiff brought an action against the two trustees, alleging that his annuities had not been paid, that E. A. had wasted the estate, and that the buildings were out of repair, and claiming an account, an injunction, and receiver. The court held on the evidence that none of the charges against the trustees were established.

Held, that the action was groundless and frivolous, and was an attempt to interfere with the management of the estate, and that the plaintiff, by bringing the action, had forfeited his annuities.—Adams v. Adams, CH.D. FRY, L.J.—45 Ch. D. 426; 63 L. T. 442.

14. Forfeiture clause — Life estate — "Taken in execution by any process of law"—Receiver—Equitable execution — Contingent remainder — Executory devise.—The testator by his will of the 28th of November, 1870, devised real estate to his son for life, and after his death to all the children of his said son, whether then or thereafter to be born, who should attain twenty-one, or, being a daughter, should marry under that age, as tenants in common. He declared that his said son should not have any power to sell or dispose of his life estate, and, in case his said son should attempt to sell or dispose of the same, or become bankrupt, or the estate should be taken in execution by any process of law for the benefit of any creditor, then he declared that the devise to such son should immediately become void as if such son were then actually dead, and that the estate so devised to him should thenceforth vest in the persons who, under the devises thereinbefore contained, would be next entitled thereto. The testator died in February, 1879; the son took possession; and on the 9th of December, 1887, a receiver was appointed of the rents of the son's estate. At that date one of the son's children had attained twenty-one, two had not attained that age or married, and one was not yet born.

Held, that by the receivership order the son's estate had been taken in execution within the intention of the testator, and that it had ceased.

Held, further, that, in order to carry out the testator's intention, the gift over must be construed, not as a contingent remainder, but as an executory devise, so as to enable all the son's children in existence at the date of the order, or born or to be born thereafter, to share in the property on their attaining twenty-one or marrying.—Blackman v. Fysh, CH.D. KEK., J. 520—64 L. T. 590.

15. Forfeiture clause—Life estate—Determinable life interest—"Payable to or voted in"—Receiving order—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 9, 70.—Testator directed his trustees to pay the income of his residuary estate to his son A. for life, or until he should assign, charge, or otherwise dispose of the said income, or some part thereof, or become bankrupt, "or do or suffer something whereby the said income, if belonging absolutely to him, or some part thereof, would become payable to or vested in some other person," and if such trust should determine, then upon certain trusts in favour of A., his wife and children.

On the 28th of November, 1890, a receiving order was made against A., but no further bankruptcy proceedings, except a meeting of creditors, had been taken. The trustees had retained the income accrued due since the receiving order, on the ground that the gift over had come into operation.

Held, that, since the receiving order, the income was no longer "payable to" A., and that his life interest had consequently determined.—In re Sartoris, Sartoris v. Sartoris, CH.D. CHI., J.—60 L. J. Ch. 634; 64 L. T. 730.

16. Forfeiture clause—Life estate determinable on alienation—Gift over to children—Time for ascertaining class—Right to interim income between cesser and vesting.—A testator left a leasehold interest to his son M. for life, and after his death to his children living at his death, if more than one, share and share alike; and if M. should die without any child him surviving, to the testator's son J. for life, with remainder to J.'s children living at his death. There was a proviso in the will whereby, if either of the sons parted with or mortgaged the interest bequeathed to him, the bequest was revoked and directed to go as provided after his death. The testator appointed his son A. his residuary legatee. After the death of the testator M. executed a mortgage. At the date of the mortgage M. was a bachelor, but he subsequently married and had two children.

Held, (1) that there was a cesser of the estate of M.; (2) that the property devolved as in the event of his death, i.e., to a class consisting of children living at his death; and (3) that there was no disposition of the interim income of the property, which accordingly passed to the residuary legatee. —Donohoe v. Mooney, M.R. (Ir.)—27 L. R. Ir. 26.

17. Forfeiture clause—Life estate to widow determinable in several events—Gift over on those events alone—Practice—Special case—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 34.—A testator gave to trustees all his real and personal estate upon trust to allow his wife to receive the rents and dividends for her life, provided she kept his property in repair and insured the same against fire, and provided further that she remained a widow and did not cohabit with any man; and in case she made default in repairing or insuring the property, or married, or cohabited with any man, then in either of those cases upon trusts in favour of his children. The widow died without having committed any of the acts on which her life estate was determinable.

Held, that the gift over took effect on the determination of the prior estate by death as well as on the other events.

Held, also, that, where the answer to a special case stated under order 34 disposes of the action, the proper course is to take a declaration in the terms of the answer, and stay further proceedings in the action, and that it is unnecessary to set down the action for trial on motion for judgment, as suggested in Harrison v. Cornwall Railway Co., 16 Ch. D. 66, 80.—In re Cane, Ruff v. Sivers, CH.D. KAY, J.—60 L. J. Ch. 36; 63 L. T. 746.

18. Joint tenants—Tenants in common—Words of distribution.—A testator who died in 1826 by his will devised real estate to trustees upon certain trusts during the lives of his children and the survivor of them, and from and after the decease of the survivor, or during the life or lives of all or any, with their concurrence, upon trust to sell and stand possessed of the proceeds upon trust "for all and every my said sons and daughters who shall be then living, and the issue of any then dead (such issue standing in loco parentis), share and share alike." The testator left six children surviving him, the last survivor of whom died in 1877. The property was sold in 1890. Only two of testator's children had issue. Two of testator's grandchildren died before the sale.

Held, that, as the words of distribution, "share and share alike," occurred only once, the issue of each child took as joint tenants inter se.—In re Yates, Bostock v. D'Eyncourt, CH.D. NOR., J. 573—[1891] 3 Ch. 53; 64 L. T. 819.

19. Name and arms clause—Time for compliance—Fine levied by married woman.—A will directed each devisee becoming entitled to the actual possession of the devised lands to take the name and arms of the testator, subject to forfeiture on neglect to do so for the space of one year next after becoming entitled to the possession of the estates. A tenant for life died on April 9, 1888, and on April 9, 1889, the next remainderman took the name and arms of the testator.

Held, that the day of the death of the tenant for life was not to be counted, and that, therefore, the condition was duly complied with.

A fine levied by a married woman of lands acquired by descent, even before entry, is valid, though not made with proclamations. The fine need not show the separate examination of the married woman.—Miller v. Wheatley, Q.B.D. (Ir.)—28 L. R. Ir. 144.

20. Perpetuity—Bequest of annuity for celebration of masses.—A bequest to the clergyman for the time being officiating in the parish of A. at the time of the testator's death, and his successors, of an annuity for fifty years upon trust for the celebration of masses for the repose of the soul of the testator and others, is void as being an attempt to create a perpetuity.

legacy from the expiration of a year after the date of the testator's death, but not from the date of his death.—In re Bignold, Bignold v. Bignold, CH.D. NOR., J. 184—45 Ch. D. 496; 59 L. J. Ch. 737; 63 L. T. 542.

32. Legacy to wife—Priority.—Pecuniary legacy to the testator's wife, to be paid to her within three calendar months after the testator's decease, to enable her to provide and furnish a suitable house and to defray any other expenses.

Held, that the legacy to the wife had no priority over the other legacies, but was liable to abate with them on the estate proving insufficient for payment in full.

Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. sen. 420, followed.

In re Hardy, Wells v. Borwick, 29 W. R. 834, 17 Ch. D. 798, dissented from.—In re Schweder's Estate, Oppenheim v. Schweder, CH.D. CHI., J. 588—[1891] 3 Ch. 44; 60 L. J. Ch. 656; 65 L. T. 64.

REPUBLICATION—

33. Will of married woman during coverture—Death of husband—Subsequent testamentary instrument of widow containing no reference to will—Will and testamentary instrument admitted to probate.—In order that a will may be republished by a subsequent testamentary instrument, that instrument must contain sufficient reference to the will to raise the inference that the testator had in his mind the republication of his will, though no expression of direct intention is absolutely necessary.

By marriage settlement M. S. had a power of appointment over certain freehold messuages and a sum of £2,000 New £3 per Cents., being property comprised in such settlement. By her will, made in 1878, in her husband's lifetime, she exercised this power, and also purported to dispose of all other property over which she had any power of disposition. After her husband's death M. S. executed a testamentary instrument, subsequently admitted to probate with the will, not referring in any way to the will. M. S. died in 1888, possessed of other estate, including the property mentioned in the testamentary instrument, to which she was absolutely entitled, besides the settled property and certain separate estate.

Held, applying the principle of Barnes v. Crowe, 1 Ves. jun. 497, that as the testamentary instrument did not contain anything from which it could be, directly or indirectly, inferred that the testatrix had in her mind the republishing of her will, such instrument did not act as a republication.

Rowley v. Eyton, 2 Mer. 128, explained.—In re Smith, Bilke v. Roper, CH.D. STI., J. 93—45 Ch. D. 632; 60 L. J. Ch. 57; 63 L. T. 448.

See also ACCOUNT STATED; ADMINISTRATION; CHARITY; EXECUTOR; POWER OF APPOINTMENT, 2, 3, 5, 6; PROBATE; TRADE UNION; VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 2.

WITNESS.—See BANKRUPTCY, 24, 33; EVIDENCE; PRACTICE, 59, 60; PROBATE, 14.

"WORKMAN."—See MASTER AND SERVANT, 6, 7.

[THE END.]

Stanford Law Library
3 6105 063 511 542